RECIPROCITY WITH JAMAICA

New Channel Opening Up For Canadian Trade.

THE WEST INDIES A GOOD MARKET.

General Herbert's Return Not Looked For—Hudson Bay Railway Contract Approved—Administration of the Fishery Laws—J. W. Tyrrell Expected to Go to Ellesmere Land for the United States

Ottawa, March 2.—According to advices which reached the Department of Trade and Commerce yesterday, there is a good opportunity for Canada available in opening up trade with Jamaica. The department has received an official copy of the speech with which the Legislature was opened on Feb. 15. It contained this reference to the trade question: "The withdrawal of the Government of the United States from the reciprocal arrangement with this colony, entered into in 1891, and the re-imposition of the duty on sugar leaves us free to restore to our tariff some of the sources of revenue abandoned under that arrangement. A bill will be submitted to you dealing with the subject."

In view of this position of fiscal affairs in Jamaica, it is felt here that the present is a most opportune time for negotiations looking to the conclusion of a reciprocal trade arrangement with the island. The action of the United States Government above referred to has taught Jamaicans a practical lesson as to the instability of United States legislation, a lesson which they are not likely soon to forget, and an experience under which they are smarting.

Another circumstance which enhances our prospects of success is the fact that very shortly the time will have arrived when it will be necessary to renew the Dominion subsidies to the steamship lines now running between Canada and the West Indies, in fact the matter is understood to be presently under consideration by the Government. While the United States is doing nothing to promote international trade, the Government of the Dominion is practically displaying its anxiety to build up commerce with Jamaica. Moreover, it has been suggested that in the event of Canada re-imposing a duty on sugars, reciprocal treatment by Jamaica would enable the Dominion to continue to admit sugars from that island free. In any event, Jamaica sugar is now admitted free into Canada, while it is taxed in the United States.

With the advent of March the Ottawa riflemen begin to think of the shooting season and the days when they will be able to follow their favorite pastime on the Rideau ranges. Just now the question as to who will be commandant of the Bisley team is being discussed in militia circles. It is generally conceded that the prize ought to fall to a Maritime Province man this year, and in this connection the name of Major Markham of the 8th Princess Louise Hussars of New Brunswick is prominently mentioned. It is about settled that Capt. Coulson Mitchell of the 90th Winnipeg Rifles will be the adjutant of this year's team, although Lieut. J. D. Taylor of the British Columbia Garrison Artillery is a Ihot favorite. Lieut. Taylor, besides being a capital shot and secretary of the provincial rifle association, is also a first-class newspaper man.

In this connection it may be stated that under its constitution the Dominion Rifle Association's annual meeting must take place on the third Wednesday after the opening of Parliament. As from present appearances Parliament will not meet for some time, it may be necessary to call a special meeting of the association to make arrangements for the departure of the Bisley team.

In addition to the extension of time until June next, granted to the International Fishery Commissioners for the preparation of their report, as applied to the waters from Lake of the Woods eastward, they have been given one year further in which to report on their work, extending from Lake of the Woods to the Pacific Coast.

A meeting of the Internal Economy Commission of the House of Commons was held to-day, Mr. Speaker White coming from Pembroke to attend it. It is understood that amongst the business transacted was the adoption of a recommendation for the superannuation of Richardson Harris of Annapolis, N.S., keeper of the door of the Commons Chamber, by which Black Rod usually enters to announce His Excellency's presence in the Upper House. Mr. Harris has been stationed at this door for some years, and has been 20 years in the employment of the House of Commons. During the last year or so his health has declined greatly. It is probable that he will be succeeded by Charles Stewart of Stellarton, N.S., one of the most competent and obliging of the present staff of doorkeepers.

A recent writer in The Toronto Globe pitches into the Department of Fisheries for its administration of the fishery laws on the great lakes. It is quite easy to claim a grievance on the part of the fishermen, but according to the records of the department the allegations made by The Globe writer are directly opposed to the testimony of the Canadian fishermen whose interests are involved. The best evidence that the Canadian regulations have served their purpose is shown by the fact that three times within the last six months formal applications from United States hatcheries have been sent to Ottawa asking for permission to obtain spawn on our side. The Sandusky, Ohio, hatchery, it is reported, was closed last year because this request was refused.

The contract which Hugh Sutherland, as president of the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway, recently entered into with the Government has been approved by order in council. It provides for the construction of the railway from Winnipeg to Hudson Bay at the rate of 200 miles per year. One hundred and eighty miles are to be built this year. The details of the arrangement will be made known when Parliament meets.

In this issue of The Canada Gazette the appointment of Hon. Theo. Davie as Chief Justice of British Columbia will be officially announced.

Since the departure of Major-General Herbert for England, his horses have been sold, which is taken to be a pretty good indication that he will not likely return to Canada. Mrs. Herbert expects to follow her husband in about two months. The General's time, it appears, expires in November next, he having been appointed in November, 1890. In militia circles, it is stated that in the event of the usual camps of exercise being held, General Herbert may return to inspect them. Col. Lake's name has been mentioned as General Herbert's successor, but it is said he is ineligible for the present, as he only holds Imperial rank as major, while the Canadian Act says the commanding officer must be a colonel.

The annual meeting of the Royal Military College Club was held here to-day. Several officers from distant points were present. Lieut. F. J. Dixon of Toronto was elected to the presidency; Capt. P. G. Twining, Kingston, and Lieut. H. A. Panet, Quebec, vice-presidents; Capt. E. F. Wurtele, Quebec, secretary-treasurer. The association wound up its reunion by a banquet at the Russell House, at which there were present Hon. Mr. Patterson, Minister of Militia; Col. Powell, Adjutant-General; Col. Panet, Deputy Minister, and other well-known officers connected with the force.

It is quite likely that J. W. Tyrrell, son of Reeve Tyrrell of Weston, will lead the United States exploratory expedition to Ellesmereland for the purpose of tracing the two Swedish naturalists. Prof. Stein of the State's Geological Survey, is pushing the matter, and, if satisfactory financial arrangements can be made, Tyrrell will undertake the long journey early in the summer.

INTERCOLONIAL TARIFFS.

Montreal, March 2.—The Star's special cable from London says: The promoters of the British Pacific Railway, which it is intended to run from Victoria, B.C., via Cariboo, the Yellow Head Pass, Edmonton, and through the Northwest, state that the money to float the scheme on the London market is all secured. And now, they say, they are waiting for the British Columbia Government to fulfil its promises to assist the scheme to the fullest extent of its power. Hon. L. H. Turner, the Minister of Finance of British Columbia, comes to England shortly to make a new British Columbia loan and the promoters expect he will give such pledges of his Government's aid as will enable the British Pacific Company to be put before the public here. The British Pacific Company will reach the seaboard, according to present arrangements through connecting with the much-talked-of and much-criticized Atlantic and Lake Superior route.

It is feared in colonial circles that the question of privilege, which yesterday compelled the Government to withdraw from the Lords the bill to enable Canada and Australia to enter into mutual treaty arrangements, will seriously retard this outcome of the Ottawa Intercolonial Conference. The officials of the House of Commons objected that the bill, which affected the customs duties should begin in the Upper House and declare it must be initiated in the Commons. The Government will introduce the bill into the Comjons, but the business there is very much congested and the prospects for the bill's passage are not bright.

FRANCE'S TRADE WITH CANADA.

French Government Seeking Information How to Increase It.

Paris, March 2.—The French Government has deputed ex-Consul Durand, who served in Quebec, and is now in London, to visit French ports and give information likely to develop France's trade with Canada.

The Bordeaux Chamber of Commerce has published M. Hanotaux's letter asserting that Lord Dufferin, British Ambassador, said he had not yet received powers to exchange ratifications of the Franco-Canadian treaty. M. Hanotaux expressed the opinion that despite this delay, the treaty would soon become operative.

Prince of Wales' Britannia Won

Cannes, France, March 1.—The Mediterranean Yachting Carnival opened here this morning with brilliant sunshine, a fine breeze and other yachting attributes. At 8.30 there was a blue and unclouded sky and the sun beamed upon as attractive an assemblage of people and yachts as has ever been seen in this part of Europe.

At 9 o'clock the Prince of Wales' cutter, Britannia, Mr. F. W. L. Popham's 40-rater Corsair and Count Florio's Valkyrie I., formerly the property of Lard Dunraven, started in the first event, the Prix d'Honneur. The rating was according to the rule of the Union des Yachts Francais. The courses for the two large classes of yachts were from a mark-boat off Cannes to and around the mark-boat off St. Tropez Promontory; from there to and around a mark-boat off St. Maxime and back; total distance about 50 miles.

At 11 o'clock the Britannia had a long lead. The American 10-rater Dakotah, belonging to Mr. Henry Allen, made a clever start, but she was closely followed by the crack French yacht St. Marcial, the property of Vicomte de Rochechouard. All the yachts in the harbor were dressed with flags, and promenaders mustered in strong force along the sea parade. Both ashore and afloat there was the greatest animation and it increased as the morning passed under influence of a glorious day.

The Dakotah won in her class after an exciting race, and the Britannia won in her class by 2 1-2 minutes. Valkyrie I. would have beaten Britannia on time allowance, but she was badly handled at the finish. The Corsair was disabled.

The course was from Cannes to St. Tropez, thence to St. Maxime and back to Cannes. The Britannia, which had the Prince of Wales on board, won the prize. Time, Brittania 9.36, Valkyrie 9.46, Corsair 10.38.

The race for ten-raters was won by H. Allan's Dakotah. The race for 20-raters was won by the Aranella. The sky was clear and there was a strong wind from the southwest.

SIXTY KILLED, FORTY INJURED.

Fearful Railroad Accident Near the City of Mexico.

City of Mexico, March 2.—A special train conveying pilgrims from Amecameca was derailed on a curve in a small cut. Ten cars were completely shattered and splintered. Sixty-five passengers were killed and terribly mutilated, heads and limbs being torn off the bodies in many instances. Forty others were seriously injured. Many of them will die. All of the passengers were Mexicans. The engineer and conductor escaped into the woods after the accident, fearing vengeance from the people.

No U.S. Vessel Sunk by Britain.

Washington, March 2.—The Nicaraguan minister, Dr. Guzman, saw Secretary Gresham just before the Cabinet meeting. He said that he placed no reliance on the Bluefields' story concerning the alleged sinking of an American vessel by a British warship about three weeks ago. The minister had received advices from Home in the meantime, some of them from Bluefields in the last few days and all were of a peaceful character.

The Ever-Busy Canadian Hen.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., March 2.—The shipment of Canadian eggs through this port from Toronto to New York has been so large during the last two days as to be very noticeable. On Wednesday and Thursday, Express Agent McEllven's force handled 425 cases, or 14,250 dozen.

Wholesale Suicide Through Fear.

London, March 2.—A Central News despatch from Che-Foo says that all is quiet there. The wells in the surrounding country are filled with the bodies of women and children, who have heard of the atrocities at Port Arthur, and threw themselves in through fear of the approaching Japanese.

GRIMSBY CHILD MURDER.

Grimsby, March 2.—Luella Lacey, the 14-year-old girl charged with murdering by poisoning the 18-months-old son of Thomas Pearson, has been committed for trial it was proved that the girl was the only person with the child when it got the carbolic acid wh'ch caused its death, and it was established that the child could not have reached the poison and helped itself.

Military Appointments.

Montreal, March 1.—Lieut.-Col. Mattice has been appointed superintendent of stores in Montreal, and Lieut.-Col. Gray, formerly of Toronto, is inspector of stores of the Dominion.

GOVT. HOUSE ABOLISHED.

Manitoba Legislature Passes An Important Motion.

VICE-REGAL SUPPLIES TO CEASE

The Legislature Passes a Resolution That With This Year the Appropriation for the Maintenance of the Lieut Governor's House Will Cease—The $10,000 Salary Must Suffice for Everything.

Winnipeg, March 2.—The Manitoba Legislature yesterday discussed a resolution to appeal to the Dominion Government to abolish the Government House here. For this resolution, however, the following amendment was substituted and carried, with only two dissenting votes: "This House is of opinion that no expenditure should be made on account of the maintenance of Government House, after the incumbency of His Honor the present Lieutenant-Governor, shall be determined by the making of a new appointment to the office, and that in no case should any expenditure be made on the said account after the termination of the year 1895."

This means that the Manitoba Government will contribute nothing in future for the maintenance of Government House. As it costs $5000 nearly to heat and light the place, and as the Governor cannot entertain on less than another $5000, it will be seen that the next Manitoba Governor, on a salary of $10,000, is likely to be out of pocket.

The possible outcome will be that the Governor will abandon the big Government house and take up his abode in a more modest and less expensive private residence.

REFORM MEETING AT LISTOWEL.

Listowel, Ont., March 2.—The Liberals of Listowel and surrounding townships held the first meeting of the campaign yesterday in the Town Hall. The afternoon meeting was attended principally by the yeomanry of the adjoining townships of Wallace, Elma, Grey and Mornington. They were first addressed by Mr. James Grieve, M.P. for North Perth, who talked to them from the standpoint of a farmer. Mr. Grieve though a comparatively inexperienced parliamentarian, having been elected to the riding in 1891, made a very excellent speech, of course denying the efficacy of the National Policy. He will undoubtedly receive the nomination at the Reform convention to be held at Stratford to-morrow. Dr. McDonald, M.P. for East Huron, followed and spoke for over an hour on the questions of the day on the usual Opposition lines. The doctor is one of the Liberal heavyweights, and was well received by the audience. James McMullen, M.P. for North Wellington, made one of his characteristic speeches, censuring the Government at every point and decrying more particularly the National Policy.

The afternoon meeting was adjourned till 8.30 p.m., pending the arrival of Sir Richard Cartwright, who was due to arrive by the evening train from Sarnia. The townspeople with a good sprinkling of farmers, who remained over, filled the hall to overflowing. Mr. Grieve again addressed the audience and was followed by Dr. McDonald. Sir Richard had in the meantime arrived, accompanied by Hon. Thomas Ballantyne, George McPherson and W. M. O'Brien, Stratford. The Knight was received every cordially and delivered a very elaborate address, pointing out ad seriatim the many evils from which the country is suffering, as viewed from a Liberal standpoint. Mr. McMullen, M.P. for North Wellington, closed the meeting with a short speech, dealing with the tariff. The usual cheers for the Queen and Mr. Laurier were given and the preliminary battle in North Perth was over.

TARTE WILL NOT OPPOSE OUIMET.

Rumored Reform Opposition to Sir Donald Smith.

Montreal, Mrach 2.—J. Israel Tarte, the Quebec Liberal organizer, has returned from New Brunswick, where he went to see Premier Blair about funds, it is whispered.

It is announced on his behalf that he will not oppose Hon. J. A. Ouimet in Laval, as his health is not such as to permit of undertaking such an arduous campaign.

The Young Liberal Club is getting its war-paint on and threatens to oppose Sir Donald Smith in St. Antoine division where requisitions are being signed by all parties asking him to stand as a candidate. George Washington Stephens jr., is mentioned as the Reform nominee.

FATHER PARADIS PERSEVERES.

A Definite Statement of His Wants Forwarded the Governments

Montreal, March 2.—Rev. Father Paradis returned to-day from Verner, Ontario, where he intends to plant his Michigan colony. He reports that one farmer near the C.P.R. depot refused $4000 for a 100 acre farm. He has forwarded to Hon. A. S. Hardy, Commissioner of Crown Lands, a long memorial asking for a grant of 75 acres for each settler, and outlining a plan of municipal forestry to be carried out on the waste or rough lands. He has also forwarded a lengthy petition to Sir Mackenzie Bowell from the intending settlers asking free transportation from the C.P.R., from the Ontario Government a free grant of land, the construction of roads and a bonus of $10 per head, aggregating $37,270, to be applied to the purchase of seed grain, provisions, etc., and from the Dominion Government free admission of effects and a similar grant per head, to be applied to building shanties.

A Manitoba Government Witness Discredited

Winnipeg, March 1.—John O'Donohue, a Catholic, was recently elected to the Winnipeg Public School Board. He opposes separate schools and has been sent to Ottawa by the Provincial Government to give evidence on the working of the present Manitoba school law. Last night a mass meeting of Winnipeg Catholics was held, when O'Donohue was repudiated and a resolution discrediting him passed. Resolutions were also passed declaring that the Catholics of Winnipeg were a unit on the question of having their own schools.

West Elgin Conservatives Apathetic

Dutton, Ont., March 2.—The Liberal-Conservatives of West Elgin met in convention yesterday. A motion was put that no Conservative candidate be put in the field. This was voted down by a two-third vote. Those who were against bringing out a candidate left the room and the meeting was brought to a sudden and unexpected termination. No other date was named for bringing out a man and it looks as though the fight would be left between the Liberal and the Patron candidates.

Controller Wood Re Nominated.

Brockville, Ont., March 1.—John F. Wood, Controller of Inland Revenue, was nominated by the Conservatives of Brockville riding yesterday to again be their candidate.

A. R. Dickey, M.P., Has Opposition.

Halifax, N.S., March 1.—At the Liberal convention at Amherst to-day, H. J. Logan, Q.C., was unanimously chosen as the Liberal candidate against A. R. Dickey, M.P., in Cumberland.

Brant Conservatives.

THE WELLS-MURDER TRIAL.

Mrs. Hyams May Be Put On the Stand To-Day

Toronto, March 2.—That the Crown made no empty boast in stating that the strongest evidence in the Hyams murder case was being reserved until the last was proven before the conclusion of the third day's proceedings of the preliminary examination of Harry P. Hyams and Dallas T. Hyams at the Police Court yesterday. The faces of the prisoners brightened considerably when Dr. King stated, under cross-examination, that he believed the boy's death was accidental, and that it was caused by the weight. They fell again, however, when Samuel Rankin, who for five years prior to May, 1892, had used the hoist every day, swore that it would have been an impossibility for the weight to have slipped off the iron hook, which attached it to the rope.

Another point to which the Crown attaches much importance, which developed, was that a few weeks before the tragedy the Hyams Bros. borrowed $2200, giving a chattel mortgage on their household furniture. It was about this period that the insurance premium on the $30,000 policy on the life of Wells was paid by Harry Hyams.

While the evidence of the insurance agents who wrote up the policies on the life of young Wells was more favorable to the defence than was anticipated, indicating as it did that Wells was perfectly cognizant of the large sum which was being placed on his life, the third day's evidence was less favorable to the accused than that of the two preceding sessions of the court. The trial will be resumed this morning, when it is expected the wife of Harry P. Hyams will be called to testify. The skull of the dead boy will also be brought into court, when the surgeons who conducted the post-mortem will give expert testimony. That testimony, the Crown avers, will prove that young Wells was not killed by the weight falling upon his head.

COUNTY CONSTABLES ORGANIZE.

A Plan for Establishing a Provincial Force to Be Submitted to the Ontario Government

Hamiuton, Ont., March 2.—One hundred delegates attended the county constables' convention. Detective Wasson of Toronto, the chairman, explained the origin of the movement for the formation of a provincial association, with the object of securing better facilities for the arrest of criminals and the better remuneration of county constables.

High Constable Johnston of Belleville referred to the necessity of securing the constable protection from blackmailing suits by lawyers on behalf of persons arrested, and said he had himself paid out $300 in costs in such suits, only on of which ever came to trial.

Ex-Chief McKinnon of Hamilton spoke on the necessity of better police protection in the rural districts, where a population of 1,500,000 was virtually without protection against criminals. He proposed the appointment of one chief inspector for the province, one sub-inspector in each group of four or six counties, one high constable in each county, a thorough reorganization of constables, the appointment of inspectors to be made by the Gvoernment, high constables and county constables by the county judge, warden of the county and county crown attorney, the salaries to be paid by the Government and municipalities pro rata, high constables to be paid a salary by the county and also to be paid a stated sum for each day's work when engaged, together with expenses; the chief inspector's office would be the centre of information, where a complete list of names of criminals, their photographs, description and records would be kept.

A committee will submit this plan to the Government.

The associationss of York, Kent and Wentworth were organized into the Ontario Provincial Constabulary, with Thomas Wasson, Toronto, president; William Boyd, Toronto, secretary; D. T. Wilson, Toronto, treasurer.

A Legislative Committee of 15, representing the province from Cornwall west and north was appointed. The committee will be the delegation which will lay the plan of organization before Sir Oliver Mowat and his colleagues, and ask that a competent commissioner be appointed to visit each county, confer with the constables and county officials and make a report to the Government.

The convention was most successful, every county in the province being represented.

The Clyde Blocked With Ice

Glasgow, March 2.—Traffic in the Clyde is completely suspended owing to the vase quantity of moving ice. Eight river passenger steamers were torn from their moorings last night and one of them was sunk. Many landing stages are adrift, and a number of small craft have been crushed and sunk.

Rosebery's Condition Causes Anxiety.

London, March 2.—Lord Roseberry condition is unchanged this evening. The continuance of the insomnia has begun to cause his physicians considerable anxiety. A late despatch from Edinburgh says that Prof. Blackie is worse.

Toronto Markets.

Flour—Trade quiet and prices steady. Straight rollers are quoted at $2.55 to $2.80, according to quality.

Wheat—The market is firm; red sold at 58c west, and white is quoted at 59c to 59 1-2c north, spring nominal at 64c on Midland. Cars of Manitoba hard sold at 81c North Bay, and at 82c to 82 1-2c grinding in transit, Sarnia.

Barley—Trade remains inactive with prices irregular. No. 1 is quoted at 47c to 50c and No. 2 at 45c to 46c.

Oats—The demand is moderate with sales outside at 32 1-2c to 33c for cars of white west, and at 34c on Midland. Cars on track 36c to 36 1-2c.

Peas—The demand is good and prices unchanged, there being sales at 57c both east and west.

Rye—There is little or nothing offering and prices are nominal.

An Economical Woman.

One of the greatest specimens of economy that this age ever developed is the system of handling herdic fares invented by a woman in Washington. She was a familiar figure to the drivers some time ago, but she disppeared. She is said to be doing business now with all her original enthusiasm and success. The modus operandi is very simple. She gets the seat next the fare box and puts her ticket in. Then she waits for customers. When a passenger hands her a ticket she puts it in the box. When a nickel comes along as it does very frequently, she keeps it and puts a ticket in the box. This represents profit of five-sixths of a cent on each transaction and in the course of a trip is certain to pay the expenses of her ride, if it does not realize her quite a substantial gain considering the amount of capital invested and the entire absence of risk.—Kate Field's Washington.

LICENSE LAW REFORM.

Temperance Workers Wait Upon Sir Oliver Mowat.

LESS HOTELS AND SHORTER HOURS

One License for Every 1200 With Bars Shut at Six Is the Request of the Temperance People—Important Recommendation Concerning Fairs—Writ for Haldimand Issued.

Toronto, March 2.—The temperance party have no intention to allow the Ontario Government to sleep in regard to the liquor question. Yesterday Sir Oliver Mowat and his cabinet received a large deputation representing the Methodist Young People's Society of Ontario and Quebec and the Royal Templars of Temperance.

Ald. Lees of Hamilton, in speaking for the latter body, explained that they had come in order to repeat the request made last year. They wanted a reduction in the number of licenses, reduction in the hours of sale and a better enforcement of the existing license law. In the latter connection he pointed out that, whilst in Toronto there was only one saloon for every 1208 of the population, in Hamilton there was one for 650. The present law allowed one license to be issued for every 400 of the population; they asked that the law be so amended as to permit of only one license for every 1200. It had been found that there had been a proportionate reduction in the amount of drunkenness with the reduction in the number of licenses. If the law was amended as suggested they believed the Government would find it much easier to enforce prohibition should they be given the power.

With regard to the reduction in the hours, and they suggested that hotels greatest harm was done in the evening hours, and they suggested that they should be closed at 6 p.m., and not opened until 7 in the morning. If such a law were passed it would do away with half the amount of drinking.

In reference to the enforcement of law, their complaint was that in the courts and elsewhere everything seemed to be on the side of the liquor dealers. Everything was considered from the point of view as to whether it would hurt the liquor dealer or interfere with his business.

They requested that the Government give some attention to these matters, not at all doing away with the promise of prohibition should they have the power, but as an earnest of their intentions.

Dr. Galbraith spoke for the Methodist Society and Rev. Mr. Kettlewell also addressed the Ministers.

Sir Oliver in reply made a long speech, the tenor of which was that, while the question of license legislation at this session had not yet been considered by the Government, he hoped their temperance friends would not think them unreasonable if the Government from their standpoint should consider it advisable to wait for the decision of the Privy Council as to prohibition. The Government was glad that it had been able to do so much for temperance in the past and hoped to do more in the future.

H. Maxey, president of the License Holders Association, Robert Davies, A. Bolte and James Haverson were present during the hearing with a watching brief for the liquor dealers,

It was private members' day at the Legislature, the further debate on the budget being postponed until Tuesday next. As a consequence the session was short and unimportant.

The report of the Striking Committee appointing members to these standing committees: Privileges and elections, railways, public accounts, private bills, and municipal was received and adopted.

Of the bills which were read a first time that of Mr. Richardson, East York, was the most interesting. It is an act taking away from municipalities a right to levy market fees.

A writ for Haldimand was on the motion of the Attorney-General ordered to be issued.

The Government also received yesterday a deputation from the Canadian Association of Fairs and Exhibitions, headed by President C. R. Smith of Hamilton, who asked that the distribution of grants to Agricultural, Arts and to Horticultural Societies should be so arranged as to bear a more accurate relation to the necessities of the several localities; that an inspector of fairs be appointed to report upon the union and abolition of all fairs that had outgrown their usefulness; and that wherever an electoral district agricultural society required a Government grant the County Council in whose jurisdiction such society is located should supplement such grant by a sum of not less than $150 annually. The Government promised to consider the matter.

Notes.

A grant of $1150 has been made by the Government to the widow of J. S. Monahan, the court stenographer who died from injuries sustained in the Weston railway wreck.

Mr. Whitney will on Monday next move for a return of copies of all letters received by the Minister of Education and by other members of the Government since Jan. 1, 1891, recommending persons for positions on the staff of University College and of the School of Practical Science.

Mr. Barr will, on Monday, ask whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce, during the present session, legislation amending the Ontario Game Protection Act, by changing and shortening the open season for deer, and by restricting the use of dogs in deer hunting.

Mr. Howland will ask whether it is the intention of the Government to provide for the temporary renewal of licenses in townships under the Local Option Act, pending the final decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the validity of that Act.

EMILE ZOLA.

The Prince of Realistic Fiction.

Thus looks the master of realism. This is the man who has produced more work, excited more comment, probed more moral anatomies, than any living author. Needing a strengthening stimulant, Zola drinks "Vin Mariani," of which he says that "it is the elixir of life, combating human debility, and giving vigor, health and energy." This is high praise, but it is consonant with what has been said about this great tonic-stimulant, by all the celebrities of the day. "Vin Mariani" is the great nourisher. It strengthens the enfeebled constitution, makes the convalescent strong and well; is very palatable, never produces constipation, but rather aids digestion and assimilation. If you send your name to Lawrence A. Wilson & Co., Montreal, you will receive a little album of portraits of celebrated people, and you will thus learn something, not merely of the celebrated coca stimulant, but of the great people who drink it.

BRANDOLATRY AND LOVERS OF LABELS A THING OF THE PAST.

Judges, lawyers, bankers and merchants of Montreal have visited the Bordeaux Claret Company's cellars, and have pronounced their $3.00 and $4.00 wines, excellent and wonderful value. The cellars contain over twenty thousand dozens of Claret, Burgundy, Sauterne, Ports and Sherries all guaranteed pure and direct from the vineyards of France. Address for price list to the Bordeaux Claret Company, 30 Hospital Street, Montreal.

Charged With Plagiarizing.

The Duke of Argyll is the latest defendant against the charge of wholesale plagiarism. F. W. Bain, head of the college at Poona, a few months ago published a work on economics entitled "The Principles of Wealth Creation." Six months afterwards the Duke of Argyll published "The Unseen Foundations of Society." Bain has now issued a pamphlet in which he declares the Duke's book is "nothing but a rambling amplification of mine. Every feature is borrowed, but spoiled in the borrowing by the necessities of attempting to ineffectually disguise it." The pamphlet contains ten pages of parallel extracts and references in support of the charge. A number of them, if not plagiarisms, are coincidents of a remarkable character. Bain clinches his argument by a challenge. Both books, he says, are incomplete as they stand. He has yet a second volume to write. "How is it," he asks, "that the Duke's mind is so phenomenally like mine that he agrees to a hair with everything I have said? How is it that he has not the faintest suspicion of an agreement, much less a coincidence, with that part of my work which remains unpublished? If the Duke is able let him now produce the second part by himself."—New York Sun.

Imperial Travelling.

The journeys of the Emperor of Germany cost him a great deal of money. According to an article recently published in a German paper over 800,000 marks, or $200,000, were spent on the trip to Italy and Austria undertaken soon after he had ascended the throne. A heavy trunk in charge of a privy councillor on that occasion contained 80 diamond rings, heavy decorations, many of them jewelled; 50 scarfpins, 30 necklaces, with diamond pendants; six handsome sabres, three large photographs of the Emperor and his family, framed in gold, 30 gold watches, and 100 gold cigar-holders with diamond ornaments. The Emperor pays his own expenses when traveling on German railways.

BELLEVILLE, SATURDAY, MAR. 2.

A DIVIDED PARTY.

Cold chills will probably creep up and down Mr. Laurier's backbone, remarks the Independent Toronto Star, when he reads what his colleague of the rueful countenance said in his speech at Amherstburg, and he will feel like crying "save me from my friends."

Sir Richard declines to follow his leader in the latter's latest declaration for a policy of free trade as they have it in England, and clings obstinately to the reciprocity idea. The knight still believes that the United States would grant a reciprocity treaty to a Liberal Administration, and he seems quite willing to discriminate against Britain.

So to-day the position is that the Liberal leader and his colleague who would be Finance Minister, and dictator of the commercial policy if the Reformers were given control of Parliament, are not agreed on their policy. Of course it is rough on the Liberal party, but it is just as well that the people should know where the leaders stand. Canada can scarcely afford to trust its government to a party whose chief men do not agree on the trade question, Eminent chemists have set their seal of approval on Price's Cream Baking Powder, declaring it the most perfect made.

AN UNHOLY ALLIANCE.

Lennox Liberals have withdrawn their candidate and will support the Patron nominee. Welland Patrons will not oppose the Liberal nominee.

The foregoing is from the Canadian Farmers' Sun, which is the official organ of the Patrons' organization, and its accuracy is therefore beyond doubt. And so it goes.

In East Hastings and in North Hastings the Grits and Patrons are in alliance, and the same is the case in North Ontario and other constituencies.

A short time since we charged that the Patron organization is simply a stalking horse to be used by the Grits in an effort to defeat by stratagem a Government which they could not hope to overcome in fair and manly combat and that there is an understanding between leaders Mallory and Laurier. All the facts available go to prove that such is the case, and we warn Conservatives against becoming the tools of such an unholy alliance.

A SHARP HIT.

That was a sharp hit which Mr. Ewart, Q.C., made at Mr. Dalton McCarthy, M.P., when they, as counsel for the Roman Catholics and for the Provincial Government of Manitoba, respectively, were discussing the question of a postponement of the appeal in the school question before the Privy Council. Said Mr. Ewart:

> Nor can they urge that it is necessary for the proper presentation of the case that the Attorney-General should be here, since they have employed a gentleman who has been instructing the people of Canada what should be done in this matter for the last two years, and is therefore qualified to present such arguments as are desired.

That the shot struck home is evidenced by the fact that, clever and quick-witted as he is, Mr. McCarthy had no better reply to offer than this:

> What Mr. Sifton desires to do is to show that the Council ought not to interfere. To do that requires a more minute knowledge of the old system than it would be possible in the time I have at my disposal to acquire. I am not going to enter into personalities; I hope they will be kept out of this matter; I am here as counsel for the Government of the Province. What I feel I lack is not a knowledge of the legal questions, but the practical bearings of the old system, as contrasted with the working of the present system, because it is a matter affecting the province, and affecting the province only.

And yet, despite his self-confessed lack of knowledge, Mr. McCarthy has, as Mr. Ewart points out, been, for the past two years, instructing the people of Canada as to their duty in the premises.

Chambers' Journal.

When eyes are bright with hope, the skies are blue,
The seas are mother-o'-pearl, the world is fair;
And fairies dwell in flower bells everywhere.

When eyes are dim with tears, the skies are grey,
The seas are foaming floods, the world is cold;
Sad mists creep down and shadow all the way,
And every face we meet seems strangely old.

But when the eyes are closed to outward sights
In sleeps dear dreamland, glories meet their gaze;
Visions of hope-filled noons and love-filled nights,
Of light eye radiant, made of rainbow rays.

Then, when they look within, the realms of thought
Lie all outspread—what has been, what shall be;
Mountain and plain into right focus brought,
"The unseen," say you? Nay, what we best see!

The inward sight is true, and clear, and strong;
Age dims it not; no blindness comes with tears;
For time is short, eternity is long,
And souls are made for aeons, not for years.

THE BELLE OF THE EVENING.

Her Lovely Pink Silk Dress.

A few weeks ago a ball was given in a flourishing Ontario town. Youth and beauty were fully represented and many of the ladies wore charming costumes. The belle of the evening was a young lady of twenty years; she was the personification of grace and beauty, and won the admiration of all who were present.

Her brother, an intimate friend of the writer, told the following secret: "My sister looked charmingly beautiful at Mrs. Y—'s ball last evening. From what I had heard about her ball dress at home., I fully expected chagrin and disappointment as far as I was concerned, because I understood she was to wear a dress that had been dyed with Diamond Dyes.

For some time she had worn a cream silk, but it had become somewhat soiled, so mother and sister determined to dye it a light shade of pink, and I fully expected a failure.

Before going to the ball I was called to see my sister in her new dress, and I could hardly believe it was the old dress re-dyed. The lovely light pink was a marvellously rich shade, and the whole costume so becoming that I was fairly delighted. Young and old at the ball were charmed with sister's good taste, but of course they had no idea that Diamond Dyes played so important a part in the success of the costume."

MORAL.—When you re-dye any valuable material always use the Diamond Dyes, if you wish success; they never fail to give good results.

A SPOT WHERE PIRATES ARE SAID TO HAVE BURIED TREASURES.

A Pit on a Nova Scotia Islet That is Thought to Hold Treasures of Captain Kidd—A Company Has Secured a Lease of the Island to Explore.

Much fiction has been written concerning great sums of money and vast quantities of jewels buried by pirates some 200 years ago somewhere along the Atlantic coast. But the following account of buried treasure has to do only with facts as stated by men now living and who had a hand in them, or as told by men now dead: That a shaft about thirteen feet in diameter and 100 feet deep was sunk on Oak Island, in Mahone Bay, Nova Scotia, before the memory of any now living; that this shaft was connected by an underground tunnel with the open ocean, about 365 feet distant; that at the bottom of this shaft were placed large wooden boxes, in which were precious metals and jewels; that many attempts have been made, without success, to obtain this treasure; that it is reasonably certain the treasure is large, because so great a trouble would never have been taken to conceal any small sum; that it is now entirely feasible to explore this shaft and recover the treasure still located therein.

Oak Island is situated near the head of Mahone Bay, Nova Scotia. A narrow channel separates it from the mainland at that point known as the Western Shore and four miles from the town of Chester. The island is about a mile in length and half a mile broad. The formation is a very hard rough clay. The eastern end was originally covered with oak timber, several grooves of which still remain. At the close of the last century this part of the country was very sparsely populated, and the island in question was without an inhabitant.

In 1785 three men—Smith, McGinnis and Vaughn—visited the island, and while rambling over the eastern part of it came to a spot of which the unusual and strange conditions at once engaged their attention. Mr. Vaughn himself, who was only a lad of 14 at this time, subsequently related these facts to Robert Creelman, who still lives at Upper Stewiacks, N.S., and who was afterward the manager of a company formed to recover the treasure. It had every appearance of having been cleared many years before. Red clover and other plants foreign to the soil where growing. Near the center stood a large oak tree with marks and figures on the trunk. One of the lower and larger branches of this had been sawed off, and projected directly over the center of a deep circular depression in the land about thirteen feet in diameter. These and other "signs" shortly after led the three men named to commence work. After digging a few feet they found that they were working in a well-defined shaft, the walls of which were so hard and solid that in some places old pick marks could be seen, and within these walls the earth was so loose that picks were not required. On reaching a depth of ten feet they came to a covering of oak plank. They kept on digging until a depth of thirty feet was reached, finding marks at each ten feet. Here the work proved too heavy for them, and owing to the fact that superstitious beliefs were in full force in that part of the country they were unable to get help and were forced to abandon it.

After seven years Dr. Gynds, of Truro, visited the island, interviewed the three men, and on his return to Truro organized a company. Among those interested at that time were Col. Robert Archibald, Sheriff Harris and Capt. David Archibald. They made an excavation to the depth of ninety-five feet, marks being found every ten feet. The ninety-foot mark was a flat stone about three feet long and sixteen inches wide. On it marks or characters had been cut. Afterward it was placed in the jamb of a fireplace in Mr. Smith's house, and while there was viewed by thousands of people. Many years afterward it was taken out of the chimney and taken to Halifax to have, if possible, the characters deciphered. One expert gave his reading of the inscription as follows: "Ten feet below are £2,000,000 buried."

It was Saturday night when they reached the depth of ninety-five feet, and when they returned Monday morning the shaft was found to be full of water within twenty-five or thirty feet from the top. They tried bailing it out, but the task proved utterly hopeless. They then sank a new shaft a few feet from the old or money pit and went to a depth of 110 feet, and then they began to tunnel under, when suddenly the water burst in upon them and they escaped with their lives and a fine drenching. This disaster practically ended the operation of this company.

In 1849 a second attempt was made, Dr. Gynds and Mr. Vaughn were still alive and gave much valuable information. They sunk a shaft on the site of the old money pit, which had been filled up, and struck water at eighty-six feet. They, also, tried bailing it out and were forced to abandon it. Shortly after men with boring apparatus of a very primitive description were sent to the island. J. B. McCully, of Truro, who is still living and tells these facts, was manager. A platform was rigged in the money pit thirty feet below the surface and just above the water. A platform was struck at ninety-nine feet. After going through five inches of spruce the auger dropped twelve inches, then through four inches of oak, then it went through twenty-two inches of metal in pieces, but the auger failed to take any of it in except three links resembling an ancient watch chain. It then went through eight inches of oak, supposed to be the bottom of one chest and the top of the next; then twenty-two inches of metal, as before; then four inches of oak and six inches of spruce; then into clay seven feet without striking anything else. In the next boring they struck the platform at ninety-eight feet; then a fall of eighteen inches, when the auger came in contact with, as supposed, the side of the cask, as the auger, revolving close to the side of the cask, gave a jerky and irregular motion. The auger brought up several splinters of oak and a brown, fibrous substance like the husk of a cocoanut.

Nothing more was done until 1850 when a new shaft was sunk ten feet from the money pit to a depth of 109 feet, and while tunnelling to the money pit the water burst in and they fled for their lives, and in twenty minutes there was forty-five feet of water in the new pit. At this time they made the discovery that the water was salt and rose and fell with the tides. The ideal of an artificial channel suggested itself and they searched the shore, and, building a coffer dam at a suspicious spot, they found the sand and beach gravel replaced by rocks, and on removing them they found five well-constructed drains converging into one main channel. A high tide carried the dam away, and they went in some distance from the shore to sink a shaft and strike the channel, as they could not afford to rebuild the dam. The first pit missed the channel, but on digging the second one they encountered a large boulder at the depth of thirty-five feet, which, when pried up, was followed by a rush of water which filled the pit to tide level. They tried driving spiles, but as the appliances at hand were very crude the effort was a failure. Shortly after another shaft was sunk on the south side of the money pit to the depth of 118 feet, and they tunnelled directly under the money pit, and while at dinner a tremendous crash was heard. Rushing back, they found that the bottom of the money pit had fallen into the new shaft, and thus another failure was added to the rest. A syndicate of Halifax capitalists, combined with the old company, and another attempt was made and another failure scored.

And now a Boston company has secured a lease of the island, and they intend to bring in the aid of scientific apparatus. A skilled engineer has surveyed it, and pronounces the task an easy one. It looks as if the buried treasure of Capt. Kidd or some other sea robber was soon to be brought to light to enrich the treasure seekers of this nineteenth century.—Chicago Times.

CANADIAN MUTTON.

The Supply in This City Large This Year and the Quality Fine.

This has been one of the best winters for game that the city has known a long time. The supply of everything in the game line, except, perhaps, venison and bear meat, from rabbits and pigeons up to canvasbacks and terrapin, has been overflowing and steady. It is a pleasure and a delight for the man who knows a good thing when he sees it and has the money to pay for it, to visit the market, shops and fish stalls. It is noticeable, too, that each year the dealers show improved taste in displaying their wares and the skill which makes the good liver's mouth water is amply repaid by increased sales.

But it is not alone in game that the city markets are attractive. There never was a year in which better beef and mutton were offered. As for mutton, there has come into the markets meat of a quality which need ask no favors from even the daintest or most highly prized of the game. This is known as the Canadian mutton—"lamb" it is usually called by butchers who knows that thereby they are able to sell good, nutritious meat to people who do not know that lamb, the genuine article, is, necessarily, innutritious and flavorless, and has only the one recommendation that it is tender This Canadian mutton has never been surpassed or even equalled in this country except by the mountain mutton from the Alleghanies in Maryland, West Virginia, and western Pennsylvania, the South Downs of Kentucky, and, most surprising of all, the sheep that grow so rich and fat on the alluvial lands of the lower Mississippi, where, maybe, the oranges help to give them flavor.

And it seems strange, too, that with all its superiority this Canadian mutton may be bought for a smaller price than is asked for the skinny, immature, tasteless native lamb which comes from regions near the city. It was partly through a very lively competition that the people up Harlem way have been revelling in Canadian mutton chops fit to grace the table of a king, at prices running from 14 to 18, at the very outside 20 cents a pound. At the same time those who were without understanding were paying 22 to 25 cents a pound for the skinny, soggy things they called lamb chops. The flavor of the Canadian mutton is something to dream over, and it would be interesting to know what the sheep have been fed and fattened on. The mountaineers say that the Maryland, West Virginia and western Pennsylvania mutton gets its delicious flavor from the shoots of spicy shrubs and the rich mast of the hills; the Louisianian will talk to you about the merits of oranges and sugar cane, and the Kentuckian sums it all up in the phrase, "Blue grass, sah!"

Still, while it is easy for almost any man to buy Canadian mutton, it is not everyone who is certain to get the best. It is not every man who knows that unless the sheep be very fat his mutton will be without flavor; still fewer know that flavor only comes with age—that it may not be expected in lamb. Then, it is worth knowing that mutton is not necessarily tough, or that if it should happen to be so, the increased flavor which comes with age more than compensates for the jaw power expended in chewing it. Nor will the buyer who really knows what he wants permit the super-serviceable dealer to "French" his chops, for he knows that the most delicious morsel after all is the thin strip of lean furthest from the point where the chop was joined to the backbone. So that if you get a Canadian mutton chop from a good, fat sheep which has been killed not less than ten days (and two weeks would be better, if the carcase has been carefully kept in a cool place), cut not less than an inch thick and fat to the end of the rib, you may be sure that, if broiled till in the centre a healthy red just shows—no more—your boiled Leghorn egg, your toast, and your cup of coffee will furnish you a breakfast which the richest man on earth could not improve upon.—New York Sun.

The Cigarette Vice.

The use of cigarettes is not merely the use of tobacco, it is a vice by itself. In reformatories where the cure of the opium, alcohol and cigarette habits is a business, cigarette patients are not restricted from smoking cigars or pipes, which are regarded as comparatively harmless. The cigarette works a special evil of its own which tobacco in other forms does not effect. This evil result may be due to drugs, or to the paper wrappers, or to the fact that the smoke of cigarettes is almost always inhaled into the lungs, while cigar smoke is not. As to that, let the experts decide; about the fact of the effect there is no doubt, and no dearth of evidence. No other form of tobacco eats into the will as cigarettes do. The adult man can carry off a good deal of poison of one kind or another without disaster, and his duties being fixed and his will formed, he is usually able to make his minor vices subservient to his more important obligations. And so it happens that it is a matter of constant observation in clubs, and wherever there are intelligent men who allow themselves all the creature indulgences that they dare, that these experienced persons are constantly "swearing off" cigarettes for longer or shorter periods, and smoking cigars instead. The cigarette fetter begins to gall, and they fling it off. But young boys do not do that. They have not discretion enough, for one thing, and, for another, cigars cost too much for them, and cannot be smoked surreptitiously in a spare moment. It is the infernal cheapness of the cigarette and its adaptability for concealment that tempt this schoolboy's callow intelligence.—Harper's Weekly.

Thackeray's Widow.

The insanity of Thackeray's widow, who died recently, was but a faint impression on the public mind. It must have surprised many to hear that the afflicted lady had lived so long. Hers was a very sad story. The great novelist loved her devotedly, and when a few short years after their marriage the clouds of insanity began to gather round her intellect he refused to believe that it was more than a passing affection. When their parting became necessary the husband almost gave way and this sadness ever afterwards remained upon him, although it must have been lightened by the children born of the union—Anne, Jane and Harriet. Two of them who are still living, Mrs. Richie and Mrs. Leslie Stephen, are foremost among the brilliant women of the day. But Thackeray never forgot his wife, he constantly visited her, and in his ballad of Bonillabaisse makes a sobbing reference to her:

"Ah me how quick the days are flitting,
I mind me of a time that's gone,
When here I'd sit as now I'm sitting
In this same place—but not alone.
A fair young form was nestled near me,
A dear, dear face looked fondly up
And sweetly spoke and smiled to cheer me—
There's no one now to share my cup."

SOME CURIOUS WAGERS.

Eccentric Bets Made and Won by Prominent Men in Old London.

So far as we can go back into the world's history, we find the rage for making wagers prevalent. The Romans had a great inclination for betting, and they had a conventional form of ratifying their contracts, which consisted in taking from their finger the ring, which the higher classes invariably wore, and giving it to the keeping of some third party. In the old days some very extraordinary bets were made. Thos. Hodgson and Samuel Whitehead wagered in the Castle yard, York, as to which should assume the most original character. Umpires were selected, whose duty it was to decide upon the comparative absurdity of the costumes in which the two gentlemen appeared. On the appointed day Hodgson came before the umpires decorated with bank notes of various value on his coat and waistcoat, a row of 5-guinea notes and a long netted purse of gold around his head, while a piece of paper bearing the words "John Bull" was attached to his back. Whitehead was dressed like a woman on one side, one-half of his face was painted and he wore a silk stocking and slipper on one leg. The other half of his face was blackened to resemble that of a negro; on the corresponding side of the body he wore a gaudy long-tailed linen coat, and his leg was cased with leather breeches, with a boot and spur. Much to the astonishment of the crowd, the stakes were awarded to "John Bull."

The Duke of Queensbury laid a singular wager with Sir Charles Bunbury about the end of the last century. The former was to produce a man who was to walk from his grace's house in Piccadilly (London) to the 10-mile stone, beyond Hounslow in the space of three hours, advancing four steps and at every fourth step retiring one step backward. The bet was for $1,000. Most probably the Duke of Queensbury had borrowed the hint from a circumstance recorded in the history of Catherine Medicis. This celebrated and beautiful queen made a vow that if an enterprise of consequence in which she would send a pilgrim to Jerusalem, traveling on foot in the manner described. Having succeeded in her first point, it remained to discover a man with vigor and patience enough to undertake the journey. A citizen of Veiberris, Picardy, presented himself and promised most scrupulously to accomplish the vow. He fulfilled his engagement with great precision, of which the queen was well assured by those whom she had appointed to travel by his side and watch his motions.

There was a notorious gambler at the end of the last century who ruined himself finally by a very extraordinary bet. He had been playing with Lord Lorne; their stakes had been very high, and luck had gone steadily against him. Exasperated at his losses, he jumped up from the card table, and, seizing a large punch bowl, said, "For once I'll have a bet when I've got a chance of winning! Odd or even for 15,000 guineas?" "Odd," replied the peer, calmly. The bowl was dashed against the wall and on the pieces being counted there proved to be an odd one.

The rash gambler paid his 15,000 guineas, but if tradition be correct, it was only by selling the last of his estates that he was enabled to do so.

Another curious wager was that of two gentlemen who were settling their account at a hotel. One of them drew out of his pocket a lot of bank notes, which induced a gentleman standing by to exclaim that he wished he had as many as he could carry in £10 notes—"as much as the national debt amounts to." Upon which the other gentleman offered to lay him a wager of £50 that he and nine more of the strongest men that he could get could not carry the amount of the national debt a distance of one mile without pitching. The wager was immediately accepted, and a calculation took place, when it was found that 512 bank notes weighed one pound. This divided among 100 people, each would have to carry 417 pounds 6 ounces. The money was paid without recourse to a trial.

Here is a record of another wager: A member of parliament bet a gentleman well known on the turf that a man should go from London to Edinburgh in any mode he chose while another made a million of dots with a pen and ink upon writing paper.

Eating and drinking have at all times been the subject of bets and we hear of a courier, by name Aristocratic Tom, of the Old Lion, London, for the trifling bet of one shilling undertook to drink three gills of lamp oil of the most rancid and nauseous quality that could be procured, which he performed with as much gusto and relish as if it had been the most delicious cordial. The money he had won was immediately converted into strong beer, which with a penny loaf soaked in another portion of oil, he likewise swallowed. About two hours after this repast for another wager he swallowed twenty eggs with the shells in twenty minutes, but the last having a young chicken in it he complained it spoiled his stomach. Feats of strength, too have been a fruitful source of wagering. In 1792 a wager for $50 was made between a Mr. Hopkins and a Mr. Dalton. that the latter could not carry 500 sacks of flour weighing twenty stone twenty yards in twelve hours. Mr. Dalton began the undertaking, but there not being a sufficient number of sacks in the town he used but one weighing twenty stone eight pounds, which he carried 250 times each way twenty-one yards, and notwithstanding he carried above the weight and the distance one yard more than agreed upon, the feat was performed with great ease in seven hours and twenty-five minutes, --Chicago Tribune.

Chosen Out of 75.

The success of the graduates of Ontario Business College in securing positions against competitors in a wide field, has another illustration in the experience of Mr. H. A. B. Kennedy, now book-keeper and stenographer for the G. S. Blodgett Co., Burlington, Vermont. Mr. Kennedy writes this week to Messrs. Robinson & Johnson, that he was chosen out of 75 applicants, on account of the superior excellence of the penmanship in his letter of application, and the recommendation of Ontario Business College. He stepped directly from the College into this position. Similar reports of success are coming constantly from the graduates.

County Constables' Association.

At the County Constables' Association held at Hamilton yesterday, High Constable Johnson, of this city, referred especially to the necessity of securing the constables' protection from blackmailing suits by lawyers on behalf of persons arrested. "I have myself paid out $300 in costs," he said, "to meet suits brought in this way, which the plaintiffs never intended to go into court. The object of the lawyers is simply to enable the discharged prisoner to get square, and incidentally to make some costs themselves."

AN AWFUL TRAGEDY.

Three Men Shot in the Montreal Cotton Company's Office at Valleyfield

TWO KILLED ON THE SPOT.

The Third is in a Very Critical Condition and May Die.

THE MURDERER ARRESTED

VALLEYFIELD, Que., March 2.—Paymaster Low, of the Montreal Cotton Co., with two assistants, J. Lay and Hugh Wilson, was making up the employes' pay last night, when Mr. Shortis, lately Private Secretary to the Manager of the mill, entered the office and picking up Mr. Lowe's revolver shot Wilson in the side, and then fired at Lay, killing him instantly.

Low, seeing the murderer's object, caught up the pay leaves and ran into the vault, pulling the door after him.

Maxime Leboeuf, the night watchman, coming in at this juncture, Shortis shot him dead.

The murderer attempted to enter the vault and while thus engaged a couple of the mill firemen rushed in and overpowered him.

The business is at present on a satisfactory financial footing, and it will require a large sum to purchase it.

Our $10 Suits.

You have probably noticed that the Oak Hall advertise $5, $6, $7 and $8 suits very often. Now we certainly have splendid value at these low prices, but our $10 suits are the beauties. The suits we have already received for spring are away ahead in value of anything we have ever shown. Don't lose sight of our $10 suits.

PHILANTHROPY AND ITS RESULTS.

One of the most charming features of the human character is the willingness to help others. The daily denial of self, in the endeavor to render some benefit to those in need, is indeed a Christian-like act, which in addition to cheering the poor and destitute, at the same time adorns and beautifies the life of the person who so denies himself.

The old adage 'whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well' was amply proven by the large audience that gathered in the Belleville Business College auditorium last evening to listen to the concert given by the Literary Assembly of that institution for the benefit of the poor of the city.

Rev. Mr. Marshall was chairman, the duties of which he performed very acceptably and in a few very appropriate remarks pointed out how the college had prospered and grown in its six or seven years' career, and the harmony of its young men, who came from all over the continent, with those of the city and of their banding themselves to carry out their philanthropic motives.

The programme was paramount, it being composed of the Riggs' orchestra, Mr. J. McIntosh, Miss Kenyon, Mr. Leo Riggs, Mr. Milburn, Mrs. Eva Rose York, Mr. W. S. Lalonde, Mr. Moon, Misses Falconer and Graham, Mr. J. N. Doyle, Miss Mabel Millan, Miss Price, Miss Garratt, Misses Smith and Fretz, Mr. Lester, Prof. Canfield and Mr. Eaton.

The receipts at the door amounted to $95.10. Mr. W. C. Mikel, taking the place of the good Samaritan, said he would give the $4.90, making the receipts an even $100.

The object of this society is a commendable one, and the citizens at large appreciate their efforts by placing at their disposal their time and talent, and we may say, charity when rightly given has a tendency to benefit the donor himself. Charity, too, apart from the acceptance with which it meets, has its own special reward, for the thanks and gratitude which a man has bestowed upon him in return, more than repay the gift.

The assembly are to be congratulated on the high order of their programme, and our sincere wish is that they will always meet with the same encouragement that they were accorded last evening.

Even in this skeptical age the perfect purity of Dr. Price's Baking Powder has never been questioned.

An Unexpected Death.

Many of our readers were startled this morning by the news that Mrs. T. S. Clark was alarmingly ill, and now that we have to announce her death will scarce believe that the sad intelligence is true. She has been ill for some time, but the buoyancy of her nature and her cheerfulness when spoken to about it, led her friends to hope that she would outlive her ailment. The immediate cause of her death was] pleurisy. She had been unconscious since yesterday, and died at one o'clock this afternoon. The deceased's maiden name was Susan Chambers. She was the daughter of James Chambers, Esq., who was a merchant in Cork, Ireland, where Mrs. Clark was born, on the 8th of April, 1854. When she was a girl the family emigrated to Canada and settled in Montreal, and in that city she was married to Mr. Clark nineteen years ago. They shortly after moved to Toronto and have lived in Belleville nearly fifteen years. Mrs. Clark has been from girlhood a member of the Methodist Church, and was characterized by the practicalness of the religion. Was anyone sick, no hands were more ready than hers to tend them, and her heart beat response to every call of charity. She has been for years a member of Bridge St. Methodist Church choir, she was constantly seconding Mr. Clark's work for and with young men, and was ever ready to make welcome to her home and cater for the numerous young men who form his class in Bridge st. Sunday school. Three children to-day mourn the loss of a most affectionate mother, and they, with Mr. Clark, will have the sympathy of the community in a loss so great. The funeral is to take place on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Service at the house at 3:30.

She's a Bird.

The Boxer, one of Britain's torpedo boats, recently ran 100.6 miles in 3 hours. During part of the trip she ran at a speed of 30.35 knots (nearly 35 miles) an hour. The last six of these vessels built have been the fastest in the world.

A Sad Case.

David Bresnahan, Monteagle, aged 27 years, a strong and hardy young man, was found dead in his bed last Saturday. The circumstances of the case may never become fully known, as he was unmarried and alone. An examination by Dr. Green, of this place, shows that death may have resulted several days' previous, from a blow on the top of the head, caused a depression of the skull, evidently by a falling limb of a tree where he had been working.—Bancroft Times.

A Clergyman's Complaint.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INTELLIGENCER.

124, St. Denis st.,
MONTREAL, Feb. 28th, '95.

SIR,—I am a clergyman of the Diocese of Ontario, having been incumbent of Parham up to the 31st of December last.

This mission of Parham, with its several stations, has been occupied by clergymen at intervals for the past twenty years, yet there have been only two or three confirmations in all this time, and of these one was by another bishop. The Rural Dean, who should attend to these matters, utterly neglects them, nor is any provision whatever made for the raising of stipend by the people, though this also is part of the Rural Dean's duty.

I held the mission, first as a layman and after for one year as a Deacon. At my own request and according to the rules of the diocese, a priest, C. J. Hutton, of Sharbot Lake, now of Christ Church, Belleville, was appointed as my spiritual adviser.

I was ordered to get a horse and rig immediately. As my income from the Board was only $300 per annum and as I could not depend upon getting more than another $100 from the people, I did not see how I could pay for these things and meet my personal expenses as well out of a maximum salary of $400. The Canons of the diocese state that $600 is the minimum salary of a Deacon and $800 with residence the minimum salary of a priest. This Canon was quoted by Hutton in my presence. I was ordered to hold three services per Sunday and to reside in a part of the mission where there were scarcely any church people. It was impossible to hire, so I had to buy a horse and rig and pay for keep of horse, fodder being more expensive than in Kingston, and all to come out of less than $400. I received no less than three threatening letters from the Archbishop, and all because I was doing the very thing I had been sent to do, attending to the spiritual needs of those who really belonged to the church. The first six months I did all my duty on foot, walking sometimes 18 miles and holding three services the same Sunday. In spite of all hindrances on the part of those who should have been my helpers, I did (as shown by my statistics in Journal for 1894) remarkably well. I baptised 25 persons in one year, my two predecessors having baptised 14 in two years. My other statistics were in proportion.

C. J. Hutton having promised to canvass the mission on my behalf, I incurred the necessary expenses. When I had been nearly a year in the mission, having received little more than $300 from all sources, I called on C. J. Hutton to keep his promise to canvass the mission for me, or else I should resign it, as my creditors were pressing me. He, taking offence at the tone of my letters, came, telling the people he was there to help me, when really he came to do me injury. He called on those (there were only two families) said to be unfriendly to me. He would not allow me to go with him to hear what they said. On the strength of reports received from two families only he reported the mission as disaffected and not desiring my services, so the Archbishop told me. But His Grace would listen to no explanation, I, on going at summons of the Archbishop's Chaplain, was not only refused priest's orders, but dismissed from employment at two weeks' notice; leaving me without the means of paying debts incurred for the horse and rig. Distrusting Mr. Hutton's professions of friendship, I had secured work in the diocese of Albany. But this too I have lost through Bishop Doane having received an unfavorable report from our Archbishop.

I have written repeatedly to the authorities of the diocese asking for a trial and to be confronted with Mr. Hutton, but they are too much afraid of the Archbishop to do me justice. I may say that I hold "Letters Demissory" signed by the Archbishop, stating that I leave the diocese of my own free will, (which is false) and that I am in good standing, which is true.

The Rural Dean (Mr. Carey) came to Parham, where he had not been for years, to force me to take these letters under threat of immediate inhibition; stating that if I did not take them the Archbishop would telegraph to each station warning people that I was under censure, which I was not. I then accepted the letters, Mr. Carey afterwards telling me that the Archbishop wished him to take me as curate, "pro tem." But he said he could pay me no stipend. So, here I am, in debt, without employment and refused redress.

I would like to know what the churchmen of the diocese think of this matter. I may add that similar iniquities are continually being perpetrated. I may add that Mr. Carey, after forcing me to take "Letters Demissory" was very glad to avail himself of my services at his own church. I also, at his request, took service at Parham in the absence of the present incumbent, who, by the way, has also been victimised, for Mr. Hutton had reported that the mission could raise $300 or $350 and he finds it can scarcely raised $150. I may add that Sharbot Lake, with a church population of 523, only raised $235 for Mr. Hutton. But being a favored mission, it received an extra grant of $100, which had been deducted from the grant of Parham. It is but fair to state that there were some grounds for refusing me Priest's orders, as I had not sent in the necessary thesis and written sermon. But there was no excuse for dismissing me from the diocese and leaving me to pay obligations which I had been forced to incur.

A former incumbent of Parham was forced to resign through an injurious report circulated by a brother clergyman, the people of Parham being persuaded to sign a petition whose purpose they did not understand.

Is it any wonder the church goes behind in some districts?

Yours truly,
JOHN B. PYKE.

Exhaustive analysis fails to reveal the slightest trace of adulteration in Dr. Price's Baking Powder.

COMPLETELY PARALYZED.

PHYSICIANS ARE ASTOUNDED AT A PECULIAR CASE.

A Young Canadian Stricken with Paralysis While in New York—Returned to his Home at London, Ont., as He Believed, to Die—The Means of Renewed Health Pointed Out by a Clergyman who Visited Him.

Stricken with Landry's Paralysis and yet cured. That means but little to the average layman, but it means a miracle to a physician. Such is the experience of O. E. Dallimore, at present a resident of Madison, N. J., and a rare experience it is.

"Yes, its true that I had Landry's paralysis," said Mr. Dallimore to the reporter, "or else the most celebrated physicians of London were mistaken. That I have been cured is clearly apparent." With this he straightened up as sturdy and promising a son of Britain as ever trod American soil.

"It was on the 15th of March last" he continued, "when I was in New York city, that I first felt symptoms of my trouble. I experienced difficulty in going up stairs, my legs failing to support me. I consulted a physician, who informed me that I had every symptom of locomotor ataxia, but as the case developed he pronounced it a case of Landry's paralysis, and, knowing of the nature of the disease, advised me to start for my home and friends. I gave up my work and on April 1st started for London, Ont. A well-known physician was consulted, but I grew rapidly worse and on Saturday, April 7th, several physicians held a consultation on my case and informed me that I was at death's door, having but three to six days to live, still I lingered on, by this time completely paralyzed, my hands and feet being dead. I could hardly whisper my wants and could only swallow liquids. Oh, the misery of those moments are beyond all description and death would really have been a welcome visitor.

"Now comes the part that has astounded the physicians. Rev. Mr. Gundy, a clergyman who visited me in my last hours, as he supposed, told me of the marvellous cures of paralysis that had been performed by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I started to take the pills about April 28 and a week after that felt an improvement in my condition. There was a warm, tingling sensation in the limbs that had been entirely dead and I soon began to move my feet and hands. The improvement continued until May 28, when I was taken out of bed for a drive and drove the horse myself. By the beginning of July I was able to walk upstairs alone and paid a visit to Niagara.

Slowly but surely I gained my old health and strength, leaving London for New York on October 11 and beginning my work again on October 26, 1894. Cured of Landry's Paralysis in eight months."

To confirm his story beyond all doubt, Mr. Dallimore made the following affidavit.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY, }
MORRIS COUNTY, } ss

Olave Dallimore being duly sworn on his oath said that the foregoing statement is just and true.

OLAVE E. DALLIMORE.

Sworn and subscribed before me December 3, 1894, AMOS C. RATHBUN, [SEAL.] Notary Public.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, paralysis, St. Vitus dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, that tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration; all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. There are no ill effects following the use of this wonderful medicine, and it can be given to children with perfect safety.

These Pills are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., and are sold only in boxes bearing the firm's trade mark and wrapper, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50. They may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company.

The sales of Root Beer Extract in Canada are assuming larger proportions each year, and threaten to affect seriously the demand for beer and other light drinks, of a less wholesome character. The proprietors of ADAMS' ROOT BEER report sales to have trebled last season, and as other kinds were largely sold, the consumption of this pleasant summer beverage must have been enormous.

"Four years ago while in the old country England), my daughter Hannah was sent away from the hospital, in a very low condition with consumption of the lungs and bowels, and weak action of the heart. The trip across the water to this country seemed to make her feel better for a while. Then she began to get worse, and for 14 weeks she was unable to get off the bed. She grew worse for five months and lost the use of her limbs and lower part of body, and if she sat up in bed had to be propped up with pillows. Physicians and wanted me to send her to the 'Home for Incurables.' But I said as long as I could hold my hand up she should not go. We then began to give her Hood's Sarsaparilla. She is getting strong, walks around, is out doors every day; has no trouble with her throat and no cough, and her heart seems to be all right again. She has a first class appetite. We regard her cure as nothing short of a miracle." W. WYATT, 89 Marion Street, Parkdale, Toronto, Ontario.

Said She Was Past All Help

THE GLORIOUS GOSPEL.

IT IS THE GREATEST NOVELTY OF OUR TIME.

So Old That It is New—There is no Philosophy About the Gospel—A Plain Matter of Bible Statement and Child-like Faith.

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—Several thousand persons were turned away from the doors of the Academy of Music, after the huge building had been filled to overflowing, the crowds having begun to assemble fully two hours before the time fixed for opening the services. Rev. Dr. Talmage took for his subject, "The Glorious Gospel," the text chosen being, "According to the glorious Gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust." I. Tim. 1; 11.

The greatest novelty of our time is the Gospel. It is so old that it is new. As potters and artists are now attempting to fashion pitchers and cups, and curious ware like those of nineteen hundred years ago recently brought up from buried Pompeii, and such cups, and pitchers, and curious ware are universally admired, so anyone who can upshovel the real Gospel from the mountains of stuff under which it has been buried, will be able to present something that will attract the gaze, and admiration, and adoption of all the people. It is amazing what substitutes have been presented for what my text calls, "The glorious Gospel." There has been an hemispheric apostasy. There are many people in this and all other large assemblages who have no more idea of what the Gospel really is than they have of what is contained in the fourteenth chapter of Zend-Avesta, the Bible of the Hindoo, the first copy of which I saw I purchased in Calcutta, India, last September. The old Gospel is fifty feet under and the work has been done by the shovel of those who have been trying to contrive the philosophy of Religion. There is no philosophy about it. It is a plain matter of Bible statement, and of child-like faith. Some of the theological seminaries have been hot-beds of infidelity, because they have tried to teach the "Philosophy of Religion." By the time that many a young theological student gets half through his Preparatory Course, he is so filled with doubts about Plenary Inspiration and the Divinity of Christ and the questions of eternal Destiny, that he is more fit for the lowest bench to the infant class of a Sunday school than to become a teacher and leader of the people. The ablest theological professor is a Christian mother, who, out of her own experience, can tell the four-year-old how beautiful Christ was on earth and how beautiful he now is in Heaven, and how dearly He loves little folks, and then she kneels down and puts one arm around the boy, and with her somewhat faded cheek against the roseate cheek of the little one, consecrates him for time and eternity to Him who said "Suffer them to come unto Me." What an awful work Paul made with the D.D.'s, and LL.D.'s, and the F.R.S.'s when He cleared the decks of the old Gospel ship by saying: "Not many wise men, not many noble, are called, but God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty."

There sits the dear old theologian with his table piled up with all the great books on Inspiration, and Exegesis, and Apologetics for the Almighty, and writing out his own elaborate work on the Philosophy of Religion, and his little grandchild coming up to him for a good-night kiss, he accidentally knocks off the biggest book from the table and it falls on the head of the child, of whom Christ himself said: "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou has perfected praise." Ah! my friends, the Bible wants no apologetics. The Throne of the Last Judgment wants no apologetics. Eternity wants no apologetics. Scientists may tell us that natural light is the "propagation of undulations in an elastic medium, and thus set in vibratory motion by the action of luminous bodies;" but no one knows what Gospel Light is until his own blind eyes by the touch of the Divine Spirit have opened to see the noon-day of pardon and peace. Scientists may tell me that natural sound is "the effect of an impression made on the organs of hearing by an impulse of the air, caused by a collision of bodies, or by other means;" but those only know what the Gospel sound is who have heard the voice of Christ directly, saying, "Thy sins are forgiven thee; go in peace." The theological dude unrolls upon the plush of the exquisitely carved pulpit a learned discourse, showing that the Garden of Eden was an allegory, and Solomon's Song a rather indelicate love ditty, and the Book of Job a drama in which Satan was the star actor, and that Renan was three-quarters right about the miracles of Jesus, and that the Bible was gradually evoluted, and the best thought of the different ages, Moses, and David, and Paul, doing the best they could under the circumstances, and therefore to be encouraged. Lord of Heaven and Earth, get us out of the London fog of Higher Criticism!

The night is dark and the way is rough, and we have a Lantern which God has put in our hands, but instead of employing that Lantern to show ourselves and others the right way, we are discussing lanterns, their shape, their size, their material, and which is the better light—kerosene, lamp oil, or candle; and while we discuss it, we stand all around the Lantern, so that we shut out the light from the multitudes who are stumbling on the dark mountains of sin and death. Twelve hundred dead birds were found one morning around Bartholdi's statue in New York harbor. They had dashed their life out against the lighthouse the night before. Poor things! And the great Lighthouse of the Gospel—how many high-soaring thinkers have beaten all their religious life out against it, while it was intended for only one thing, and that to show all nations the way into the harbor of God's mercy, and to the crystalline wharves of the Heavenly City, where the immortals are waiting for new arrivals. Dead skylarks, when they might have been flying seraphs.

Here also come, covering up the old Gospel, some who think they can by law and exposure of crime save the world, and from Portland, Maine, across to San Francisco and back again to New Orleans and Savannah, many of the ministers have gone into the detective business. Worldly reform, by all means; but unless it be also Gospel reform it will be a dead failure. In New York its chief work has been to give us a change of bosses. We had a Democratic boss, and now it is to be a Republican boss; but the quarrel is, who shall be the Republican? Politics will save the cities the same day that Satan evangelizes perdition.

Here comes another class of people who in pulpit and outside of it cover up the Gospel with the theory that it makes no final difference what you believe, or how you act—you are bound for Heaven anyhow. There they sit, side by side, in Heaven; Garfield, and Guiteau, who shot him; Lincoln, and John Wilkes Booth, who assassinated him; Washington, and Thomas Paine, who slandered him; Nana Sahib, and the missionaries, whom he clubbed to death at Cawnpore; Herod, and the children whom he massacred; Paul, and Nero, who beheaded him. As a result of the promulgation of such a mongrel and conglomerate heaven, there are millions of people in Christendom who expect to go straight to heaven from their seraglios and their inebriation and their suicides, when among the loudest thunders that break over the basaltic island to which St. John was expatriated was the one in which God announced that "the abominable and the murderers, and the whoremongers and sorcerers, and idolaters and all liars, shall have their place in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." I correct what I said when I declared the Gospel was buried fifty feet deep; it is buried a thousand feet deep. Had the glorious gospel been given full opportunity, I think before this the world would have had no need of pulpit, or sermon, or prayer, or church, but thanksgiving and hosannas would have resounded in the temple to which the mountains would have been pillars, and the blue skies the dome, and the rivers the baptistery, and all nations the worshippers in the auditorium of the outspread world. But so far from that, as I remarked in the opening sentence of this sermon, the greatest novelty of our time is the Gospel. And let me say to the hundreds and thousands of educated and splendid young men about to enter the Gospel ministry from the theological seminaries of all denominations, on this and the other side of the seas, that there is no drawing power like the glorious Gospel. "Him hath God lifted up to draw all men unto Him." Get your souls charged and surcharged with this Gospel, and you will have large audiences, and will not have to announce in order to assemble such audiences, a Sunday night sacred concert, with a brief address by the pastor; or the presence of "Black Pattis," or Creole Minstrels, or some new exposure of Tammany, or a sermon accompanied by a magic lantern, or stereopticon views.

The glorious Gospel of the blessed God as spoken of in my text will have more drawing power, and when that Gospel gets full swing it will have a momentum and a power mightier than that of the Atlantic Ocean, when under the force of the September equinox it strikes the Highlands of the Navesink. The meaning of the word "Gospel" is "good news," and my text says it is glorious good news, and we must tell it in our churches, and over our dry goods counters, and in our factories, and over our threshing machines, and behind our ploughs, and on our ships' decks, and in our parlors, our nurseries, and kitchens, as though it were glorious good news, and not with a dismal drawl in our voice, and a dismal look on our faces, as though rheumatism were a rheumatic twinge, or a dyspeptic pang, or a malarial chill, or an attack of nervous prostration. With nine "blesseds" or "happys" Christ began his sermon on the Mount: Blessed the poor; blessed the mourner; blessed the meek; blessed the hungry; blessed the merciful; blessed the peacemakers; blessed the pure; blessed the persecuted; blessed the reviled; blessed, blessed, blessed; happy, happy, happy. Glorious good news for the young, as through Christ they may have their coming years ennobled and for a life-time all the angels of God their coadjutors, and all the armies of heaven their allies. Glorious good news for the middle aged, as through Christ they may have their perplexities disentangled and their courage rallied and their victory over all obstacles and hindrances made forever sure. Glorious good news for the aged, as they may have the sympathy of Him of whom St. John wrote: "His head and His hairs were white like wool, as white as snow," and the defence of the everlasting arms. Glorious good news for the dying, as they may have ministering spirits to escort them and opening gates to receive them and a sweep of eternal glories to encircle them and the welcome of a loving God to embosom them.

Oh, my text is right when it speaks of the glorious Gospel. It is an invitation from the most radiant Being that ever trod the earth, or ascended the heavens, to you and me to come and be made happy, and then take after that a Royal Castle for everlasting residence, the angels of God our cupbearers. The price paid for all of this on the cliff of limestone about as high as this house, about seven minntes' walk from the wall of Jerusalem, where with an Agony that with one hand tore down the rocks, and with the other drew a midnight blackness over the heavens, our Lord set us forever free. Making no apology for anyone of the million sins of our life, but confessing all of them, we can point to that cliff of limestone and say, "There was paid our indebtedness, and God never collects a bill twice." Glad am I that all the Christian poets have exerted their pens in extolling the matchless One of the Gospel. Isaac Watts, how do you feel concerning Him? And he writes, "I am not ashamed to own my Lord." Newton, what do you think of the Gospel? And he writes, "Amazing grace, how sweet the sound." Cowper, what do you think of Him? And the answer comes, "There is a fountain filled with blood." Charles Wesley, what do you think of Him? And he answers, "Jesus, lover of my soul." Horatius Bonar, what do you think of Him? And he responds, "I lay my sins on Jesus." Ray Palmer, what do you think of Him? And he writes, "My faith looks up to Thee." Fannie Crosby what do you think of Him?" And she writes, "Blessed assurance, Jesus is mine." But I take higher testimony: Solomon, what do think of Him? And the answer is, "Lily of the valley." Ezekiel, what do you think of Him? And the answer is "Plant of renown." David, what do you think of Him? And the answer is, "My Shepherd." St. John, what do you think of Hmi? And the answer is, "Bright and morning star." St. Paul, what do you think of Him! And the answer comes, "Christ is all in all." Do you think as well of Him, O man, O woman of the blood-bought immortal spirit? Yes, Paul was right when he styled it, "The Glorius Gospel." And then as a druggist, while you are waiting for Him to make up the doctor's prescription, puts into a bottle so many grains of this, and so many grains of that, and so many drops of this and so many of that and the intermixture taken, though sour or bitter, restores to health; so Christ, the Divine Physician, prepares this trouble of our lifetime, and that disappointment and this persecution and that hardship and that tear and we must take the intermixture, yet though it be a bitter draught under the Divine prescription it administers to our restoration and spiritual health, "all things work together for good, "Glorious Gospel!

And then the Royal Castle into which we step, out of this life, without so much as soiling our foot with the upturned earth of the grave. "They shall reign for ever and ever." Does not that mean that you are it saved to be kings and queens, and do not kings and queens have castles? But the one that you are offered was for thirty-three years an abandoned castle, though now gloriously inhabited. Though an abandoned castle while Christ was here achieving your redemption, is again occupied by the "Chief among ten thousand," and some of your own kindred who have gone up, and waiting for you are leaning from the balcony. The windows of that castle look off on the king's gardens where immortals walk linked in eternal friendship; and the banqueting hall of that castle has princes and princesses at the table; and the wine is "the new wine of the kingdom," and the supper is the marriage supper of the Lamb; and there are fountains into which no tear ever fell, and there is music that trembles with no grief, and the light that falls upon the scene is never beclouded, and there is the kiss of those re-united after long separation. More nerve will we have there than now, or we would swoon away under the raptures. Stronger vision will we have there than now, or our eyesight would be blinded by the brilliance. Stronger ear will we have there than now, or under the roll of that minstrelsy, and the clapping of that acclamation, the boom of that hallelujah, we would be deafened. Glorious Gospel! You thought religion was a strait jacket, that it put you on the limits, that thereafter you must go cowed down. No, no, no. It is to be castellated. By the cleansing power of the shed blood of Golgotha set your faces toward the shining pinnacles. Oh, it does not matter much what becomes of us here—for at the longest our stay is short—if we can only land there. You see there are so many I do want to meet there. Joshua, my favorite prophet; and John among the evangelists; and Paul among the apostles, and Wycliffe among the martyrs, and Bourdaloue among the preachers, and Dante among the poets, and Havelock among the heroes, and our loved ones whom we have so much missed since they left us, so many darlings of the heart, their absence sometimes almost unbearable, and, mentioned in this sentence last of all because I want the thought climacteric, our blessed Lord, without whom we could never reach the old Castle at all. He took our place. He purchased our ransom. He wept our woes. He suffered our stripes. He died our death. He assured our resurrection. Blessed be His glorious name forever! Surging to His ear be all the anthems! Facing Him be all the thrones!

Oh, I want to see it, and I will see it—the day of His coronation. On a throne already; methinks the day will come when in some great hall of eternity all the nations of earth whom He has conquered by His grace will assemble again to crown Him. Wide and high and immense and upholstered as with the sunrises and sunsets of a thousand years, great audience room of Heaven. Like the leaves of an Adirondack forest the ransomed multitudes, and Christ standing on a high place surrounded by worshippers and subjects. They shall come out of the farthest past led on by the Prophets; they shall come out of the early Gospel days led on by the Apostles; they shall come out of the centuries still ahead of us, led on by champions of the truth, heroes and heroines yet to be born.

And then from that vatest influence ever assembled in all the universe there will go up the shout, "Crown Him! Crown Him! Crown Him!" and the Father who not long ago promised this His only Begotten Son, "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession" shall set the crown upon the forehead yet scarred with Crucifixion bramble and all the hosts of heaven down on the levels and up in the galleries will drop on their knees crying, "Hail king of earth! King of heaven! King of saints! King of seraphs! Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and to Thy dominions there shall be no end! Amen and Amen! Amen and Amen

DECLINE OF THE HORSE.

I have been making enquiries out here about the contest between the horse and the bicycle, and find that the latter is far ahead. A liveryman in Denver told me that there are more than 6,000 bicycles in that city, and that the receipts of the livery stables have fallen off between 30 and 40 per cent. from what they were four or five years ago, before the wheel was generally used for business and pleasure riding.

In Cheyenne I was told that there were 600 bicycles, and the proprietor of the largest livery stable there said that he had been compelled to sell off nearly half his stock for that reason. He said it was the custom of the young people of that town to make excursions Sunday afternoons, and almost all of them go to a pretty resort, seven or eight miles into the country, or to Fort Russell, the United States military post, to hear the band play. He was formerly in the habit of hiring extra teams from the ranches around Cheyenne for this class of patronage on Sunday, but now he says there is no demand for buggies and carriages, althouth just as many people visit these resorts as before, because they go on their own bicycles. It used to be the custom, too, for evey boy in Cheyenne and many of the young ladies to have their own ponies, but this fashion is obsolete, and they use bicycles instead.

The livery men of Grand Island, Neb., estimate that their business has fallen off $7,000 annually within the last two years on account of bicycles. The same condition of things is found at Colorado Springs, Manitou and all of the cities of the plains and around the foot-hills of the mountains.—Chicago Record.

Wire Fence Without Barbs.

Many thoughtful farmers object to barbed wire, as each year serious accidents to stock result from its use. Where sheep and hogs, however, are pastured, the plain wire needs to be put close together below or the animals will press them apart and crawl through, especially when the posts are located from 12 to 16 feet apart. This can be overcome by the plan shown in the sketch. Set the posts 14 feet apart and put on the usual number of wires. With No. 12 wire cut into the proper length, wrap one end around the next one and so on until the bottom is reached, placing three of these cross wires (a) between each post. The manner of doing this is shown more clearly in the sketch above. To keep the wires equally distant, saw notches one inch deep in a hardwood board the distance apart that the wires are attached to the posts; place these over the wires as near as possible to the point where the connecting wires are to be wound, moving along when the wire is firmly wound in place.

CHAPTER IV.

Angela led the way along the passage and down the steep, narrow kitchen stair.

Already a considerable number of the revellers were refreshing themselves at the well-supplied buffet in the kitchen, and a little further on a successfully-imitated cavern's mouth yawned, showing a dim interior and a solemn, gray-bearded necromancer studying a huge volume.

"I am half afraid of him," exclaimed Angela.

"So am I!" said Forrester. "Are two cowards equal to one 'brave?'"

"No; I am sure they cannot be."

"Ask him," whispered Angela, giving him a little push.

"Let down the curtains, young man," said the graybeard, in a deep voice, "if you do not wish the secrets of your future to be heard by all!"

As Forrester obeyed the sage turned up a gas jet close to him, and let a strong light fall on his visitors, which the curtain, drawn across the entrance, hid from outsiders.

"You seek to know what coming years hide in their depths?"

"We do!" returned Forrester, with becoming solemnity.

"How will you have it?" asked the sage as if he were a bank clerk cashing a check. "By the hand or cards, or the magic crystal."

"I need both hands," said the old man, and proceeded to bend back the pretty white fingers of first one hand then the other, peering through his huge spectacles at the palm, muttering to himself.

"You have a project in your mind," he said aloud; "it engrosses you. Ha, it will not succeed! nevertheless, you'll have a fortunate life. It is not defeat so much as change, change of views, wishes, circumstances—you are much beloved, you have had a peaceful monotonous life—greater brilliancy awaits you, but there will be a moment of doubt—of danger—of—" he paused. "Here you must cross the seer's hand with silver, funds appropriated to charitable purposes," he continued in a totally changed voice.

"I NEED BOTH HANDS," SAID THE OLD MAN.

"By all means," cried Forrester, putting a shilling into his outstretched hand. "I quite understand that a silver salve must clear the sight."

"You're right," returned the sage dryly.

"Pray continue your revelations, this lady is trembling for your words," said Forrester.

"Well then, a critical moment will come, when much will depend on your having the courage of your opinions, stick to your own ideas—and—and secure happiness."

"Now, sir," he continued. "How will you have it?"

"Cards! They have generally been on my side," said Forrester.

The seer rummaged in quite a mundane fashion in a drawer and produced a pack, or part of one, which he shuffled, and desired the enquirer to cut nine times. Then he spread them out in the ordinary fashion, shaking his head as he did so.

"Do you object to this lady hearing my revelations?"

"By no means! Pray sit down, Miss Cavallo. You will be tired." And Forrester hunted round till he unearthed a three-legged stool.

"You are in the flush of success, young man!" began the prophet. "It will not last. A severe reverse awaits you. You have an enemy—a cruel enemy!"

"Pray give me his name and address, that I may administer a cup of cold poison to him," said Forrester, smiling.

"This flippancy ill becomes an inquirer," said the seer, with a frown. "A great and sudden change is coming—nay, is close at hand! Let me see. This is strange. You are absolutely in touch with your foe. Can it be that so fair and gentle a creature could work evil to anyone? But the cards cannot lie! Avoid your present companion; close your eyes; avert your head; shut your ears to her voice. There, I can say no more, save this: Hold fast to honor and probity, and peace will bless your latter days!" He gathered up the cards, and bent his head in token of dismissal.

"Good evening," said Forrester, and drawing back the curtain he offered his arm to Miss Cavolla. "By Jove, I have caught it!" he exclaimed as they went into the refreshment room. "I begin to think I am the pluckiest fellow going to trust myself with so dangerous an enemy. As you are strong I hope you will be merciful. Pray what desperate deed are you contemplating?"

"I hope you do not think me capable of making a bad return for your friendliness," she replied with some seriousness, while the color rose in her cheek.

"Our prophetic friend at the end of the passage would say that however virtuous our intentions we are compelled to carry out our destiny," and Forrester continued to chaff and laugh about his fear of so formidable a foe, feeling more strongly attracted than ever by the slight embarrassment with which his companion parried his remarks, for it seemed to render her more vulnerable than usual.

The pounding on the floor overhead and the sounds of the dance music showed that a livelier style of diversion was proceeding upstairs. "Nothing short of three consecutive waltzes can assure me of my safety," said Forrester, taking her plate. "Have some more ice or jelly or something and then let us join the revels above."

"I think two will be enough!" She was beginning, when Mrs. Bartlett sailed up majestically. "Are you going to dance, Angela?" she asked.

"Yes! We are just going to the salon!"

"Very well, there is more room just now. Most of the people are down here." With a smile and a nod, she walked away.

"Angela!" repeated Forrester. "What a charming name! I suppose I need not fear an angel!"

"Remember, it was an angel barred the path to Paradise!" she returned, smiling.

"Yes, but an angel with a flaming sword! and you are incapable of handling such a weapon! Come, let us waltz while there's breathing space."

Forrester was an excellent partner, and Angela found that she had never before enjoyed a dance so much. Certainly her experiences were few—some school fetes and a rare "soiree dansante" now and then at the house of some school friend. There was a degree of frank familiarity in Forrester's manner which in no way diminished its respectfulness, yet which put her at her ease and won a certain amount of confidence. In the hour or two which ensued Forrester suggested many sight-seeing plans, and secured more than one rendezvous, subject to the approval of Mrs. Bartlett.

It was a fine, soft night when Forrester strolled into Maida Vale to look for a hansom. He felt in a blissful state of harmony with himself and the world in general. He was deeply smitten with the sweet, sedate Angela, and yielded to the delicious intoxicating passion unresistingly. There he was free to indulge his fancies; where could he find a more charming companion to share his fortune and do credit to his house? True he knew little of her surroundings or belongings, but such a girl could not have been brought up save by refined and respectable people. That was enough for him. What a delightful occupation to teach her to love him. And she would want some teaching, perhaps a good deal! Still love lay sleeping in her eyes, and what a charming companion she would be, no empty chatterbox; speaking only when she had something to say, and then with a certain freshness and originality; a steady observant little woman who would keep him straight, and he was perfectly free to make all these perfections his own or to try to win them. What a splendid thing life was, to be sure, when a fellow had money. How fervently he hoped that old Selwyn was comfortably in Heaven as a reward for his admirable conduct in dying intestate.

Forrester's intimacy with Angela went on at a rapidly increasing ratio after this evening. They met frequently with and without the presence of Mrs. Bartlett, and to his joy Angela seemed ready enough to trust herself with him unchaperoned. He gradually gathered the facts of her simple life. Her mother was English, her father Italian and a courier. She was an only child, and having a good voice it had been carefully cultivated at great cost, her father considering this outlay an investment. She was in London to seek an engagement for concert singing and appeared much cast down by the great difficulty of finding one. She spoke with warm gratitude and affection of her parents and the sacrifices they had made for her, and regretted her mother's absence occasioned by a bad attack of gout from which her father was suffering, which detained his wife in Paris.

It had been a lovely warm May day and Forrester had presented himself almost immediately after breakfast driving a high phaeton with a fine pair of horses—a new purchase—for, in spite of his friendly lawyer's warnings, he could not keep his hand out of his pocket.

"It is such a delightful morning," he exclaimed as soon as he had shaken hands with Angela, "that it's a sin not to take advantage of it! So I want you and Mrs. Bartlett to come down with me to Hampton court. You will never find a better day for it. The palace is not open on Fridays. So we will not have the usual crowd."

"It would be charming," exclaimed Angela. "I will go and ask Mrs. Bartlett, but I am afraid she cannot come."

"But that need not prevent you going? You don't mind coming without her?"

"No—I don't suppose I need mind!" and she went away, returning with her good-natured hostess, who deeply regretted that an important engagement at home obliged her to refuse.

In another quarter of an hour Forrester had the joy of driving off tete-a-tete with the quiet little girl who had bewitched him.

What a delightful expedition it was. A day to be remembered, a memory to throw its refreshing light over the dusty, arid paths of after years, and more prosaic life. They wandered through the beautiful gardens, through the courts and cloisters of the old palace, along the river under the shade of the trees in the park. Angela was immensely pleased and interested; rather to Forrester's surprise, she knew a good deal more of the history of the place than he did, and when he told her so, she only said that music and reading had been her only occupations. Then they had a dainty luncheon at the Grayhound and drove back to Alma terrace in the cool of the evening.

Mrs. Bartlett was out when they reached home, so Forrester desired his groom to take the phaeton and horses back to the stable and came indoors to make his adieux.

A letter lay on the drawing-room table addressed to Miss Cavallo, which she opened at once. Forrester watched her as she read it and saw that the contents distressed her. She slowly replaced it in its envelope, and raising her eyes, which looked suspiciously moist, exclaimed: "It is a great disappointment!"

"What is?" he asked.

"I fancied I was nearly sure of an engagement to sing at the Crystal Palace concerts, and now I find that I have lost the chance! I did hope for some success, to pay my dear father for all the sacrifices he has made. He had set his heart on my coming out in London."

"Why take it to heart!" cried Forrester, profoundly touched by the depression of her tone, and the expressive gesture with which the hand holding her letter fell to her side. "You are a woman formed for the refinements, the shelter of home, rather than the ruggedness of public life. Put the whole thing out of your head. There must be some men who would be proud and happy to give themselves and all they have to your service."

Angela laughed, her eyes sparkling, though the tears still bedewed them. "I am afraid that is rather a wild flight of fancy," she said in an amused tone. "Men are not so ready to take unnecessary burdens on themselves, and they are right."

"I don't think so, if they are equal to it; at any rate I know one who would desire nothing better than to lift all care and trouble from you, and make your life one long holiday." Forrester had got the bit between his teeth, for his heart had been tugging at the reins all day, and he could keep silent no longer, and goaded by her look of half-frightened astonishment rushed on.

The Uniat Churches.

The eastern communities connected with the Pope and known as the Uniat Churches are: 1. The Chaldee Church, with five archbishoprics and six bishoprics in Turkey, in Asia, and Persia. To this belong also over 200,000 Christians in Hindostan. 2. The Uniats of the Syrian rite, who are subject to the Patriarch of Antioch, and have four archbishoprics and seven bishoprics. 3. The Church of the Maronites, with eight dioceses. 4. The Melchitee Church, subject to the Greek Patriarch of Antioch, with six archbishoprics and eight bishoprics, extending from Constantinople and Alexandria to Ispahan. 5. The Uniat Armenian Church, the most important of all, whose head, the Patriarch of Cilicia, resides at Constantinople, and is the representative of all the Uniat Churches in the east. There are about 13,000 Uniat Copts in Egypt, and 25,000 Uniat Abyssinians. In Europe there are 12,000 followers of the Greek Uniat rite in Lower Italy, and Sicily, and a small number in Greece and Constantinople; 8,000 Uniat Armenians live in Austria, and 24,000 in Russia. The number of Uniat Greek Roumanians is 1,100,000; that of Greek Ruthenians in Austria over 5,000,000; while 70,000 Greek Bulgarians of the Slavonic rite live in Macedonia and Thrace.—New York Sun.

The Uses of Liquid Perfumes.

Never pour scent on your garments. Liquid perfumes have just two uses. One is to soften and sweeten the water in which one washes and the other is to rub aching muscles. The invigorating effect of the alcohol and the soothing effect of the odor are excellent medicinally. But if used to perfume clothing the effect is bad, for the flower odor soon evaporates and there clings to the wool or linen only the fragance of alcohol combined with "stuffy" house and street-car odors.

REASON ALMOST LOST AT TIMES.

MENTAL AND PHYSICAL SUFFERING THE CAUSE.

Paine's Celery Compound Effects a Wonderful Cure For Mrs Alfred Perry, of Port Maitland, N. S.

Nervous prostration, sleeplessness, mental depression, despondency, general weakness, and a run-down physical condition, are troubles from which multitudes suffer.

These dreadful troubles respect neither sex, age, class for rank; the victims are found at all times and at all places.

While it is a fact that thousands are laid on beds of suffering; it is also true that tens of thousands are barely able to drag along from day to day, being in such a half-dead state,

Soon—ah! too soon—will the ailing ones be numbered with those who are laid up from the sufferings, agonies and torments that nervous diseases generate.

In the midst of present sufferings, gloom and despair, there shines a great and glorious light of hope, comfort and assurance, A curing agent that the world has lauded, praised and extolled, lifts its mighty hand ready to deliver from the grave.

This life-saver and deliverer from disease and death—Paine's Celery Compound—never fails in its mission of curing and restoring to health and strength. Thousands have testified and fresh testimonials pour in every week,

Mrs. Alfred Perry, wife of A. Perry, merchant and ship builder, gives important testimony as to the value of Paine's Celery Compound for nervous troubles and the results that flow from them. She was fully and completely cured. For the benefit of sufferers she writes as follows:—

"For two years my system was all run-down, and I suffered more than I can describe from nervous prostration and insomnia; at times I almost lost my reason from severe pain at base of the brain. My husband advised me to try Paine's Celery Compound, which I did, and the effects were wonderful. I soon began to sleep well; the pain left my head; my whole system was strengthened, and I am now enjoying very good health.

"I would cheerfully recommend Paine's Celery Compound to any one suffering from like troubles. You have my best wishes for the future success of your excellent remedy."

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

"The Beautiful Light."

I've traveled many a weary league,
Through many a foreign land;
Across the waves of a misty sea;
O'er wastes of burning sand;
I've sought for beauty in the North,
And under the Southern skies—
But there's nothing fairer on earth I trow,
Then the light in my dear love's eyes—
The beautiful light,
God bless the sight!
The light in my dear love's eyes.

The burdens of life press hard and fast,
The way grows dark and drear,
My purpose flags, my eyes grow dim,
My heart is filled with fear—
But a light breaks through, the sky is bright,
All clear my pathway lies,
For a love shines forth to strengthen me,
In the light of my dear love's eyes—
The beautiful light,
God bless the sight!
The light in my dear love's eyes.

This light gleams ever before mine eyes,
A beacon so strong and true,
To warn, to cheer, to urge me on
In the work I have to do—
And so when life at last is o'er,
And my spirit upward flies,
May a ray stream down to greet me then
From the light in my dear love's eyes—
The beautiful light,
God bless the sight!
The light in my dear love's eyes.

DUAL CONSCIOUSNESS.

"Of course," said the doorkeeper, "we calculate, in the dime museum business, to deceive the public a little now and then, but as it is done for the amusement and instruction of the public, I don't see as anyone has any call to complain. Suppose I do exhibit a 'freak' that isn't quite genuine! If it draws it is because the public likes it, in which case the public ought to be satisfied. If it doesn't draw, the public doesn't pay out any money to see it, and naturally doesn't feel that it is swindled. Now, I was swindled once, and pretty bad, too, by an artificial 'freak,' and it was me and not the public that suffered. If you want to hear about it I'll tell you the whole story, though I shouldn't like it to be known in the profession, for it don't do any credit to me as a professional man.

I was exhibiting in Boston a good many years ago, and I am free to say that I was losing money. Boston don't seem to care for natural 'freaks.' It goes in for philosophical and philanthropic 'freaks.'

"I don't like to lose money any more than you do, and things were looking pretty blue for me, when one day a carriage drives up to my door and a chap sends in word that he wanted to see me on professional business. I told my man to show him in, and when I saw him I put him down for a rascal without waiting to hear him speak. He told me that he had just arrived from Europe with a two-headed girl, and that she was the biggest thing that any museum had ever offered to the public. He had her with him in the carriage, and I was the first manager that he had called to see since he landed.

"Now I knew well enough that a two-headed girl is about the scarcest thing that a museum can get hold of. I never knew of but one specimen of the kind, and she was worth pretty near her weight in gold.

"I went out to the carriage and had a look at the girl. There she sat, wrapped up in a big shawl, and as far as I could see she was all right. Anyway, there were two heads above the edge of the shawl, and they were as pretty heads as you could find in any English young ladies' seminary. If the Two Headed Girl only corresponded to the sample I saw in the carriage she would be the biggest attraction that Boston or any other city had ever seen.

"Well, I went back to my office, and the fellow and I talked the thing over. He said the girl was a Laplander and couldn't speak a word of any language except Laplandish. She was 16 years old and had never been out of her native village until he had accidentally seen her, and hired her for a five years' tour of the world. So far he had not exhibited her anywhere, and he wanted her to make her debut in my show, so as to give her a respectable standing in the profession from the start. Her terms were $100 a week and a benefit every six months, and he said that he should ask any other manager $125.

"I told him to bring in his girl where I could have a fair look at her, and then it would be time enough to talk about terms. He brought her in, and I noticed that she climbed down out of the carriage with considerable difficulty. The agent helped her into my office, where she sat down on the sofa, and smiled at me with both heads in a way that would have been dangerous if she had tried it on some managers that I know.

"'There she is,' said the agent. 'The only genuine white Two-Headed Girl the world has ever seen. Above the waist, where she is joined together, she is perfect; two distinct girls, and good looking ones, too. She's only got one pair of legs, which prevents her from walking easy, but she is as strong and healthy as they make 'em, and there ain't the least danger that she'll die on your hands.'

"Then he spoke some gibberish, which I supposed was Laplandish, to the girl, and she drew up the hem of her dress so as to show two nice little feet, and no more. Those feet ought to have awakened my suspicion, for they were the regulation Boston size. But I was so anxious to find that she was genuine that I didn't notice that there was anything wrong about her feet.

"'What do you say?' said the agent. 'Isn't she a first class attraction?'

"She'll draw safe enough," said I, 'provided she's genuine. I don't mean to say she ain't, but I've got to be sure about it before we can do any business.'

"'Oh! It's easy enough to prove that she is genuine.' says the fellow. 'I've got certificates from three of the leading physicians in Lapland, besides the affidavit of her father and mother and the parish priest. If they don't satisfy you nothing will, and I shall have to take her to another manager.'

"'Show me the certificates!' said I.

"Well, he produced them on the spot and they seemed all right. Of course I couldn't read a word of them, but they had a lot of sealing wax on them, which is always convincing, and had a genuine official look. I wanted the girl so bad that, perhaps, it led me to be a little careless for once in my life; so I said to the agent that I would give him $25 a week and sign a contract with him for a year. We argued the matter for about an hour, and finally we came to an agreement on the basis of $75 a week and three benefits a year. It was the steepest price I ever paid, but I was losing money at the rate of $50 a week, and I was ready to take almost any chance of bringing up the business again. Besides, I knew that if the Two-headed Girl didn't draw I should be ruined anyhow, and it didn't matter what I might agree to pay, as there would be no money to pay it with. Whereas, if she did draw, as I expected she would, I could easy afford to pay $75 a week for her. I always did go on the principle of dealing liberally with people, especially when it is clear that there is nothing to be lost by it.

"While the agent and I were trying to get the best of one another the Two-Headed Girl sat with some of her arms around both her necks, and was that patient and sweet tempered in appearance that I began to hope that for once I had found a 'freak' that wouldn't be perpetually quarrelling. As I have told you, I presume, 'freaks' do nothing but quarrel and fall in love. I don't wonder at their quarrelling, seeing that they are shut up together day and night, and haven't anything else to do; but it was a long time before I found out why they are constantly falling in love. It is because they don't get any exercise, except now and then a drive in a closed carriage.

"You never hear of a trapeze performer or a strong man falling in love; that's because they work of their affections on their muscles. On the other hand, a fat woman, who never gets any exercise at all, is always in love, and generally two or three deep. Naturally, the more 'freaks' fall in love, the more they quarrel, and there is hardly a day that I don't have to smooth two or three of them down, or threaten to lock them up till they quit heaving candlesticks and language at one another.

"Well, I advertised my Two-Headed Girl the next day, and when night came the house was packed. Ralph Waldo Emerson himself couldn't have drawn better. The very best class of Boston society came to see the Two Headed Girl, and more women with more spectacles and more false teeth came into the show than I had ever seen before in my whole professional experience.

"There wasn't the least doubt about the success of the Two-Headed Girl. In the very first week I took in $230 more than I had ever taken in one week in my life before. The museum was crowded day and night, and every mother in Boston brought her children and told them that the Two-Headed Girl taught some great moral lesson, and that they ought to imitate her, or avoid imitating her, or some other rubbish of that general kind. I never pretend to understand such things myself. I don't associate with 'freaks' to learn moral lessons from them. When I want moral lessons I'll go to Sunday School and get 'em, instead of lowering myself to ask 'freaks' to give me lessons.

"The Two-Headed Girl, as I have said in the beginning, was a Laplander, and couldn't speak anything but Laplandish. She had been with me about a month when I was astonished, one night after the exhibition had closed, and the 'freaks' had sat down to their usual banquet of pickles and cider, to hear one of her heads say to the other:

"'You say that again, miss, and I'll tear your eyes out.'

"'Halloa!' says I, 'thought neither of you could speak any English?'

"The girl blushed a double blush on all four cheeks, and said: 'We've learned considerable since we came to Amesica, but we never try to speak English because it ain't professional—not in our case, at any rate.'

"'That's all right, said I. 'Speak what you like, only remember that I don't allow no quarreling among my people.'

"The next day I made inquiries about the Two-Headed Girl, and found out that both of her were in love with the same young man. He came to the show every day, and always brought both of her flowers. I found out afterwards that he was a philosopher, and was studying what he called 'The Psychological Character of Female Dual Consciousnees as Exemplified in the Two-Headed Girl of Lapland.' I remembered this because he wrote an article in the Atlantic Monthly with that title, which would have been a first class advertisement of the Girl if she hadn't happened to have retired to private life when the article was published. He was a rather good looking young fellow, and both the heads of the Girl considered that he was in love with them. Mary, which is what we used to call the right hand head, was sure that the young man was after her, and only gave flowers to Jane, who was the left hand head, in order not to give away the real state of his affections to the general public; while Jane was equally certain that it was she the young man was in love with, and that he considered the other head to be very much in the way.

"The Fat Woman, who sat close to the Two-Headed Girl on the stage, was really frightened at the way the two heads used to go on. She could hear them whispering to each other when the audience couldn't hear anything said. Mary would put her cheek up against Jane's and smile so sweetly that the audience would say: "How perfectly lovely!" but all the time she would be saying: 'I'd like to bite your ugly ear off, miss!' and then presently Jane would whisper: 'You mean, deceitful thing! Wait till we get to your room, and I'll let you know!' The Fat Woman, who was all the time reading dime novels, said she was afraid some awful tragedy was preparing, and that presently the place would be drowned in blood. She wasn't altogether wrong, as you'll see presently.

"One night, just after the banquet was over, and the 'freaks' had mostly gone to their rooms, we heard such a dismal shrieking from the Two-Headed Girl's room that we all rushed to the door. That is, when I say 'all,' I mean the Giant and the Living Skeleton, who had been sitting up with me a little later than usual. I never allow anything improper on the part of nobody in my show, and I set the example in such matters myself. So I told the Giant and the Skeleton that we would withdraw, while the Strong Woman would burst the door open and see what was the matter.

"Accordingly we did so, and the Strong Woman set her shoulder against the door, and it just sort of melted away, as you might say. She told me that she found the Two-Headed Girl having the loveliest kind of a fight with herself. She was lying on the floor, and the half of her which was uppermost, and which happened to be Mary, was laying into the other half and hauling out the hair and the hairpins by handfuls. The Strong Woman, wanting to check the effusion of hair, went to work to seperate them, and succeeded altogether too well. In fact, when she got hold of Mary, and tried to pull her clear of Jane's hair, the two girls came apart altogether. The Strong Woman, who, like the rest of us, had believed in the Two-Headed Girl, was that frightened when she saw that she had pulled her clean apart that she, in turn, yelled for help.

"This time I had to lay aside my scruples and see for myself what was the matter. There sat the Strong Woman on the floor, holding half of the Two-Headed Girl in her arms, and there lay the other half, two or three yards off, on the carpet, crying her level best and cussin' the rest of her in language which, if I am any judge of language, and I ought to be, was learned somewhere down by the wharves. When I saw that Jane was more frightened than hurt I told her to go to bed, and told the Strong Woman to take Mary into her room for the night. Mary went peaceably, for when the Strong Woman got hold of anybody, male or female, they generally did as she said.

"The next day I called up the Two-Headed Girl and told them that our contract was at an end. 'I will never,' I said, 'be a party to a fraud on the public, especially when it is sure to be found out, as this fraud of yours is. A committee of Boston surgeons was going to examine you this very day, and I believing you to be genuine, was to offer them every facility. What I am offering now is a free passage for you both from here to New York, and don't you ever let me hear of your trying to exhibit again or I'll come out and tell the truth about you.

"That was my only attempt at exhibiting a Two-Headed Girl. I ought not to be hard on the girls, for they pulled me through a very tight place in my professional career; but at the same time they took me in, and, not being a part of the public, I don't like to be took in. However, it all happened long ago, and I defy any 'freak' to play any sort of game on me again. If there is any deceit to be practiced in my show, I conceive that I am the one to do it, and not the one to be practiced on.'—W. L. Alden, in The Strand Magazine.

TURNED ASIDE.

We were going down the peninsula formed by the junction of the Yellowstone and Little Missouri rivers, hoping to intercept the Indians and turn them back. It had been a hard, swift march, a ride of over 400 miles, with no halt above four hours, and at 10 o'clock in the forenoon half the troops were sleeping in their saddles, as their lean and lame horses picked their way over the rough ground.

We had planned to reach the spot where the fleeing Indians would cross the Little Missouri a day or two ahead of them. We believed we had accomplished it. At 10 o'clock we were within two miles of the spot. Then the head of the column halted for the men to close up. Our line had strung out for a mile or more. Between us and the crossing, as the halt was made, nature had made a highway. It was a grassy road, about twenty feet wide, twisting and turning like a creek. Either side was lined with dense thickets. Half a mile down the highway it was crossed by a creek with steep banks. Half a mile farther on was a second creek. It was hardly more than a rivulet at this season, but the width from bank to bank was forty feet and the banks were ten feet high. Our guide had never passed over the route.

No man in the column of 200 men knew what lay beyond the first turn. The halt to close up was a precautionary measure, but no one dreamed of danger. If the hostile Indians had not turned back or changed their route they should still be forty or fifty miles to the south. The stragglers had come up, the sleepy troopers had braced up under the eyes of their officers, and the bugler was about to sound the forward when the half-breed guide and scout held up his hand in warning. A deer came running up the grassy lane at full speed and was within ten feet of the colonel's horse when it wheeled to the right and vanished into the thicket. Next came a fox, who ran under the feet of a dozen horses before he found shelter. Then a second deer—then three or four rabbits.

"What is it?" asked the colonel of the guide.

"Ambush!" was the brief reply.

"Where?"

The guide waved his hand to signify that it was down the lane somewhere.

"How do you know?"

"See that!"

A big gray wolf rounded the turn a hundred feet away, coming at full speed. The hair on his back stood up, his tail almost dragged, and it was easy to see that he had been disturbed and was put out about it.

"Injuns down there!" said the guide. "We are too late! They have got here first and we are in ambush!"

"But what makes you think so?" persisted the colonel, who was impatient to go ahead, and yet too prudent to needlessly expose his command.

"Deer—fox—rabbits—wolf?" replied the guide. "All were frightened. All running away from something. Injuns down there waiting for us. We go some other way."

We turned to the left and flanked the position. We had made a distance of seven miles when Indians were seen and skirmishing began, but they soon retreated southwards, and as we followed them up they crossed the Little Missouri. It was the band we had hoped to intercept, but why did they turn back without a fight? Everybody was asking the question when a few of us rode off to inspect the ambush. The death trap had been set for us between the creeks. The lower end of the avenue had been blocked with felled trees and bushes, and trees partly cut down would have blockaded the upper end as soon as the last horseman had passed. The road here narrowed to fifteen feet. Wherever there was an opening in the bushes which lined the sides it had been closed with thorns.

From sunrise that morning the Indians had been waiting for us. Almost 200 warriors were in hiding behind the bushes, ready to thrust out their rifles and fire at the signal. Perched in the trees along the way were half a hundred boys armed with bows and arrows. Hidden away under the banks of the creeks were a hundred or more squaws, armed with hatchets, knives or clubs. It was not to be a battle, but a massacre. No mercy was to be shown—not a prisoner taken. Scouts had observed our approach and reported. When the head of our column had fairly entered the lane the eager squaws and impulsive boys could hardly be controlled. In their moving about they frightened the wild animals out of their retreats and sent us the warning. They did not know why we halted, hesitated and then took another way. For half an hour they waited with the scowl of hate on their bronzed faces—with the savageness of devils in their hearts—with eyes which glared and glinted as they roamed about in search of the expected prey. Then they whispered to each other:

"They have taken another way! The great Spirit sent them a warning to turn aside! We cannot fight these men, let us recross the river and return to the agency!"

THE WALLFLOWER.

I wish I was dead!

I am 28 years old. I never really noticed it till now. I am p[illegible] sound, in wind and limb, as they say of horses; I can't find a wrinkle, or a crow's foot on my face if I looked ever so hard; I could dance all night without stopping * * * but no matter! * * * I have had my day, and the sooner I realize the fact the better.

I suppose I oughtn't to complain, I've had a good time on the whole, I came out, and was made a fuss about, and lots of people fell in love with me—and that's always supposed to be pleasant. Not for them, poor things! * * * but then no woman ever thinks of that.

I've danced, and flirted, and gossiped and amused myself generally, and made a business of pleasure. If the dancing shoes I've worn out were collected, what a heap there would be! And all the frocks I've worn and torn and put my foot through—and the bouquets I've ruined—and the compliments I've had—and the offers I've refused! * * * Oh yes, I was a success—not a doubt of it!

And now, what's the good of it all? I've made a certain number of people quite miserable, but I've never been in love myself—not really * * * except * * * perhaps * * *

I was very heartless. I've been told times out of number that I had "no heart." Men always say that when a girl refuses them, to save their own vanity, but in my case I daresay it was true.

Well, nobody cares now if I have a heart or not. It's all different. I have got a certain number of friends whose step suits mine, who ask me for dances, but without enthusiasm, and talk to me of this or that "dear little thing over there who is enjoying herself so!" They say I'm a "good sort," and a "real friend." A friend! What has friendship to do in a ballroom?

I can see the ballroom reflected in the mirror here. How nice and cool the glass is to my hot cheek! What a fool I must look! * * * only there is nobody can see me—and if they did—they wouldn't care. Nobody misses me. There's Laura Gray. She tries to be the good Samaritan of the ballroom. Don't let me catch her eye, or she will come and throw me a cast off partner of her own. She's a kind girl, Laura, but I don't want charity dances. I should say I was engaged. I will not dance with veterans, or boys, I had rather sit it out.

How decidedly melancholy dance music is! I never noticed it so much before, I could lie down on the floor this very minute and howl, if I were to let myself go.

Suppose I were to cross the room and talking to Mrs. Fleming, and ask her if she means to have influenza again this winter? Anything to seem occupied! No, I said she is asleep, and if she were not, she would only tell me of Violet's perfections. I see them * * * everybody sees them * * * Oh dear!

There is Violet—with John Forrest He is looking at her exactly as he used to look at me—eight years ago. Why did we quarrel? My fault, I used to think. I suppose it was, but I know I felt very much in the right at the time. I am not sure now if * * * And he has not said more than three words to me since! It's rather awkward! We have to go on meeting, as we move in the same sets, and both he and I hate a fuss. Oh, the world, the world! Anything not to have people talk. But he has never forgiven me. If he were to ask me for a dance now, I should think the end of the world had come! I needn't be afraid, though, I was much too horrid.

Sometimes, lately * * * I have thought * * * that he would be glad to * * * Oh, it's just my fancy! And I don't want him to, either!

I wonder if he really cares for Violet Fleming? She's delightfully young—and naive—and enthusiastic. I know he thinks so * * * but she has the reddest arms I ever saw!

Oh, don't let me be spiteful!

I know that cadence. The valse is nearly over. They will all come by. That's the most awful moment of all. I wish I was talking to Mrs. Fleming; It is so hateful to have to try and look unconcerned, and as if I were sitting here because I preferred it.

Oh, I can't bear it. I'll marry. I'll marry Mr. Brown. He adores me * * * he is only waiting, as Herbert's poem says;

"—— that weariness may toss me to his breast."

I shall condescend to let him see that I don't absolutely dislike him. I shall be a clergyman's wife, and live in the country! How terrible! But it's the only way out of it * * * for me!

Yes, for me, but for him! I don't love him. How could I? I should have to tell him, and even a Mr. Brown is not so abject as to marry a woman who tells him pointblank that she can only promise to—tolerate him! And if I don't tell him, it would be mean.

No, I'll go into a convent. How dull? Not so dull as marrying Mr. Brown, though.

Here they all come; I must try and look unconcerned! I know every stick of my fan by heart, but I will pretend it interests me deeply. I can see over the top of it.

Here's the first couple! Billy Danvers and Miss Forrest! I was his first love, and he's trying hard to make Grace Forrest think she is. Let him!

Mrs. Jenkyn and our host! She's a widow. I wish some one would make me a widow. What am I saying? But she's ten years older than I am, and she laughs like a child. That's the good of being a widow.

Here's Mr. Hastings. He really was in love with me once, so now he detests me. "A man scorned," is much worse than a woman scorned. He won't even look at me. No * * * straight past!

Why, here's Violet—with Mr. Darcy! I thought she was dancing with John Forrest! And John Forrest—alone!

May you have a dance, Mr. Forrest? I—I—— Yes, certainly. The next? The next but one.

Oh, good heavens! The end of the world? * * * or the beginning?—H.V., in Black and White.

HYPNOTIC EXPERIMENTS.

A French physician has recently made some experiments in connection with magnetism and electricity in relation to hypnotism, which have led to remarkable results. The latter discovery establishes the fact that the cerebral activity can be transferred to a crown of magnetised iron, in which the activity can be retained and subsequently passed on to a second person. Incredible as this may seem, the possibility has been proved by the experiments referred to. The doctor placed the crown, which in reality is only a circular band of magnetised iron, on the head of a female patient suffering from melancholia, with a mania for self-destruction, and with such success was the experiment attended that within a fortnight the patient could be allowed to go free without danger, the crown having absorbed all her marked tendencies.

About two weeks afterwards he put the same crown, which meanwhile had been carefully kept clean from contact with anything else, on the head of a male patient suffering from hysteria, complicated by frequent recurrent periods of lethargy. The patient was then hypnotised and immediately comported himself with the manner of the woman who had previously worn the crown. He practically assumed her personality, and utted exactly the same complaints as she had done. Similar phenomena have, it is reported, been observed in the case of every patient experimented upon. Another experiment showed that the crown retained the impression required until it was made red hot.

WRITERS AND THEIR WIVES.

How Great Authors Are Helped by Their Better Halves.

Mrs. Rudyard Kipling enjoys her husband's stories immensely. It was these that first made her like him. She is not a very great critic, though, and is content to take his books as she finds them after they are written. Tolstoi until recently had no audience in his wife. She did not approve the course he took in opposition to the Russian rulers, and begged him to desist and write the stories at which he is so apt, and which once so enriched him. After a time, though, she too was converted to the severe style of thinking followed by her husband, and now callers may see the couple any evening bending over a plain wooden table, while the Count reads aloud his written pages, with the day's ink fresh upon them.

John Stuart Mill had the most appreciative wife a writer ever had. In one of his books he has a dedication inscribed to her, declaring that but for her "bright, clear light" he could never have penned a line worth reading. To her criticism he attributes all his success. Many writers have wives that are true helpmates. Amongst these helping wives are Mrs. R. Louis Stevenson, who herself writes well, and Mrs. Julian Hawthorne. Robert Leighton has an authoress wife; Mr. Peary, writer and explorer, has a wife to whom, in his own words, "he owes more than he can ever pay"; and Hall Caine has a home and appreciative household second to none other in the world.

"Economy."

In every mouth the word "economy" finds a place these days, and in almost every home the need is felt for certain retrenchment, therefore it behooves the thoughtful to consider what kind of economy is practical and of lasting value. There are certain kinds of economy that degenerate into petty meanness unless watched with eagle eye and staying hand. It is not economy to discharge the one servant and then slave yourself to death to make up for her absence. It is never economy to overtax one's strength, for what is saved at one end must of necessary be expended at the other, either for doctor's bills or the expenses of a trip to recuperate after the double strain. It is not economy to shop all day and never stop for a bite of luncheon, or to walk squares out of your way in order to save car fare. Retrench, if you must, in those parts of the domestic economy that are not vital. Pinch where the surface is toughest and can stand it best; but do not become miserly in the carrying out of your commendable ambition. Be economical of health, of strength, but never economical of sleep. Steal a nap, if need be, from the busy hours of the day; it will return you compound interest of refreshing ability to go on with labor mapped out for you. Economize in the number of your garments, but not in their quality. A good bit of cloth wears ten times longer than its sleazy neighbor at half price. Bring judgment to bear upon your economies and the result will be satisfactory, but without keen sense and discrimination economy degenerates into a foolish watchfulness over certain things while others are allowed to take their own course, unproductive of any other result than chaotic entanglement that will need dollars and much thought to straighten out.

WAS I DEAD

How calm, how very calm, evening ; the sun just setting behind the trees of Monckton wold ; the autumn leaves reflecting its dying rays ; the distant river shining like a bar of silver, the high cliffs of Clanmocay blazing like diamonds beneath the shining luminary's kiss of adieu. A gentle breeze swept from time to time through the tree tops. I saw the laborers wending their way homeward after a day of toil. I noticed one or two of them stop their comrades and point to my window, then shake their heads sadly and continue on their course. A blackbird hopped out from some ferns, gave a shrill whistle for his mate, which was answered, and he flew rapidly off to join her. A timid hare raised himself on his hind legs, peered arond cautiously, then proceeded to take his evening meal. Oh ! how observant are the eyes of the dying when they gaze upon familiar sights never again to be witnessed ! Through the great bay window of my room I watched from my couch the peaceful, happy scenes so familiar to me from childhood, and by the rising of that sun that was crimsoning with its final rays the dark clouds, I should be as a child in the alley. In the room where I lay naught broke the silence, save sobs of my mother and sisters who sat around my bed ; and mother with her face hidden in my pillows and my head clasped between both her own. By the window stood my brother, his head bowed upon his chest, his handkerchief frequently travelling to his eyes. My junior by a year, the ancestral acres, and the title won by our Knight Templar forefather under Richard Coeur de Lion, would pass on my death to him, and no dobt he would bear the honors far more nobly than the one that after a brief, butterfly existence among the roses of woman's smiles, wines , luciousness and equestrian achievements was now at the age of 30 about to leave them all behind.

"'Nothing but leaves'
The spirit grieves

With a grim curiosity I wondered what sort of a world I was about to enter upon. My childhood's idea of the eternal singing of the blest and the eternal torture of the damned had been long ago exploded by the knowledge of science I acquired during my undergraduate career at Oxford. That God should torture those poor, frail vessels of his own handiwork for not accepting certain theological dogmas that even the elect disputed, and that the wisest failed to comprehend, that I could not belive, but death was a stern reality that there was no disputing, and with every breath I drew I knew that the king of terrors was at hand. I had one great hope, one great light in the darkness. Helen, my eldest and favorite sister, had crossed the mystic river three years before. We loved each other dearly, and her last words were :—"Berty, dearest brother, meet me at God's right hand." If I did not, would she not miss me ? Would not heaven cease to be heaven when she realized that the brother she loved so well was shut out therefrom forever, and if she did not miss me at all would not her heart be harder as an angel than it had ever been as a lovely, but human woman ? No, God did nothing by halves. He would allow those to meet in the spirit world who had been separated in the natural, and would wipe out the record of their frailties as the summer rain obliterates the dust from the petals of the thirsty rose. As I lay thus dreaming with my eyes open, while the shadows gathered in the darkened room. I felt a keen pang, like the thrust of a dagger, penetrate my lungs. My mouth filled with blood as I struggled to speak ; a deathly chill that seemed to permeate every pore, shook my frame ; I heard my mother's cry of agony, I felt my brother's strong arms round me as he half raised me in the bed ; I heard him say in tones of anguish :—"Berty, Berty, oh, do not leave us yet !" I felt my head fall back upon his shoulder as a delightful calm seemed to compass me about, as a fascinating drowsiness overshadowed me. Then I felt myself drifting, drifting somewhere, I knew not whither, nor did I care.

Time seemed to have been annihilated when I opened my eyes again, apparently awakened by the wonderful radiance around.

I lay on the golden sand of a beach beside an azure sea. The cerulean sky above seemed to have its counterpart in the waters below, over whose surface not a ripple broke, and whose calmness no noise disturbed save the musical fall of the breakers on the shore. The light was clear and radiant, though above us there was no sun, and behind me on the verdant soil, greener the shores of any earthly landscape, were rows of palm trees whose branches swayed gracefully in the perfume-laden air. Over all seemed to rest a peace that surpassed all comprehension, that seemed to instill itself into every nerve in my enchanted frame. I gazed on my habiliments. They were of oriental pattern and color, but of a texture and dye that the hand of man had never brought to such perfection. A long, loose robe of purple and white stripes, girth around the waist with a silken sash of crimson studded with golden stars, enfolded me from neck to ankles. On my bare feet, now of marble whiteness, were girt two sandals of the purest and most flexible of untanned leather, that felt as soft as velvet on the skin.

As I raised my eyes, conscious of the presence of another, I beheld, standing beside me, the white-robed figure of a young man, with the form and face of an Apollo. His long golden hair fell in a luxurious mass over his shoulders, his eyes were as blue and as clear as the sky or the sea. As he leaned on a long cane, like a bamboo encrusted with diamonds, the loose sleeves of his garments fell back, disclosing arms of an alabaster whiteness that the fairest daughter of Eve could never hope to rival. His voice was sweet as the echo of distant music when looking on me with love and pity depicted in his lustrous orbs, he said :—

"You have travelled a long journey ; you have reached half-way to the glorious fruition of the blest."

"Is not this heaven ?"' I inquired in amazement.

"Nay, nay ; beyond the placid bosom of that mighty ocean is the delightful paradise called by mortals 'heaven.'"

"And where am I then ?" I asked.

"You are in a land that is beyond mortal eye or the scope of mortal astronomy ; beyond the farthest constel- on earth. Here you should remain unlation that is known your scholars til you become what I am."

"And what are you, an angel ?" I interrupted, interested beyond the limit of any human desire."

"I am the ideality of what you were born to be, but what you have failed to become. When you have embraced my teachings, and learned the lessons I shall teach to you, my soul shall enter into your soul, and my body shall become your body ; then you will cross over yonder sea and be forever in paradise."

"Is this place, then, what some people on earth call 'purgatory ?'"

The young man smiled almost sadly, before he answered me.

"Ah ! what a conception mortals have of the fount of the beautiful and the true ! The creator of every shining orb cannot look upon or countenance the torture of the crumb of that humanity that he has scattered through every one of those twinkling stars and that he loves as much as the proud and self-righteous earth that believes he thought and labored for her alone. No, this is not what you call 'purgatory'; this is a land where those who are not fitted to pass at once from mortal to celestial habitations are prepared for the final change ; but you are to return to earth for a short time longer. Behold !"

He pointed to the sky ; dark clouds were gathering on the horizon, the blue waters of the ocean had changed to an inky hue. As I turned again, the form beside me had disappeared. On over the waters stole the clouds. I sought to rise and fly into the palm woods, but could not stir. The clouds approached, and as the mist of their advance guard surrounded me I heard a voice—the voice of Helen, calling me by name.

The gloom around me broke for an instant, and there, close to the shore, in a little skiff whose sides seemed wrought of pearl, and holding a paddle that shone like burnished gold, there, standing erect in her tiny argosy, and with a seraphic smile upon her features—features that I instantly recognized as her own, though they were radiant with a beauty that was beyond mortal ken, there was my beloved Helen.

Her voice, softer far than even the voice of him who represented my ideality, was wafted to me through the gathering night.

"Oh ! my brother, what fresh happiness has come to my blessed lot to see, even for a moment, thy dear face again. Thou goest back to mother and the rest of our beloved. Live and urge them to live, so that when ye reach these shores your probation shall not be long, but that ye shall rejoin myself and father, and we shall all form one happy family in the sunny land from whence I come, farewell !"

I sank back upon the sand with a sensation of the most profound sorrow, as I knew that I was flitting from the golden shore beside the azure sea. Then insensibly I felt that I was moving,moving with a rapidity greater than the wind, my nerves and senses forsook me and I slept.

"Oh, my son, my son ! thank heaven you are spared to us ! Oh, God be praised for His mercy !"

It was my mother's voice, her arms were clasped around my neck, and her warm kisses fell in showers on my lips and brow.

My sisters, brother, and our family physician stood beside my bed, the latter holding my wrist, with his fingers pressing on the pulse. Daylight was just breaking through the great bay window, the daylight I had never more expected to see.

The physician's face brightened up with a smile of gladness. "At the solicitations of your family I have been for hours seeking to revive what I believed to be a corpse," he said. "Your recovery is a miracle.'

"I was a corpse on earth," I murmured, "but a soul on probation by the shores of the azure sea."

BREAKING THE ICE.

When William Larker irrevocably made up his mind to take Mary Kuchenbach to the great county picnic at Blue Bottle Springs, he did not tell his father, as was his custom in most matters. To a straight laced old Dunkard like Herrman Larker the very thought of attendance upon such a carousal, with its round dancing and square dancing, would have seemed almost impiety. Henry Kuchenbach was likewise a member of that strict sect, but not quite so narrow in his ideas as his more pious neighbor. Yet to him also the suggestion in such frivolity would have met with scant approval.

But William was longing to dance. For many years he had secretly and fondly cherished the belief that he was possessed of much inborn ability in that art—a genius compelled to remain dormant by the narrowness, the strictness of his family's ideas. Many a rainy afternoon had he given vent to his desire to swinging corners and duex-et-deux-ing about his father's barn floor, with no other partner than a wheat sheaf and no other music than that produced by his own capacious lips.

It was for this reason that when on one beautiful July day William Larker attired in his best—a plain black frock coat, trousers of the same material, reaching just below his shoe tops, a huge derby hat, no longer black, but green, as a result of long exposure to the elements, and a new pair of shoes well tallowed—stepped into his buggy, tapped his sleek mare with the whip and started at a brisk pace toward the Kuchenbach farm, his stern parent believed that he was going to the great bush meeting at Bunkertown, twelve miles up the pike, and was devoutly thankful to see his son growing in piety, and when Mary Kuchenbach, buxom and rosy, wearing a plain black dress, the somberness of which was relieved solely by a white kerchief about the neck, and a grey poke-bonnet, as became one of her sect, climbed up and took the vacant place beside him. Henry Kuchenbach, standing at the gate with his wife at his side, called after them as the vehicle rattled away, "Be sure an' tell Preacher Book when he comes this way to stop in an' get that crock o' sausages we've be'n keepin' for missus."

"Yes," replied the husband, grimly, "an' they've be'n keepin' company six years now, an' that there fellow ain't never spoke his mind."

Meantime the buggy sped along the smooth road, the rattle of its wheels, the clatter of the sleek mare's hoofs, and the shrill call of the killdee skimming across the meadows being the sole sounds that broke the silence of the quiet country. A mile was gone over, and then the girl said, falteringly, "B-e-e-ll, a'n't et wrong ?"

William in response hit the horse a vicious cut with the whip and replied : "Eet don' seem jest right fer ter fool 'em, but you'll fergit 'bout et wen we git dancin'."

Then there was silence between them —a silence broken only at rare intervals, when one of the pair ventured some commonplace remark, which was always rewarded with a laconic reply of "Yais" or "Yer don't say ?"

Up hill and down rattled the buggy, following the crooked country road across the wide valley. Over three low, wooded ridges, then several miles up the broad meadows that line the picturesque Juniata, it wended its way, until at length the green grove in the centre of which lies Blue Bottle Spring was reached.

The festivities had already begun. The outskirts of the wood were filled with vehicles of every description—buggies, buckboards, spring wagons, omnibuses and ancient phaetons.

An orchestra of three pieces, a bass viol, a violin and a cornet, operated by three men in shirt sleeves, sent forth wheezy strains, to the time of which men and women, young, old and middle aged, gayly swung corners and partners, galloped forward and back, made ladies' chains and gentlemen's chains, winding in and out and then back and bowing, until William Larker and his companion fairly grew dizzy. The crowd of dancers was a heterogeneous one.

There were young men from the neighboring county town, gorgeous in blazers of variegated colors ; there were young farmers whose movements were not in the least impeded by the somber, heavy clothing or the high-crowned, broad-rimmed hats that they wore ; there were a few particularly forward youths in bicycle attire, and three gay young men from the neighboring City of Harrisburg, whose shining high silk hats and dancing pomps made them the envy of their more rustic companions. The women likewise, in beauty and dress, went to both extremes. Gayly flowered, airy calico, cashmere and gingham bobbed about among shining, frigid satins and silks as modest as their owners in demeanor. Now in apparent inextricable chaos ; now in perfectly orderly form—six sets; now winding into a dazzling mass of silk, calico, high silk hats and blazers, then out again went the dancers.

"Oh, a'n't et grand !" exclaimed Mary Kuchenbach, clasping her hands.

"Thet's good dancin', I tell yer," her companion replied, enthusiastically.

She had seated herself upon a stump, and he was leaning against a tree a few feet away.

"Good dancin'. Jest look at them three ceety felers, with them high, shiny hats, aswingin' corners. Now a'n't they cuttin' it ? Next comes 'a-laman all.' Jest watch 'em—the two in the fur set, the way they throw their feet—the gal in pink with the feller in short pants and a striped coat. Now back. Thet there's dancin', I tell yer, Mary. 'Gents dozey dough' next. Thet 'ers feller don't call figgers loud enough. There they go—bad in the near set—thet's better. See them ceety fellers agin—swingin' partners. Grand chain! Good all round—no—there's a break. See the girl in blue sating—she's turned too soon. Thet's better—tother way—bow yer corners—now yer own. All over."

William Larker's eyes were aglow with excitement. The opportunity of his life had come. He was to dance to real music, with a real flesh and blood partner, after all those years of secret practice with a wheat sheaf in the seclusion of his father's barn. He would put his arms around Mary Kuchenbach, a feat for the accomplishment of which he had probably longed more than the other. While his companion, seated upon the stump, gazed curiously, timidly at the gay crowd around her, he, his hands thrust deep in his pockets, stood frigidly before her, mentally picturing the pleasure to come.

His feet could hardly keep still when a purely imaginery air floated through his brain, and he fancied himself "dozy—doughing" and "goin' a visitin'" with the rosy girl beside him.

The man with the bass viol began to rub rosin on his bow, the violinist was tuning up and the cornetist giving the stops of his instrument the usual preliminary practice, when the floor master announced the next dance. One after another the couples sifted from the crowd and clambered upon the platform.

"Two more couple," cried the conductor.

"Come 'long, Mary. Now's our chance," whispered the young Dunkard to his companion.

"But you kin. Eet ain't hard. All yer'll hev ter do is ter keep yer feet amovin' an' do what the fellar that's callin' figgers says."

The girl hestiated.

"One more couple," roared the floor master.

William was getting excited.

"You kin dance with the best uv 'em. Come along."

"Really no. I'm too narvous. Jest wait."

"Bow yer partners—corners," cried the leader. And the young man sat down on the stump in disgust.

"We'll hev ter git in the next," he said. "Why, it's dead easy. Yer see, this 'ere's only a plain quadre-ll. Youse orter see one 'et ain't plain. One of them where they has sich figgers ez 'first lady on the wardance,' like they done at the big weddin' up at Bunkertown three years ago. These is plain. I've never danced before meself, but I've seen 'em do it, an' I've be'n practicin'. All you'll hev ter do is mind me."

And so the following dance found the pair on the platform among the first, the girl trembling, blushing and self-conscious, the young man self conscious but triumphant and composed.

"Bow yer partners," cried the floor master when the orchestra had started its scraping.

Down went the grey pokebonnet,down went the great derby, and a smile of joy overspread the broad face beneath it.

"Swing yer partners !"

The great arms went around the plump form, lifting it off its feet. Their owner spun round, carefully replaced his burden on the floor, bowed, smiled and whispered, "Ain't et grand ?"

"Corners !"

The young woman in blue satin gave a slight scream that was metamorphosed into a giggle as she felt herself swung through space in the arms of the muscular person toward whom she had careened. Her partner, one of the young city men with a high silk hat, grinned and whispered in her ear, "Oat cake."

"Leads for'ard an' back !"

William Larker seized his partner's plump hand and bounded forward, bowing and twisting, his free arm gesticulating in unison with his legs and feet. He was in it now, in the thick of the dance, in it with his whole heart. Whenever there was any "dozy doughing" to be done William was there. If a couple went "visitin'," he was with them. When "Ladies in the centre !" was called, he was there. In every "grand chain" he turned the wrong way. He gripped the ladies' hands until they inwardly groaned ; he tramped on and crushed the patent leather pumps of the young city man, and in response to a muttered something smiled his unconcern, bolted back to his corner and swung his partner and whispered, "Ain't it grand ?" The young woman giggled facetiously, and winked at their acquaintances in the next set, the forward youth in the bicycle costume talked about road sweepers, and the city young man said, "Oat cake."

But the young Dunkard was unconscious of it all to the end—the end that came most suddenly and broke up the dancing.

"Swing yer partners !" bawled the floor master.

William Larker obeyed. A ragged bit of the sole of his shoe, worn through by scuffling, caught in a crack, and over he went, his partner clasped tight in his arms, off the high platform.

There was blood on the big bowler and a gash in William's scalp when he was picked up a moment later and carried down to the spring. The doctors poured water over him and bandaged up his head, and when he recovered his senses he found himself the centre of all eyes.

His first glance fell upon the white face of Mary Kuchenback, who, seated on a stump, was weeping heartily, despite the efforts of a large crowd of sympathizing women to allay her fears. He looked up, and his eyes met those of the young woman in blue satin, who was looking down on him, and he saw her giggle and turn and speak to the crowd. He thought that he noticed a high silk hat and heard the words "Oat cake," and then and there he resolved to return and never again depart from the quiet ways of his fathers.

They drove home in the early evening, William Larker and Mary Kuchenbach. And they had crossed the last ridge and were looking out over the broad valley toward the dark mountains at the foot of which lay their homes when the first word was spoken.

The girl looked at her companion and said, "Be-el, ain't dancin' dang'rous ?"

The young man cut the mare with the whip, blushed and with much confusion replied : "Yais, kinder. But—but—I'm sorry I drug you off the platform like thet."

She covered her mouth with her hand and giggled. William just saw the corner of one of her eyes as she looked up at him from under the gray bonnet and replied : "Oh, I didn't min that. Et was jes, lovely—tell we hit."

The mare swerved to one side toward the fence, and the driver seized the rein he had dropped and pulled her back into the beaten track. Then the whip fell from his hands, and he stopped and clambered down into the road and recovered it. But when he regained his seat in the buggy he wrapped the reins twice around the whip, and the intelligent beast trotted home unguided.—New York Sun.

OLD WORLD PROGRESS.

Odd and Curious Ideas Wrought Out by Ingenious Foreigners

In order to prevent that dangerous affection known as wool sorter's disease, a novel antiseptic mask has been introduced in a number of European establishments.

A flexible transmitter, something like that employed in the dental engine, is now connected with the electric time and dating stamp, so that the motion of the clock may be transmitted to the stamp some feet away.

By combining qualities of glass having different rates of expansion and different thicknesses, a German scientist has been able to make boiler gauge glasses that are unaffected by the most sudden changes of temperature.

The use of cut glass for window decoration is a novel but expensive substitute for leaded glass. Series of V-shaped grooves in the broad sheet of glass sparkle and glow in the sunlight like so many crystal prisms, and produce beauties impossible in ordinary leaded work.

The acidity of malted solutions is now determined by an electric instrument of French invention. A delicate amperemeter in thecircuit correctly indicates at all times the degree of acidity.

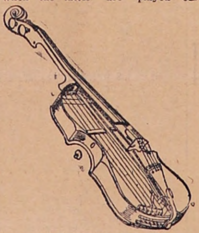
Synthetic chemistry has achieved many remarkable results, first reducing natural products to their elements and then recombining them to their original form, and improving on Nature by omitting all impurities. French chemists are now working to produce artificial crude rubber, with every indications of ultimate success.

VIOLIN IMPROVEMENT.

An Auxiliary Vibrating Device Which Sweetens the Music.

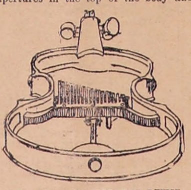
The accompanying illustrations represents an improvement in violins, violas, violoncellos,and similar stringed instruments and recently patented by Bruno E. Wollenhaupt.

The appearance of the instrument is the same as that of the ordinary violin, say The Scientfic American, but within its body is arranged an auxilary vibrating device sounding sympathetically and in unison with the outside strings when the latter are played on by the bow. Only those parts of the auxiliary vibrating device are sounded as are tuned in harmony with the corresponding main strings when the latter are played on.



VIOLIN IMPROVED.

The auxiliary vibrating device consists of 12 metallic strings representing an octave of 12 half ones tuned from C B, or from G-F sharp, and these strings are stretched longitudinally within the body and can be tuned to the required pitch from the bout by a key, the strings being sounded by means of a short thin stick passed either through the F holes or through openings in the sides of the body; the openings being, however, normally closed by small plugs, as shown in the illustration. A very important feature of the invention is the dampening device, completely under the control of the player, and consisting of a transverse brush or dampening bar supported on a level pivoted in the body and carrying on its rear end an upwardly extending rod passing through apertures in the top of the body and tailpiece to be engaged at its upper end by a small block held on a flat spring. This block can be pressed by the player's chin to cause a swinging of the level, so that the brush or dampening bar is moved in contact with all the strings of the auxiliary vibrating device, thus stopping the sounds emanating from the latter. When the player lifts the chin, then the brush falls back to its normal position, that is, out of contact with the vibrating device, and the latter again sounds sympathetically as soon as the outside strings are played on by the bow. Instead of using strings for the auxiliary vibrating device, a metallic comb may be employed, as shown in the smaller figure.



THE AUXILIARY VIBRATING DEVICE.

When the instrument is played every tone, from the highest pitch to the lowest pitch, will cause the corresponding auxiliary string, or prong of the comb, to vibrate sympathetically, and, therefore, cause a prolongation and increase in volume of the tone played. All harmonies, natural or artificial, respond and prolong the sound produced by the bow passing over the main strings, but in succeeding chords it is advisable to apply the damper to prevent disharmony.

Horses Low-Priced in France.

A very serious fall has taken place in the prices of horses in France, also in various French towns. This is said to be mainly due to the extraordinary increase in the number of bicycles and tricycles, the production being during last year excessive—namely over 100,000 more than in the year prior. The complaint is bitter on the part of horse-dealers, w o say the bicycle is taking their bread away; but they must, like the rest of society, suffer for the benefit of the million.

DRESS AND FASHION.

COLLARS OF FLOWERS AND LACE WITH SCARF-LIKE EFFECTS.

Animal Heads a La Mode—Steel Buttons, Perforated and Open Embroidery Have Found Their Way Among the Novelties.

The rosette collar has had its day ; in fact, it may be said to have had its evening and its morning, which, no doubt, has been the ultimate cause of its removal from favor.

Its successor is a collar of velvet, or whatever the trimming fabric may be, swathed in the usual folds, but with three-cornered laps or revers to turn over at the sides. These little revers are usually double, the under one being of the dress fabric and the one above, which is a trifle smaller, of the trimming.

Dressy collars are generally composed of flowers and lace, with scarf-like effects at each side of the front, and, at the present moment, little animal heads are being introduced in association with the flowers.

Ermine heads are very effective with pansies orchids or any rich, dark flowers, while sable contrasts well with daffodils, narcissus and the like.

Velvet, both plain and brocaded, will enter largely into the combination of Spring costumes, and buttons of various sizes, in mother of pearl, paste jewels, cut steel, gold and horn, will be used for the trimmings and fastenings of both out and indoor dresses.

Some of the costumes in cloth an velvet are being made with wide revers, secured by large steel buttons, and the skirts will be ornamented up the front and sides with several rows of smaller buttons to correspond.

One very handsome costume I saw recently at a morning wedding was in cocoa brown amazon cloth, combined in the skirt with panels at the back of brown and gold velvet brocade. The pattern was of a rich palm scroll of velvet on a tinsel ground.

The skirt had the usual godet plaits at the back, and was edged at the hem with a thick cord covered with velvet. and topped off with a row of gold braid.

The bodice had three simulated box plaits down the front, with a row of tiny flat gold buttons up the centre of each. On the shoulders were bows of brown velvet ribbon, the ends of which were gathered into gold spigots, such as were used a decade ago. A row of the buttons was placed about the collar, and the sleeves had drooping puffs of cloth, which ended in deep cuffs of the brocade. It was, altogether, a striking costume, in the most correct taste, and extremely becoming to the young matron who wore it.

Perforated and open embroidery stuffs have found their way among the novelties, and are likely to meet with much favor throughout the coming months, and all have a splendid effect when mounted over bright Liberty silk. There are generally flounces to correspond,and these fabrics are fully appreciated when they veil the brilliant fashionable shades of mandarin cherry and emerald green.

Bright leather-colored lace has superseded the butter yellow variety which raged last summer, anl Vandyke points have given place to turret squares. Many of these new laces are hand-run, with gold thread, and in single shapes to put on here and there, make the handsomest ornamentations for toilettes for grand occasions. A sprinkling of tiny spangles here and there, in conjunction with the gold thread, makes the lace more effective still.

A PARIS COLLAR.

The near future will probably find the Eton jacket of velvet an established feature in every well-regulated wardrobe, and it will accompany cloth skirts and fancy vest fronts. The perceptive woman easily recognizes its picturesque value, and implores for it long life and prosperity.

The Origin of Point Lace

A little-known example of inventive genius in woman is that afforded by Barbara Uttman of Saxony and her point lace so long in fashionable use all over the world. She invented the process and apparatus for manufacturing this beautiful handiwork, which has since given employment to millions of operators, and which, in its line, has never been excelled. The apparatus looks like a long pincushion bristling with pins arranged to outline the pattern or design. The operator manages from 10 to 50 peculiar spools, allowing the thread to feed over the pins alternately until the design is completed. The spools or bobbins are purposely of different colors so as to be easily distinguishable. The process is slow and difficult to learn. Miss Uttman founded schools where thousands learned it. Since her time, when inventive ability was rare, even among men, her ideas have been incorporated in the construction of machinery by which the lace is produced at wonderfully lower rates, and yet Barbara Uttman's lace still surpasses them all.

The Medicine for Liver and Kidney Complaint.—Mr. Victor Auger, Ottawa, writes: "I take great pleasure in recommending to the general public Parmelee's Pills, as a cure for Liver and Kidney Complaint. I have doctored for the last three years with leading physicians, and have taken many medicines which were recommended to me without relief, but after taking eight of Parmelee's Pills I was quite relieved, and now I feel as free from the disease as before I was troubled."

To save life from the ravages of disease is nobler than to win a kingdom. Burdock Blood Bitters cures all blood diseases, scrofula, blotches, pimples, skin diseases, etc., by its cleansing power over the entire system.

Jutland was originally Juteland, or the land of the Jutes, a Gothic tribe.

NORWAY PINE SYRUP strengthens the lungs and cures all Throat Troubles, Couhgs, Colds, etc.

Bulgaria was formerly Volgaria, so called om the Volsci who inhabited it.

As Parmelee's Vegetable Pills contain Mandrake and Dandelion, they cure Liver and Kidney Complaints with unerring certainty. They also contain Roots and Herbs which have specific virtues truly wonderful in their action on the stomach and bowels. Mr. E. A. Cairncross, Shakespeare, writes: "I consider Parmelee's Pills an excellent remedy for Biliousness and Derangement of the Liver, having used them myself for some time."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

A CRUEL CRISIS.

A Story of the Coal War in England, 1893.

"Ardley Barracks."

"MY DEAR WIFE,—The strike at Ardley Moor shows no signs of ending; indeed, it seems likely to go on for ever. I don't know which are to blame, the masters or the men; I wish one or the other would give in. I am glad you're out of all the bother for we are obliged to hold ourselves in readiness to quell the riots that are daily anticipated. This police business is a jolly nuisance, but I suppose it cannot be helped. All the regiment, except my company, is away riot-quelling in other parts of the country, so we are always under arms, night and day. If old Holroyd would only concede a trifle, I think the men would return to work willingly; but he's obstinate, and so are they. Consequently starvation is perilously near for the colliers. Charlie is quite well, but I haven't seen him since lunch. Mary, the new housemaid, came up this afternoon asking for him. She says he went out about half-past two and had not returned at 4.30. I suppose the young rascal is off on one of his rambles. Hope you are enjoying yourself, dearie. Charlie and I both send our very best love.

"Your affectionate, fond old hubby,
"CHARLES VANE.

"P.S.—You know Barrington Thwaite, the fellow who tried to cut me out with you? He has just been appointed a local J.P. I don't envy him his duties these times, though he did threaten me with horrible punishments when I carried you off. Good-night, darling!"

The above letter finished, Captain Vane, of the Third Coalshire Regiment sealed it and addressed it to Mrs. Chas. Vane, Hotel Metropole, Sandport.

"There," he said, "that's done." Can,t bearing writing, but that will give the little woman and her mother something to talk about for a week, Well, Reilly"—as the sergeant of that name entered the room—"what now?"

"Av ye plaze, sorr," replied Reilly, saluting, "the man from the polis-offus is outside, an' he wants to see yerself—the colliers has shwore to foire the pit tonight, an' there'll be the deuce and all if the sojers don't be there."

"Very well, send the man in."

"Yis sor," and with another salute, Sergeant Reilly retired, sending a private to show "the polisman to the capt'in's room." Like his superior officer, Sergeant Reilly had a lively hatred for police-work and all that concerned it. As he would often say at mess, "shootin furriners an' thim burrds was dacent sport; but foirin' on yer own flesh an' blood was a horse of another color intirely!" And his sentiments were invariably received with acclamation.

The upshot of Inspector Arkwright's interview with Captain Vane was a command to the men to turn out, fully armed. The order was instantly obeyed, and in a few minutes the captain and his men were marching through the gathering gloom across Ardley Moor to the seat of the trouble. As they neared the pit and passed through the rows of miners' cottages, the few women and children left at home came to their doors and reviled them for the part they were about to play in the struggle between master and man. But the soldiers took no notice of the abuse, nor of the missiles thrown. Firing on their fellow-men was bad enough, but they could not war on the women and children. Climbing the brow of the last hill, Captain Vane saw that if he was to save any of the pit-buildings, he and his company would arrive none too soon.

A red glare glowed against the cloudy sky, and lit their path. Nearer and nearer they advanced, and they saw long fiery tongues of flame leaping high from the banks of coal round the pit's mouth; angry men rushed hither and thither in wild rage, looking like demons in the awful glare; their mad screaming, rising above the hissing and crackling of the burning fuel, deepening into a sullen roar of defiant hatred as the military approached within sight. With a common impulse, the rioters seized stakes and brands and rushed within the walls surrounding Abel Holroyd's house, built not far from the mouth of the pit he owned, and from which all his wealth had been wrested by the men whose blind passion was the cause of the present tumult.

In they rushed, bearing down the iron gates in their mad haste, and swearing loudly to set fire to the building.

The soldiers came to a halt opposite this retreat. As they did so, old Abel Holroyd and Barrington Thwaite—who had been sent for to read the Riot Act, if necessary—came up to the spot. Their appearance was the signal for a fresh outburst of fury. "Brun t' pleeace deawn!" "Teach th' owld sweater manners!" cried the mob. "Will yo' pay uz a fair wage?" shouted one, taller than the rest, and who seemed to be a leader.

"No, I weant, if tha' calls 25 per cent. advance a fair wage!" shouted back Holroyd. "I made my money th' same road as yo've had a chance to, an' I'll none gi' it away for nowt!"

"Excuse me, Mr. Holroyd," said Vane, with difficulty making himself heard, "but that sort of talk will only incite them to further violence. I have just been conferring with Mr. Thwaite. Promise them to arbitrate, or something—anything to quiet them and make them disperse."

"Arbitration!" echoed the angry old man. "I'l promise 'em nowt o' th' sort. I'll ha' no meddlers interferin' wi' my business. If they don't like to work for th' wage I can afford to pay 'em, they con clem!"

He shook his fist at the crowd, who screamed and shouted, renewing their threats. And even the hiss and crackle of the burning coal added to the din.

"Now then, Thwaite," cried Holroyd, "do summat! Am I to stand here an' see my house an' bukes an' things brunt to th' ground as well as all th' coal at th' bank? What's these red coats standin' still like toy-sojers for? Wean't their guns shoot, or what?"

"Will you leave those grounds and return to your homes?" shouted Thwaite, thus urged. But there was no sincerity in his tone; indeed, he longed to force the soldiers to extreme measures, since he saw how distasteful such a course would be to his old rival, Captain Vane.

But the answer came back sharp and distinct—

"No, we wean't! We're here, an' here we'll stay; an' if owd Holroyd wean't gi' uz th' advance, we'll burn th' pleeace deawn. We'll gi' him two minutes to think it ower!"

And the shouting of the mob and the roaring of the flames continued.

Holroyd, Thwaite and Vane consulted. To all suggestions of concession or arbitration Holroyd returned an obstinate refusal, urging the employment of force for the protection of his property. Vane asked if the police could not gain an entrance at the back of the house, and so eject the rioters, but Holroyd explained that it would be impossible for them to scale the high surrounding wall. The only way in was through the gateway, which the mob was already roughly barricading. Would Captain Vane advance at the point of the bayonet and force an entrance?

Vane replied that he certainly would, but not until he had seen the police make the attempt themselves.

"Hey!" shouted Sam Bradley, the rioters' spokesman, "time's up! What's gooin' fur t' do?"

For answer, Thwaite read the Riot Act. No one could hear it, and few would have heeded it had it been heard. Then the police rushed at the gateway with drawn truncheons. But the storm of stones, firebrands, and other missiles with which they were met caused them to beat a speedy retreat, amid the hoots and jeers of the strikers now flushed with success.

Then Thwaite formally desired Captain Vane to do his duty. The men were drawn up in double line, and the action decided upon was two volleys and a charge at the bayonet's point. Standing well without the range of the rioters' storm of stones, the soldiers were yet able to take good aim, for the banks of coal adjacent were still fiercely burning. There was a sharp clicking as the men loaded with ball cartridge, and the colliers, seeing that business was evidently meant, wavered for a moment, but instantly rallied—madly, it seemed, braving certain destruction. Obedient to Vane's command, up went the rifles to the "ready" with mechanical precision, and every finger touched the trigger, every ear listened for the word to fire.

But it did not come. As the word formed itself on Cyptain Vane's tightened lips, a big collier forced himself into the front rank of the strikers, bearing in his arms a fair-haired boy—the captain's little son Charlie.

"Now fire, if yo' dare!" cried the man. "We reckoned on t' redcoats, me an' Sam, an' I thowt we'd find summat as 'ud stop ther pea-shootin'. Capt'in will noan fire on his own childt, I reckon!" And with a wild, hoarse laugh, the fellow held up little Charlie high in air.

Vane was pale as death. He knew now why his boy had been missing. What was he to do? To fire was to kill his only child; to refuse to do so would be a neglect of duty. He looked toward Thwaite for advice. What it was he saw in the magistrate's eyes—cruel satisfaction? Clearly not indignation, or pity.

"Well, why don't you fire your popguns?" screamed Holroyd. "You'll be too late, directly. They're up i' th' top rooms wi' torches now!"

"Shure," cried Sergeant Reilly, forgetting discipline in his anger, "shure he don't fire, ye owld coal heaver, because the bhoy there's his own flesh an' blood."

"Men," cried Vane to the colliers, "if you are men give me back my boy—would you make a father murder his own son?"

"Have yo' thowt o' our childer, cap'n?" answered Sam Bradley. "They're clemmin' a' who 'm for want o' bread, leave alone meat! Call off yo'r men an' goo back to th' barricks, an' I'll promise yo' to bring the chilt ower to yo' reet away!"

Before Vane could reply, Thwaite broke in.

"This parleying with rioters is absurd," he said. "It's unfortunate for you, Captain Vane, that those blackguards yonder have the boy; but you cannot allow that fact to interfere with your duty. In the name of the Queen you have sworn to serve, I call on you to fire upon and disperse that mob?"

"But Thwaite—Holroyd——" Vane began; but before he could formulate a sentence Charlie cried out to his father. His childish treble could be clearly heard, for the truly terrible situation had compelled a general silence.

"Father," cried the boy, "don't be afraid to fire. I'm not afraid to die—I'm not a coward, if these men are cowards. Say good-bye to mamma!"

A mighty cheer from the soldiers' throats broke the painful silence. Old Holroyd seemed struggling to say something, and, despite his pain, Captain Vane felt prouder than he felt when his Queen had placed upon his breast the Victoria Cross. He turned to Thwaite, and said:

"You have executed your threats of jealous vengeance in a cruel way, Mr. Thwaite, and you and I will settle this elsewhere. You could have made some arrangement with these men, I daresay. But you shall see that I am a soldier first and a father afterwards. Hang it, man," as Holroyd touched his arm and stammered something, "hang it, I'll fire, though your obstinacy costs me my boy's life!" The line of bayoneted muzzles once more grinned at the strikers, and Captain Vane called "Fi——"

"Stop!" shouted Holroyd, rushing in front of the soldiers. "Stop! I'm a rum 'un and a rough 'un; but," shaking his fist at the rioters, "afore I'll see a mon shoot down his own son for my sake, yo' con brun down every shed I own! Now, brun awayt an' be durned! Cap'n, yo' con reet abou, feeace."

"But my boy——"

"Here he is," shouted Sam Bradley, snatching the child from his comrade, and setting him down free. "Run to thy feyther lad. We'll noan be beat by own Abel Holroyd in dooin' t' reet thing. An' Abel, I'll gi' yo' my word 'at not another stick or stone shall be hurt toneet. Run, lad, run!"

The boy flew to his friends, and as he was caught in his father's arms, a great cheer, that ended in a stifled sob, went up from every man, soldier and striker alike.

* * * * *

"An' bedad," said Sergeant Reilly, in the canteen next morning, "we wor nearly afther losin' ourselves on the road home by rayson av a mist in our eyes that was naything fog nor rain, d'ye see!"

The New York Herald will award a prize of $10,000 for the best serial story of between fifty thousand and seventy-five thousand words by an American writer, whether professional or amateur. We would like to know whether our metropolitan contemporary will exclude from this competition persons residing in America, but not in the United States. Such an exclusion would indicate a narrowness of mind of which we are not prepared to suspect, much less accuse it. Moreover, although a very large share of its support comes from those who live under the Stars and Stripes, it is by no means confined to them. So that the query we suggest is one very natural under the circumstances, and certainly there cannot be any fear on the part of United States writers to have a friendly encounter with the best of their northern neighbors in the arena opened to them by The New York Herald.—Quebec Mercury.

Advice From A Money Lender.

"Here's your money," said a city ha'l officer, handing $1 to a lawyer associate. Smiling, he added: You're a robber, a usurer, to exact compound interest on such a loan."

"Yes, but I wanted to give you a lesson on the evils of borrowing," said the lawyer. "It's a pernicious practice, because it is a habit easily acquired and leads to very bad results. The money-lender usually gets the big end of the horn, unless the loan is unsecured, in which case, nine times out of ten, the loanee is worsted. Take my advice, don't borrow at any price."

Then addressing a group of interested friends, the lawyer said: "Compound interest is a funny thing to run up against. Not long ago the Bank of England had to pay a large sum to settle a compound note for $25 which had been mislaid for many years. The custodian of the note claimed $3,000,000, but was glad to accept a compromise for a much smaller sum. The loan I made to-day, by way of a joke, affords an interesting study. It is payable in 100 years (or earlier, if possible) at compound interest, at the end of 100 years. At the rate of interest charged, 1 per cent, the borrower or his heirs will owe me $2.75. Now if I had charged 4 per cent interest, he or his heirs would owe me $50.50 at the end of 100 years. By charging usurious rates of interest, say 12 per cent—well, I'd have $84,675 due in the year A. D. 1995, and at 24 per cent interest the original $1 would accumulate in a century just $2,551,799,404."—Buffalo Courier.

DANTE, QUEEN VICTORIA AND THE LATE CZAR FAVORED.

Mrs. Stevens Says Cinderella — Mrs. George Gould Has a Composite Ideal. Mrs. A. M. Palmer Adores Claude Melnotte and Napoleon Is Not Forgotten.

Who are the ideal lovers? "Many men are of many minds" truly, and no two answers to my question were quite the same. The range was a long one, from the lovers of 600 years ago, when Dante and Beatrice and Petrarch and Laura sang love songs to each other, down to our own century, when Queen Victoria chose her Prince with a little bunch of violets, and Robert and Elizabeth Browning lived for each other in sunny Italy, and the Czar of all the Russias found time on his death bed to plan a birthday gift for the beautiful wife who was his sweetheart through a quarter of a century of married life. Here are the answers, as varied as the faces and the minds of the persons who gave them to me:

QUEEN VICTORIA HIS IDEAL.

"You won't think that I am affecting the English, or that I do not know numbers of delightful American lovers," said Ward McAllister, a little while before his death, in answer to my question, "when I tell you that to my mind, the most perfect lovers in song or story were Queen Victoria and Prince Albert.

Do you remember how the story of their courtship goes? I was reading it just the other day. It was high time for the young Queen to choose her husband, and the Lord High Chamberlain arranged for a magnificent state ball, at which all of the eligible suitors should be present.

"Dancing in the minuet near the Queen was the dashing handsome young Prince Albert, and he alone of all the goodly company found favor in her sight. She took from her bosom a bunch of violets and as she passed him in the dance he found the flowers pressed into his hand. There was but one meaning—young girl Quen had chosen him for her lord and lover. Isn't that a pretty bit of romance? But, best of all, they were lovers all through their happy wedded life."

PETRARCH RECITING TO LAURA.

WHAT MRS. GEORGE GOULD THINKS.

"My ideal lover is rather composite," said Mrs. George Gould. "If in one man could be found the ardor and beauty of Romeo, the daring of Marc Antony without his treachery, the honesty of Petrarch, the wisdom and learning of Dante and the physical strength of Leander, who breasted the Hellespont so many times, I think that man would be the ideal lover."

CINDERELLA, SAYS MRS. STEVENS.

"Why, Cinderella, and the Fairy Prince, of course," said Mrs. Paran Stevens when I propounded my weighty question to her. "I chose them when I was a little maiden, and I have never wavered in my allegiance. Was ever woman in such fashion won? Was there ever a lover as generous and good or a lady so fair and sweet as the fairy-tale Cinderella and the Prince who found and loved her. It is very true that Little Billie worshipped Trilby's foot, but that was the real thing, rosy and dimpled and beautiful, but all that my Prince had to enthuse over and to fall in love with was the tiny glass slipper which the little maiden lost when she fled from the ball as the clock struck the midnight hour."

NAPOLEON HER FAVORITE.

Mrs. George B. McClellan is an enthusiastic admirer of Napoleon. She has in her beautiful home more relics and personal belongings of the Little Corporal than any woman in America, with the possible exception of Mrs. Jordan L. Mott, a cousin of the Duchess of Manchester. Mrs. McClellan says that Napoleon is her ideal lover. "Every one has a right to their own interpretation of the character of this wonderful man, and although mine may not be a popular choice, I am of the opinion that, for breadth and depth and pure unselfishness, I know of no love in fiction or reality which excelled that of Napoleon and Josephine each for the other."

DE RESZKE AND MELBA IN "ROMEO AND JULIET."

WHAT MRS. GRANNIS THINKS.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Grannis has a sensible opinion on ideal lovers, as she has upon most questions of the day and hour. "Hero and Leander would be my choice of all the lovers I have known or heard about. Leander, especially, because he was so brave and strong. In these days of small, weak, nervous men and splendid, tall, athletic women, a strong, broad-shouldered lover with a good physique seems to be the most desirable kind."

MRS. LESLIE DOTES ON HELOISE.

"Heloise and Abelard are, to me, a most perfect pair of lovers," and Mrs. Frank Leslie leaned back from her desk, pushed aside the editorial she was writing, and told me their beautiful love story. When she had finished I was of her opinion, that there was no love story more touching and sweet than that of the two lovers who sleep side by side in Pere la Chaise. Everyone who visits Paris goes out to their graves, and after all of these years they are kept covered with flowers by happy maidens and their lovers, who bring roses and lilies and violets just as long as the flowers last.

THE CZAR AN IDEAL LOVER.

"What love in all romance or history equalled that of the late Czar of Russia for his beautiful Danish wife Dagmar?" said Mrs. William Tod Helmuth, President of Sorosis, the great woman's club, "a beautiful story of his devotion has just come to light. It seems that on every birthday the Czar placed in the Czarina's boudoir a magnificent bunch of flowers, and secreted somewhere among the roses was a case containing some beautiful jewel, selected months before. The Czarina admired a beautiful bracelet when she and the Czar were selecting jewels for their wedding gift to the then Princess Alix. After the Czar's death Dagmar's birthday came, and in her boudoir she found her flowers and among them a casket, sealed by the late Czar's own hand and containing the bracelet which she had admired almost half a year before. Knowing that he could not be with her on this usually festive day, he had directed his son to place the jewel and the flowers where his mother would find them, and then to be near at hand to comfort her. These royal lovers, who shared deadly peril by day and by night, at home and abroad, were, to me, ideal lovers."

IDEALS OF THE BUDS.

Miss Elsie Clews, the beautiful daughter of Banker Henry Clews, although she is a properly introduced society girl, finds time with all of the demands of society life, to take a thorough course at Barnard College, the woman's annex of Columbia College. Miss Clews is of the opinion that Petrarch and Laura were the most perfect lovers she had ever heard of. Why? Because they were constant to each other all of their lives. Petrarch made her famous in writing to and about her, and if all he tells be true, their love was as near perfection as that which is vouchsafed to mortals."

PAOLO AND FRANCESCA DA RIMINI.

Miss Vanderbilt gave Dante and Beatrice as the lovers whom she had favored with her choice, while lovely Miss Pauline Whitney chose Romeo and Juliet.

Miss Anna Leary should be a good judge of lovers, both real and ideal. She has had most of the love affairs among the young people of the Four Hundred whispered into her willing ears, and has given the best of good council to all who were in doubt or perplexity for the past twenty years. She says the love of Romeo and Juliet is the most exquisite picture given upon any stage. Their love was strong and deep and everlasting, and, best of all, was founded upon honor, which, after all, is the only real love.

NO LACK OF PERSEVERENCE.

Modern Woman Has Plenty of Steady Push About Her.

Sorosis declared with much emphasis the other night that the modern woman is not persistent enough. This view of the case, it is safe to say, has not yet impressed itself upon the modern man. Not so very many years ago the modern woman became convinced that she wanted a collegiate education on substantially the same terms with her brothers. Conservatives shook their heads, and sedate professors declared that the thing was preposterous. But the lady in the case persisted, and today she has not merely invaded, but has conquered a large portion of the realm of the higher education. Then she declared that she proposed to enter the pursuits which have been the exclusive possession of masculinity for unnumbered ages. Again obdurate mankind said no; but women doctors, lawyers, journalists and merchants are now so common that they do not even excite comment.

Whatever the modern woman has really set her heart upon she has generally succeeded in obtaining. In most of the western states she has the franchise in one form or another; in Colorado she has exactly the same political privileges as men and has elected three representatives of her own sex to the legislature. If she doesn't vote in the east as yet, it is simply because she hasn't quite made up her mind whether on the whole the ballot would be becoming to her. When the bicycle, most unruly and diabolic of vehicles, made its appearance, the world remarked: "Lo! here is something that must forever belong to man alone." The modern woman heard this mandate, smiled a knowing little smile and forthwith set about mastering this novel epitome of mechanical depravity. At present she not only rides the wheel with calmness and determination; she rides it in Turkish trousers, and hints ominously of knickbockers in the near future.

Decidedly, if fin de siecle femininity has faults, lack of persistence is not among them. Sorosis does not need to worry over the up-to-date woman. She has triumphed over everything she has undertaken to subdue—Greek roots, business difficulties, political methods and the bicycle. And the end is not yet.—New York Press.

What Are Heathens?

"What are heathens, uncle?"
"Heathens? Oh—ah—heathens are people who don't quarrel over religion."

How a Fish Comes to the Surface.

A curious physiological discovery has been made in the past year by Prof. Bohr, of Copenhagen, in regard to the mode of storage by which a fish accumulates so much oxygen in the air that distends the swimming or air bladder.

The air contained therein has a percentage of oxygen that may rise to as much as eighty-five, an amount much in excess of the percentage in atmospheric air. Prof. Bohr tapped the air bladders of codfish and drew off the gas by means of a trocar and airtight syringe. The gas had 52 per cent. of oxygen. In a few hours the air-bladder was refilled, apparently by a process of secretion of gas from the blood in the capillaries on the wall of the bladder. In one experiment the gas thus secreted had 80 per cent. of oxygen. When the nerves connected with the organ were severed the secretion ceased and the organ was not refilled.

It thus appears that when a fish descends to a great depth, and his body is reduced in size by increased pressure of the water about him, he is able to attain his former size and rise by secreting the gas he needs, and not by absorbing it from the water. Support is thus given to the theory that the gaseous exchanges that occur in the lungs of animals are not purely physical.—Baltimore Sun.

ONLY A RED PLUME.

The "Red Plume," by Jacquet (Jean Gustave), is the way the Loan exhibition catalogue has it. It hangs in one corner of the east gallery in the Academy of Design. It is a picture of a feather, of furs, of a bodice of black, and incidentally a portrait of a woman's face, oval, dark, large eyed, red lipped.

Smith, the artist, passes it by. He knows it well. So does Mrs. Jones, the critic, and portly Brown, the collector. Its only admirers are three chattering misses. These make way presently for the very old gentleman and madame, his wife, and go into another gallery to chatter some more.

He is tall and spare. His cheeks are pink, and his hair is silver white. Madame wears her hair in three little curls on each side of her face, like the other lady—she of the court of King George—framed in the next gallery. And both pause before the lady in the scarlet plume whose face turns back the years for each.

"Her very face," the old gentleman muses, and as he muses he sees a youngster in his school days and a beautiful girl whose glorious hair is crowned by a red plume. It is near an old stone house by the sea, and the youth is himself. He was home from school for his summer holidays when he first met Cousin May. Her mother had died, and she had come to make his home her own. He learned this after he reached the house. He didn't know this when he jumped from the wagon at the gate and started up the path that led through the grove to give his mother a surprise. He was therefore mystified when a little maiden stepped from the arbor and held out her hand.

"You're Richard, aren't you?"

"Yes," he said.

"I'm Cousin May. I've heard a great deal about you, and I want you to like me, because I am going to live with Uncle Richard and you."

And he did like her from that moment. They walked to the house hand in hand, and from that day Cousin Richard and Cousin May shared their sports. They rowed together on the bay, and Richard taught her how to swim. She rode his pony and spoiled his dog with kindness. They built little boats and set them adrift, thin paper sails spread out to the wind and their sharp prows pointed toward the reef beyond which rolled the surf. They tramped over the hills hunting for birds' nests, looking for rabbits burrows and following the idle squirrel along the old stone wall. They gathered wild flowers and four leafed clover. That is the way the summer passed. He was 17. Cousin May was three years younger.

But the red plume!

At the thought of it the old gentleman smiles, and in the painted face he almost sees an answer.

The red plume! It was the last night of his holiday. He left for school early the next morning. John had carried his trunk down stairs, and it stood open in the hall waiting for the treasures that his mother would stow away after he had gone to sleep—frosted cakes and apples and a little purse, a round, fat little purse that jingled when it was shaken.

Cousin May had slipped away in the afternoon, and he had spent an hour or more in searching for her. He found her in the arbor near the gate, where he had met her first. Her eyes were red, and when he called she hid her face and pretended that she did not hear him. When he came behind her and put his arm around her waist, she boxed his ears, laughed and ran away. When she was out of reach, she stopped and put on the scarlet plume.

It was of maple leaves, red with the early autumn frost, and it trailed from the crown over the side of her hat and fell on her shoulder, half hidden in her black, tangled hair.

Not the same plume the painted woman wears, but like it in color and grace, very like it, only prettier.

Then she laughed again, and permitting herself to be caught the cousins walked back to the house, and she was gayer than he had ever seen her before.

"One would think, little May, that you are glad to see me go away," he said as they stood at the door.

"I am, if you are glad to go."

"You know I'm not. You know I—" and he caught at her hand. But she darted away with another laugh and ran upstairs, blowing him a kiss from the tips of her fingers.

Unhappy Cousin Richard! And again the old gentleman sighs.

After tea they sat by themselves in the corner of the library under the big lamp, and May was strangely good to him. She talked about his pony and made rash promises as to his dog—the spoiled dog. She said that she would write to him and even promised to send her picture by and by, and then she asked:

"Do you read hands, Consin Richard?"

"I could read you hand,'" he said.

"As well as the old gypsy does?"

"Just as well. Try me."

"Take it, and be sure that you read nice things, or I'll be very angry with you."

Angry with him for reading bad things in that hand! Foolish Cousin May! And the old gentleman smiles once more at the very idea.

"Take it. Not that way, clumsy! So. Now tell me how long I'll live, and whether I'll marry a handsome man with horses and carriages and curly hair"—Richard's hair was straight as stretched fiddle strings—and always be happy. Can you tell me all that?"

"Your life line," said Richard gravely, tracing the narrow crease with his finger, "is long and clear. You will live to be very old."

"I want to live to be very old, like grandma, and wear a beautiful black silk dress. I've always wanted that. Go on. Will I marry?"

"You will have horses, and a carriage, and a horse to ride, and dogs, and a yacht that can sail out on the sea, and you will live in an old stone house in a grove of trees, and——"

"Will my—my—husband have curly hair?"

"No, he won't. He'll have brown hair as straight as strings, but he'll love you all the same, and you'll be as happy as happy can be, you and he, and——"

"Why, Cousin Richard, where do you see that? You are not looking at my hand at all. You can't tell my fortune by looking into my eyes; besides that you hurt my hand, you are so strong and so clumsy, and I don't believe that I'll live to be very old now either, and you are a very rude boy."

The next morning as the rising sun made a golden pathway over the still waters of the bay, Cousin Richard rode down the lane, through the grove, and if he saw a little hand, with a very long life line in its palm, waving a handkerchief from a dormer window, he made no sign.

The girl with the red plume? Did she marry the man with the curly hair? Alas for Cousin Richard's soothsaying! Before he came back from school they had laid her away in the graveyard by the sea, and over her grave they put a graven tablet, saying, "May, aged 15."

And the very old gentleman sighs again, and rubbing his glasses as though they were damp he rises from the settee in front of the picture and goes into the portrait gallery, forgetting for the moment that his wife is with him.

Madame, his wife, hears his sigh and echoes it, and down in her heart she feels a throb that hurts. From the other galleries there comes the sound of laughter and of women speaking as women laugh and talk in the playhouses between the acts.

"He has not forgotten her," says madame to herself, "and that was 40 years ago. He never will forget her," and she draws her lips together tightly.

From the street is heard the music of a strolling hand organ player, and to madame it recalls one night—a night that she has never forgotten, although it was 40 years ago. It was at the play that she first saw the woman with the red plume. She was an actress, tall, lithe, graceful and beautiful. Her voice was low-toned and soft, and she purred like a cat as she took off her hat with its sweeping plume and caressed the face of her lover. She took off her hat so that she could kiss him, the shameless thing, and she told him she loved him. Then it was that she frowned. There was something about this woman that she did not like, and the madame herself was young 40 years ago, tall, slender and beautiful. Perhaps it was her voice, maybe her large black eyes—luring eyes—or possibly her lips—siren's lips, full and rose red, or the wanton plume. It made no difference which. She disliked her intuitively. Some persons do not believe in a woman's intuition.

And madame smiles grimly as she thinks of this incredulity.

Her husband liked this red plumed woman from the first—this very old gentleman, then young and straight. He watched her every gesture. He signed at her distress. He rejoiced in her triumph, and be it said to his discredit he almost envied the curly haired man whose face she purred over and caressed. This very old gentleman was a very human young man a long generation ago, and she was only an actress.

Madame would have forgotten this first night, however, had it not been for the supper. That she never has forgotten nor forgiven and never will. It wasn't his fault—so he said. This was the way it happened: They gave a supper to Marie—that was the name of the actress—the members of his club, and he was forced to go. It would not have done to have staid at home. He tried, weakly, to be sure, to make excuses; he had business to attend to; he had another engagement; he had promised to dine with madame at home, but he was laughed at, poohpoohed. And so he went. This much he has confessed humbly and penitently.

It was a harmless supper. This he has asserted boldly and with emphasis. There were other actresses present and also the curly haired man who was Marie's husband. It was a supper such as madame might have sat down to herself. There were music and wine, some stories, a few songs, and then he went home. He never saw her afterward.

And when she thinks of this madame smiles again more grimly even than before.

She would not have cared so much about the supper, however indiscreet that might have been, had it not been for the letter which she found years afterward in the old desk where the very old gentleman keeps his papers—a little faded letter tied round with a lock of coal black hair and a bit of scarlet ribbon. It was this letter that made her heart throb as it has not done since the morning that he had made his confession and his peace.

This is what the letter said:

MY DEAR, FOOLISH DICK—So you went away without bidding me good-by. How silly! As if I minded your rage at the man with the curly hair. You know I always liked straight hair the best. And so you were vexed. Well it serves you right, for you are a very rude, clumsy boy, and my hand hurts me still. I shall never forget you. Be a good boy and write soon to your loving

MAY.

That is the letter that madame found in the desk. She will look for it again to-morrow—to-night—and if she finds it still she will speak her mind.

And again madame smiles unpleasantly.

"Are you ready, my love?" asks the very old gentleman.

"Quite."

"A very pretty face, don't you think so? It reminds me of some one I used to know."

"I don't like the face. It's bold. Let us go home."

And as they go down stairs, arm in arm, the very old gentleman wonders at her taste, and thinking of the plume of autumn maples, the graven tablet by the sea and the little faded letter in his desk he sighs once more.

"What a lovely face!"

"What a beautiful plume! George, I wish you'd buy me a hat like that. Will you, dear?"

"Yes, dear."—Benjamin Northrop in New York Mail and Express.

THE BURGLAR.

It was much too fine a night to think of going to bed at once, and so, although the witching hour of 9 p.m. had struck, Edward and I were still leaning out of the open window in our nightshirt, watching the play of the cedar branch shadows on the moonlit lawn, and planning schemes for the sunshiny morrow. From below, strains of the jocund piano declared that the Olympians were enjoying themselves in their listless impotent way; for the new curate had been bidden to dinner that night, and was at the moment unclerically proclaiming to all the world that he Feared no Foe. His discordant vociferations doubtless started a train of thought in Edward's mind, for the youth presently remarked, apropos of nothing that had been said before, "I believe the new curate's rather gone on Aunt Maria."

I scouted the notion. "Why, she's quite old!" I said. (She must have seen some five and twenty summers.)

"Of course she is," replied Edward scornfully. "It's not her, it's her money he's after, you bet!"

"Didn't know she had any money," I observed timidly.

"Sure to have," said my brother with confidence. "Heaps and heaps."

Silence ensued, both our minds being busy on the same problem—how this condition of things, if it existed, could be turned to advantage.

"Bobby Ferris told me," began Edward in due course, "that when a Fellow was spooning his sister once, they used to employ him to carry notes and messages and things between them; and he got a shilling almost every time!"

"What, from each of them?" I innocently enquired.

Edward looked at me with scornful pity. "Girls never have any money," he briefly explained. "But she did his exercises, and got him out of rows, and told stories for him when he needed it—and much better ones than he could have made up for himself. Girls are useful in some ways. So he was living in clover, when, unfortunately, the two quarrelled about something. Bobby was fairly cornered, for he had bought two ferrets on tick, and promised to pay a shilling a week, thinking this happy state of things would last forever. Something had to be done, of course; so when the week was up, and he was being dunned for the shilling, he went off to the Fellow and said, "Your broken-hearted Bella implore you to meet this evening at sundown. By the hollow oak, as of old, be it only for a moment. Do not fail!" He got all that out of a book, of course. The fellow looked puzzled, and said, "What hollow oak? I don't know any hollow oak." "Perhaps it was the Royal Oak," said Bobby promptly, seeing he had make a slip, through trusting too much to the book; but this didn't seem to make the Fellow any happier, for the Royal Oak, you know, is rather a low sort house, as pubs go. At last the Fellow said, 'Well, I think I know where she means; the hollow tree in your father's paddock. It happens to be an elm, but she wouldn't know the difference. All right; say I'll be there. Bobby hung about a bit, for he hadn't got his money. She was crying awfully,' he said. Then he got his shilling.'"

"And wasn't the Fellow riled," I enquired, "when he got to the place and found nothing?"

"He found Bobby," said Edward, indignantly. "Young Ferris was a gentleman, every inch of him. He brought the Fellow another message from Bella: 'I dare not leave the house. My cruel parents immure me closely! If you only knew what I suffer. Your broken-hearted Bella!' Out of the same book. This made the Fellow a little suspicious, for it was the old Ferrises who had been keen about the match all through; the Fellow, you see, had tin. However, he couldn't exactly call Bella's brother a young liar, so Bobby escaped for the time. But when he was in a hole next week, over a stiff French exercise, and tried the same sort of game on his sister, she was too sharp for him, and he was caught out. Somehow women seem more distrustful than men. They're so beastly suspicious by nature, you know!"

"I know," said I. "But did the two—the Fellow and sister—make it up afterwards?"

"I don't remember about that," replied Edward, indifferently; "but Bobby got packed off to school a whole year earlier than his people had meant to send him. Which was just what he wanted. So you see it all came right in the end!"

I was trying to puzzle out the moral of this story—it was evidently meant to contain one somewhere—when a flood of golden lamplight mingled with the moon's rays on the lawn, and Aunt Maria and the new curate strolled out on the grass below us, and took the direction of a garden seat that was backed by a dense laurel shrubbery reaching round in a half circle to the house. Edward meditated moodily. "If we only knew what they were talking about," said he, "you'd soon see whether I was right or not. Look here! Let's send the kid down by the porch to reconnoitre!"

"Harold's asleep," I said; it seems rather a shame——"

"O rot!" said my brother; "he's the youngest, and he's got to do as he's told!"

So the luckless Harold was hauled out of bed and given his sailing orders. He was naturally rather vexed at being stood up suddenly on the cold floor, and the job had no particular interest for him; but he was both staunch and well-disciplined. The means of exit were simple enough. A porch of iron trellis came up to within easy reach of the window, and was habitually used by all three of us when modestly anxious to avoid public notice. Harold climbed deftly down the porch like a white rat, and his nightgown glimmered a moment on the graveled walk ere he was lost to sight in the darkness of the shrubbery. A brief interval of silence ensued; broken suddenly by a sound of scuffle, and then a shrill, long-drawn squeal, as of metallic surfaces in friction. Our scout had fallen into the hands of the enemy.

Indolence alone had made us devolve the task of investigation on onr younger brother. Now that danger has declared itself there was no hesitation. In a second we were down at the side of the porch and crawling Cherokee-wise through the laurels to the back of the garden-seat. Piteous was the sight that greeted us. Aunt Maria was on the seat, in a white evening frock, looking—for an aunt—really quite nice. On the lawn stood an incensed curate, grasping our small brother by a large ear, which—judging from the row he was making—seemed on the point of parting company with the head it adorned. The gruesome noise he was emitting did not really affect us otherwise than æsthetically. To one who has tried both the wail of genuine physical anguish is easily distinguishable from the pumped-up ad misericordiam blubber. Harold's could clearly be recognized as belonging to the latter class. "Now you young—" (whelp, I think it was), said the curate, sternly; "tell us what you mean by it!"

"Well, leggo of my ear, then!" shrilled Harold, "and I'll tell you the solemn truth!"

"Very well," agreed the curate, releasing him, "now go ahead; and don't lie more than you can help."

We abode the promised disclosure without the least misgiving; but even we had hardly given Harold due credit for his fertility of resource and powers of imagination.

"I had just finished saying my prayers," began that young gentleman, slowly, "when I happened to look out of the window, and on the lawn I saw a sight which froze the marrow in my veins! A burglar was approaching the house with snake-like tread! He had a scowl and a dark lantern, and he was armed to the teeth?"

We listened with interest. The style, though unlike Harold's native notes, seemed strangely familiar.

"Go on," said the curate, grimly.

"Pausing in his stealthy career," continued Harold, "he gave a low whistle. Instantly the signal was responded to, and from the adjacent shadows two more figures glided forth. The miscreants were both armed to the teeth!"

"Excellent," said the curate; "proceed."

"The robber chief," pursued Harold, warming up to his work, "joined his nefarious comrades, and conversed with them in silent tones. His expression was truly ferocious, and I ought to have said that he was armed to the t——"

"There, never mind his teeth," interrupted the curate, rudely; "there's too much jaw about you altogether. Hurry up and have done,"

"I was in a frightful funk," continue the narrator, warily guarding his ear with his hand, "but just then the drawing-room window opened and you and aunt Maria came out—I mean emerged. The burglars vanished silently into the laurels, with horrid implications!"

The curate looked slightly puzzled. The tale was well sustained, and certainly circumstantial. After all, the boy might have really seen something. How was the poor man to know—though the chase and lofty diction might have supplied a hint—that the whole yarn was a free adaptation from the last Penny Dreadful lent us by the knife-and-boot boy? "Why did you not alarm the house?" he asked.

"I was afraid," said Harold, sweetly, "that they would not believe me!"

"But how did you get down here, you naughty little boy?" put in Aunt Maria.

Harold was hard pressed—by his own flesh and blood, too! At that moment, Edward touched me on the shoulder and glided off through the laurels. When some ten yards away he gave a low whistle. I replied by another. The effect was magical. Aunt Maria started up with a shriek.

Harold gave one startled glance around, and then fled like a hare, made straight for the back door, burst in upon the servants at supper, and buried himself in the broad bosom of the cook, his special ally. The curate faced the laurels—hesitatingly. Aunt Maria cried "O Mr. Hodgitts you are brave! for my sake do not be rash!" He was not rash. When I peeped out a second later the coast was entirely clear.

By this time there were sounds of a household timidly emerging; and Edward remarked to me that perhaps we had better be off. Retreat was an easy matter. A stunted laurel gave a leg-up on to the garden-wall, which led in its turn to the roof of an out-house, up which, at a dubious angle, we could crawl to the window of the box-room. This overland route had been revealed to us one day by the domestic cat, when hard pressed in the course of an otter-hunt, in which the cat—somewhat unwillingly—was filling the title-role; and it had proved distinctly useful on occasions like the present. We were snug in bed—minus some cuticle from knees and elbows and Harold sleepily chewing something sticky, had been carried up in the arms of the friendly cook, ere the clamor of the burglar hunter had died away.

The curate's undaunted demeanor, as reported by Aunt Maria, was generally supposed to have terrified the burglars into flight, and much kudos accrued to him thereby. Some days later, however, when he had dropped in to afternoon tea, and was making a mild curatorial joke about the moral courage required for taking the last piece of bread-and-butter, I felt constrained to remark dreamily, and as it were to the universe at large, "Mr. Hodgitts! you are brave' for my sake, do not be rash!"

Fortunately for me the vicar was also a caller on that day; and it was always a comparatively easy matter to dodge my long-coated friend in the open.

THE FORESTER'S GIRL.

"Jessie," said Anton Mosby, the forester, to his daughter, "why do you persist in your friendship for our boarder, Hayes, when you know I don't like him? I've warned you often enough. When a man is ashamed to tell his business it doesn't take much discernment to see that something is wrong. He has been in our house now about five weeks, and during the whole time he has not hinted a word as to the meaning of his trip into the woods. Yesterday I saw him prowling about the old quarry, but when I asked him what he was after he said he was looking for game. A likely place, indeed, to find anything to shoot."

"Father," said the daughter, "Mr. Hayes, has always treated me like a gentleman, and, as there is no other company here, I don't see what harm can come from talking with him."

"I know that it is lonesome here, Jessie, with no one but me for company, and when we can afford it we shall go where you can have better advantages, but that fellow Hayes is not the right kind and I don't want you to have anything to do with him. I've left word with Dick to have his horse ready when he gets back, for he has got to leave this place to-day."

"Of course I've no proof that he is a bad one, but it is easy enough to see. Look at his brace of pistols. I tell you a rifle is good enough here against anything but the sheriff's posse. But I must go; remember what I say and don't look for me back before night." and Mosby turned away.

Anton Mosby's occupation was to protect a large section of pine timber owned by an eastern company from encroachments by rival firms and necessitated long tramps along the boundaries of the great forest estate. His home was located in a small clearing not large enough to escape the shadows of the trees for more than half of the day.

The nearest village was a lumbering town about 15 miles distant. From this village ran a narrow, scraggy road out into the forest, past Mosby's house, and then at the distance of a mile or so divided, one branch turning south and leading somewhere in the direction of civilization, the other running several miles northward and ending in an old quarry which was dug in the side of a rocky ledge.

After Mosby's departure Jessie went on with her work indoors with a heavy heart. Her father's suspicion that the man Hayes, who had been sojourning with them, was only a refugee from justice, pained her. He had always been very obliging about the house, had books in his saddle bags and sometimes read aloud to her, which was a matter of real entertainment, and while she did not care for him she felt extremely sorry for the treatment he received at her father's hands. She had to confess, however, on thinking it over, that it was a queer place for a man to come whose only occupation was pleasure. The hunting was poor, the woods damp and gloomy, and the ledge in the distance inhabited mostly by snakes.

Her father had an idea that some day an officer of the law would ride into their little clearing and demand a prisoner; that a scene would follow, and the prisoner, escaping, would seek safety in the slimy caves which penetrated the sides of the limestone ledge.

Hayes was an ordinary looking man of about 5 feet 10, hair brown, eyes blue and rather quick and nervous in his speech. It was a suspicion of embarrassment in the latter respect when questioned as to his business that first led Mosby to observe his actions, and his preference for the old quarry road, which was rough and swampy and led through a tangled growth of underbrush, seemed evidence enough that he belonged to those who prefer darkness rather than light.

These suspicions made Mosby, naturally a hospitable man, cold and satirical, and many an arrow of sarcasm was plumed for his victim's breast, but Hayes usually seemed perfectly oblivious of their meaning, a fact which only further determined Mosby in the belief that he was a bad one.

The season had been exceedingly dry; for nearly a month not a drop of rain had fallen. The sand lay in drifts in the middle of the road and blew away from the roots of the trees.

During the previous weeks a great fire had been raging to the northward, several towns being razed to the ground and a wide stretch of timber ruined. The ledge of rocks referred to ran in a crescent and acted as a barrier to the flames, so that the country over which Mosby presided was left unharmed, but the smoke spread its mantle of gloom over many miles of contiguous territory.

The great northern section, however, where the fires had been so destructive, was inhabited by wolves, which now, goaded by fire and hunger, sought safety to the southward. Mosby saw them frequently, and their baying could be heard at night while prowling through the woods in search of food, but they were a cowardly lot that ran at the sight of a man, and no one experienced any uneasiness.

"Wolves," he used to say to Hayes, "are about all the game you will find about these quarters, but if you want to kill any you'd better throw away your six shooter and get a rifle, for all the things are good for is to kill men, and I reckon the people around here are a peaceable lot.

"Of course it might be a good thing if one wanted to escape from a constable but we are presuming that you want to kill animals." But his arguments as to the relative merits and uses of the two weapons had little effect on Hayes, who still continued to carry the pistols and make excursions not into the woods where Mosby ventured, "there might be a stray deer if one happened to see it," out toward the quarry or the hills.

Whether Mosby wanted to keep watch of his strange boarder's actions that day, or whether his business led in that direction, we cannot say, but he spent the afternoon exploring the timber abutting the highlands. His observations were quite minute and the sun was beginning to redden the clouds in the west when he started for home, and by the time he had reached the road it had become quite dark. He had about eight miles to cover, but the way was so rough that he made slow progress.

Here and there a moonbeam glistened on a sandy opening, but for a greater part of the time the foliage of the trees entirely obscured the light so he slumped wearily along, musing upon the events of the previous weeks and wondering where Hayes had gone to spend the night.

A warm breeze swayed the tops of the huge pines; this and the sticks which crackled under his feet were all that broke the silence of the night—all until from the distance came suddenly to his ears the hoarse baying of a wolf. From time to time it was repeated until from another direction, across an answering howl, prolonged and mournful.

Mosby plodded along, giving little heed except wishing that he could get a sight on one of the "varmints" in a bright spot of moonlight. The howling of the wolves gradually became more frequent and began to sound nearer and nearer. Mosby came to a halt and examined the condition of his gun and then, although feeling that the rifle insured his safety, began to hasten his steps. By the time he had covered another half mile he knew that there was danger behind, for the weird sound had increased into a din and an uproar. They were evidently on his trail and rapidly approaching, dozens of them, perhaps, courageous, at last from the strength of numbers.

He realized that there would be scant time for reloading a gun after once firing, and looked about for a tree which he could climb and pick them off one at a time, but where there were trees the darkness was so deep that the project had to be abandoned as impracticable, and he could not endure the thought of remaining a prisoner all night in the uncomfortable branches of a pine tree on account of a few wolves. This decision was scarcely reached, when he would gladly have changed it, for a moment later the wolves reached the road behind him and were coming along at long leaps, filling the air with their mournful screams.

Mosby, still cool and collected, raised his rifle to his shoulder. A gray form flashed in the light a little distance away and he fired. The howling of the pack suddenly ceased as one of their number rolled in the sand, and Mosby, after reloading, started on a trot toward a small opening. Before he reached it they were in pursuit again, it seemed as if in greater fury than ever, notwithstanding they had first feasted on the flesh of a comrade.

Mosby fired again, but missed his aim. For a moment they hesitated, their eyes shining in the darkness, and then, gnashing their fangs, rushed forward into the light. Mosby's heavy rifle whirled around his head and descended on the skull of the foremost wolf, but the beasts, crazed with hunger, had lost all fear and Mosby saw that he had met his fate. A wave of sorrow for poor Jessie, left all alone in such a country, welled up in his heart and then, gritting his teeth in anger, he grasped his gun stock tighter and struck again. This blow was his last, for the next instant he was borne to the ground.

Bang, bang, bang, suddenly run through the forest. A wolf with his fangs buried in Mosby's arm released his hold; another tearing furiously at his breast fell dead. The air resounded with quick reports and Mosby, weak and almost dying, saw the suspicious boarder rush into the fray, a repeater in each hand.

When he next opened his eyes he was at home and Jessie by his side. "Where is Hayes?" he murmured.

"Here, father," she answered, and Hayes stepped forward from the shadow where he had been sitting.

The old man would have given him his hand, but his arms were limp and lifeless.

"You saved my life," he murmured gratefully, "and I reckon your kind of weapons are the best, after all, among wolves. You must stay with us the whole season and Jessie and I will do our best to entertain you."

"Hayes smiled. "It was a lucky thing you sent me away, Mr. Mosby, for otherwise I would not have been on the quarry road and saved you. I finished my work here yesterday, and so when Dick told me that I must go I started for the quarry to get some things. Jessie has told me what you feared I was and I do not blame you. It did look suspicious, and I often felt ashamed that I had to keep so quiet, but my time has been spent prospecting for iron and negotiating purchases of land.

"I am the junior partner in a firm which expects to establish a mine in this vicinity and came here enjoined to absolute secrecy. The business is now where this is no longer necessary, for we have contracted for all the land we want except one corner, probably the richest in ore, however, of all."

Hayes then opened his papers and showed a plan of the grounds.

"Why," cried Mosby, "that corner belongs to me, and it's the most worthless piece of ground on the footstool. I've always been ashamed to claim ownership."

"Do you wish to sell it, Mr. Mosby?" asked Hayes.

"Sell it," returned Mosby. "Take it for nothing. Bring me the paper and I will sign the deed."

Hayes acted with alacrity; he found a form, filled in some figures and held it in front of the old man.

"For and in consideration of $20,000!" gasped Mosby. "What does it mean?"

"It means," replied Hayes, "that I consider it a reasonable bargain for our firm at that price."

The old man recovered entirely during the course of a few months. Mr. Hayes the following year was frequently a boarder with Jessie and her father, but one August day there was a wedding and Jessie went to board with him.—Chicago News.

DON'T TRUST A CROW.

The Cunning Bird is Bound to Come Out Ahead of You

"A crow is the slickest bird flying when it wants to be," said Lige Thomner, as he sat on the edge of a soap box at Williams' store at Long Hill Centre Conn., "and to prove it I will tell a circumstance that occurred when a party of us were camping at Canaan Mountain pond last fall.

"There were an almighty lot of crows around the hut we occupied, and one day I brought out my gun and shot into the flock. All escaped my shot except one, which was lying on the ground wounded. I went to the place and picked the wounded bird up and found that its left leg had been broken by the shot. Taking the crow to the hut I amputated the leg, and, taking a hot coal from the fire, I burned the stump so that it would not bleed. The bird was then allowed to go at liberty, but, instead of leaving the vicinity of the camp, it hung around, and the boys would feed it with crumbs from the table, and it became quite tame. It would come limping into camp just like a veteran after his pension.

"At about meal time the crow could be expected at first, but at last its visits became more frequent. One of the boys hinted that the bird we were feeding was not the victim of my gunshot, and in investigating this theory we found out what a great deceiver the crow is. Up the alley leading to the spot where the bird had been in the habit of receiving its food there hopped one day a fine black crow. There was nothing about the bird to show that it was not the same one that had been the object of our bounty so long. It had only one leg so far as we could see.

"'I'll bet that ain't our crow,' said Charley.

"'Yes it is, too,' I says; 'it only has one leg.'

"'You wait and see,' says Charley, and away he hurried and returned with his gun. Raising it and taking careful aim he fired and the bird stretched over on the ground dead. We made an examination, and sure enough the bird had two legs as good and sound as any bird flying. When it had come into our camp it had hitched the other up under its wing so as to deceive us and secure feed. It must have watched us feeding the wounded bird and saw an opportunity of securing food by imitating that one. All crows are so near alike there is no identifying one, and the only way we knew ours was by the one leg. When such a clever imitator attacked us we were badly fooled. I do not know what became of the real wounded bird. It never showed up after the other was killed. I don't know but that we had been feeding the bogus bird for the real one for weeks before we found out our mistake as it was."—New York Sun.

ALD. A. F. STAGG, OF BROCKVILLE, ONT.

Had Tried all the Local Doctors, but Failed to be Benefited.

ALD. A. F. STAGG, BROCKVILLE, ONT.

A citizen whose influence carries a good premium in the growing town of Brockville is Ald. A. F. Stagg, an extensive stock dealer in that section of the province. For over fifty years he has carried on business in Brockville. The people know the man. How much he has accomplished during this half century in building up the municipality is known to them, and they have been ready to show their appreciation of these labors by making him a town father. Mr. Stagg, however, failed just where so many other men of active and aggressive temperament fail, namely, in exceeding his strength. About two years ago his nervous system became broken and shattered, and he was unable to do work of any kind. This was a serious blow to a man of so active a temperament, and with the volume of business he had on hand. He did what any one else would do, and which is the natural thing to do, sought the assistance of the local doctors of the place. He tried not only one but all of them. Whatever the trouble was they seemed unable to master it, and did him no good. He went to Kingston, hoping to find greater medical skill in the Limestone City. He was no better off for his trouble. A friend influenced him to visit Massena Springs, it being believed that the peculiar charm that surrounds that spot would have its effect in giving back to Mr. Stagg his lost health. But it was simply a case of history repeating itself everything failed, and he remained home in utter despair, seeing nothing but early death before him. His neighbor, a Mrs. Johnston, who had been using Nervine with great success, recommended him to try a bottle. It cannot be said that he did so with any bright hopes of being benefited. To his great delight, however, he found almost instant relief. After taking several bottles he to-day says, in his own words, that he enjoys perfect health. To those who do not know the particular virtues of South American Nervine all this may sound like a miracle. Here was a man whose condition was known to every one in Brockville, for everyone knew Ald. Stagg, who was completely broken up in health, and whose disease the best medical skill could not relieve, much less remove, and yet a few bottles of this wonderful discovery, Nervine gives back to him the health that two years previous he had completely lost. This is what Nervine will do in every case. Physicians fail usually because they doctor, as it were, on the surface. Nervine succeeds in every case because it immediately acts upon the nerve centers of the body, from which, as science has unmistakably demonstrated, flows the life blood of the system. When these nerve centers are kept in healthful condition disease that may exist in any part of the body speedily becomes an unknown thing.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of to-day, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

ROSEBERY WILL RESIGN.

He Smarts Under the Attacks of Labouchere and Dilke.

HIS HEALTH IS ALSO BROKEN DOWN

Depressed by the Fact That He Has to Leave London Nightly to Obtain Sleep and Taking the Attacks of Labouchere and Dilke to Heart—Efforts to Induce Him to Change His Mind Are Being Made, But No Success Is Anticipated.

New York, March 4.—Ballard Smith cables from London to The World: The speedy retirement of Mr. Gladstone from the post of Prime Minister I was able to predict 14 months ago, as well as the certain succession of Lord Rosebery. The possibility of the latter event especially was scouted at that time by every prominent English newspaper of both parties and by all the English correspondents of New York newspapers.

Now I can assert the very strong probability of the speedy resignation of Lord Rosebery, for personal reasons, even while the present majority in the House of Commons remains assured to him.

He is still suffering from a severe attack of influenza, but that would give little concern to his friends and physicians if it were not complicated by insomnia, which has been almost chronic for a year or more. The sleeplessness began after an attack of scarlatina, seven years ago, but it has increased lately to such a degree that for several months he has found it impossible to sleep in London, going nearly every night to one of his two country seats near London, to Brighton or to the residence of one of his Rothschild connections.

The depression which is the invariable consequence of the influenza has so affected him, I have high authority for saying, that only the influence of Lord Tweedmouth, a man of strong will, robust courage and highly-trained political knowledge, has prevented the Prime Minister's resignation within the past two days. Both Lord Tweedmouth and other intimate friends fear that no influence can prevent it within the next 48 hours, unless Lord Rosebery's present temper changes. The renewed bitter attacks of Mr. Labouchere and Sir Charles Dilke in the House of Commons the other day, both being members of his own party, have, in his present condition, affected the Prime Minister greatly.

On the other hand, it is well known that Lord Rosebery is intensely ambitious, has worked unceasingly for the premiership since his entry into public life, and therefore would not throw it away lightly. Nevertheless his highly-excited and nervous physical condition makes him obstinate in his present purpose.

Lord Rosebery passed a wakeful night, and does not gain strength. His condition at noon was altogether unsatisfactory.

There is scarcely a warehouse or shop employing a score of hands that has not been invaded by the influenza. Private houses are infected over the whole area of the metropolis. A thousand of Metropolitan police, representing a twelfth of the whole number, have been seized by the demon. Over 300 members of the Stock Exchange and 300 post-office clerks are ill. One theatre is closed, and the names of distinguished public men who are among the sufferers occupy a half column of the daily papers. Fortunately, the death rate is not so high proportionately as on the occasion of previous visitations. The epidemic is followed by fewer complications, such as bronchitis and pneumonia, the doctors are all over-worked. Several have died, including Dr. Holke, one of the best onown men in London. Trained nurses are laid up by the score, and it is impossible to obtain one for love or money. It is a curious feature of this visitation that medical science seems to have produced no cure. The remedies used to-day are the same as those used four years ago, and doctors are as much divided as ever as to which of their nostrums is th ebest.

The invitations have been limited to that number, as no more can comfortably be accommodated in the house.

DEAN CASSIDY DEAD.

The Well-Known Rector of St Helen's Passed Away Yesterday—Sketch of His Career

Toronto, March 4.—Very Rev. Dean Cassidy died at five o'clock Sunday morning. He had been ill for some months.

He was ordained priest by the late Archbishop Lynch in St. Michael's Cathedral Oct. 4, 1868, his birthday. After serving as curate in St. Catharines and Brock, his first parish was Thornhill, where he went in 1870, and remained three years. Thence he went to Pickering, remaining there only a short time. He then went to Dixie, and remained eight years, and built churches at Port Credit, Lambton Mills, and a church on the 5th line of the parish of Dixie. From here he went to Adjala. During his stay at Adjala he built one of the finest churches in the diocese, St. James', which was dedicated in 1889.

While at Adjala he was at the point of death through typhoid and pneumonia, and from the effects of this illness he never recovered. He remained at Adjala about three years, being promoted from here to the deanery of Barrie in January, 1890, but only remained there a short time.

When Father McCann was in 1891 appointed rector of St. Michael's Cathedral Dean Cassidy took charge of St. Helen's Church, Brockton, and became a dean of Toronto.

Pathetic Tale of the Sea.

San Francisco, March 3.—The barque Carrollton came into port to-day with a pathetic tale of the sea. Daniel Johnson and Charles Peterson, sailors, had been shipmates for 10 years. Finally they separated, and Peterson was stranded at Nanaimo in the power of the boarding-house masters. Johnson, who had a berth on the Carrollton, came along and paid the boarding-house debt, but Peterson was not much better off, for he had no job, nor no prospects of any. Johnson was in the last stages of consumption, and induced Peterson to stow himself away on the Carrollton, telling him he would die before the voyage was over, and that he (Peterson) could have the berth. Johnson died at sea, according to program, and Peterson was shipped in his place.

London County Council.

Sensational Evidence Given By Dr Caven Who Made the Post Mortem.

TORONTO, March 4.

The developments in the trial of the Hyams twins at the Police Court on Saturday were of a sensational character. The case dragged along early in the day without much life, owing to the fact that several of the crown witnesses, including Mrs. Harry Place Hyams, wife of one of the prisoners, produced certificates to the effect that they were unable to attend, owing to illness.

Shortly after 3 o'clock, however, Dr. John Caven, who, in conjunction with Dr. A. J. Johnson, conducted the postmortem on the body of young Wells, after it was exhumed at Oshawa, entered the box. The skull of young Wells was produced in court. When the prisoners saw the ghastly relic taken from the valise in which it had been placed, they were visibly affected and the jaunty bearing which had characterised them earlier in the day departed. They listened with interest to the evidence of the Doctor, which was of the most damaging character. He swore positively that the fractures which he found upon the head of young Wells could not possibly have been inflicted by a weight falling upon his head. Certain of the fractures might have been occasioned by an instrument similar to a sandbag, and the others by the side of the weight being tilted over upon the head. He was positively of the opinion that at least two distinct blows caused the injury.

The defence endeavored to show that the weight descending might have first struck Wells and knocked him to the floor, and then followed the body down, alighted on the floor and tilted over, but the Doctor was equally positive that had the weight struck Wells on the head in the manner claimed, it would have occasioned more injury than the diffused blow which the top of the head showed had been inflicted.

Witness remembered having a conversation in his office with H. P. Hyams in the presence of his solicitor, Mr. Horn. He could not recollect the conversation in detail. He thought the greater part of the conversation was conducted by Mr. Horn for Hyams.

Was any statement made to you as to the amount of money H. P. Hyams had received from Mrs. Wells?—A. An admission was made by either Mr. Horn, speaking for Hyams, or by Hyams himself, that an amount of money had been received by H. P. Hyams from Miss Wells.

To what extent?—A. I have no distinct recollection of the amount, but I have refreshed my memory by perusing the correspondence which I had at that time with Hyams' solicitor. I think that about $9000 was then admitted to be in H. P. Hyams' hands belonging to Miss Wells.

That would be at what time?—A. On the 30th March, 1893.

Did he give any securities to Miss Wells?—A. He said he had securities which he could hand over to her for the whole amount.

Did you ever get these securities?—A. I did not get the whole $9000.

How much did you get?—A. My recollection is that I got less than $1000.

Dr. John Caven, who conducted the postmortem examination in conjunction with Drs. Johnston and Spencer, was next called.

The evidence of Dr. King, Coroner Aikins and Expressman Fox was to the effect that the right side of deceased's head was upward when they saw the body after the tragedy. Dr. Caven swore, however, that the fractures were principally on the left side of the head. The witness minutely described the several fractures on the skull. There was a complete division of the skull into lateral halves from the top downwards. The posterior portion was cut off, the line of fracture running down and forwards, and going completely through the base from side to side. The third peculiarity was a complete fracture of the front from side to side. There were also several minor fractures, The right side near the cheek bone had evidently been driven inward.

Suppose a 200-lb. weight fell from the top of a three-story building, would it have caused the injuries you found?—A. No, I don't think so.

Mr. Curry: Take the case of a man standing under the weight in the pocket looking upward and his being struck with the weight falling straight down and striking him obliquely, do you think that injuries of this kind would be caused?

Dr. Caven: Certainly not. In that case it would have crushed right through the head and must have done some damage to other portions of the body, whereas, so far as I could perceive from my examination, neither the shoulder blade nor any other bones were broken.

Mr. Curry: Can you form any idea as to what distance the weight would have to fall to cause the injuries you found?—A. I do not think the result could be produced by the falling of the weight at all.

The Magistrate: How have the injuries been occasioned then? Dr. Caven: The injuries to the base are indicative of one of two things: Either that the vertical column has been driven up into the base of the brain, or the head driven downward.

There are two ways this could be produced. By the impact of a diffused force upon the top of the head, or a force from the buttocks up.

Continuing Dr. Caven said he was of opinion that if the weight had been simply tilted over on the head it would have caused the fractures other than those produced by the diffused force striking the top of the head. There are indications of a pressure on both sides of the head. It must have been a broad flat surface did this. The side of the weight would do it.

In answer to further questions by Mr. Johnston, the doctor stated that the fractures which bore evidence of having been caused by a diffused force could not be occasioned by a hammer, but might have been caused by a sandbag or something of that kind. The breaking of the cheek bones and the splitting fore and aft were caused by a heavily applied force to the side of the head.

Mr. Curry: Could a man be struck on the head by that weight with a sufficient force to knock him down without occasioning more injuries than you found was occasioned by the diffused blow struck?

Dr. Caven: No, certainly not.

At this stage the case was adjourned. There are still several other medical experts to be examined, including Dr. Johnson and Mrs. Harry P. Hyams, who will also be put in the box to tell what she knows concerning the case. Owing to the fact that the associate counsel from New York had to return to look after cases there early in the week, and that the medical witnesses for the Crown have been subpoenaed to give evidence at the trial of Hendershott and Welter at St. Thomas on Tuesday, no date was fixed for the resumption of the inquest, the case being simply enlarged until next Saturday, when a date will be fixed upon for resuming.

MURDER AND ROBBERY.

To Secure $25,000 Three Men Are Shot Down.

TRIPLE TRAGEDY AT VALLEYFIELD

The Paymaster of the Cotton Mills and His Two Clerks Were Making Up the Payrolls When a Discharged Employe Entered and With the Office Revolver Shot Down Two of Them—The Watchman Coming to the Rescue Was the Third Victim.

Valleyfield, Q., March 2.—The bustling little manufacturing town of Valleyfield was last night the scene of a terrible murder, by which the lives of John Loy, a clerk in the employ of the Montreal Cotton Company, and Maxime Lebouf, the night watchman, were sacrificed at the hand of a discharged employe named V. C. K. Shortis, while Hugh Wilson, another clerk, was wounded and may not recover. The murderer is now in Beauharnois jail.

Shortis, who was lately secretary to Mr. Simpson, the manager of the mill, had been discharged for his drinking and irregular habits, and either robbery or revenge prompted his terrible deed. The details of the crime are most sensational.

Mr. Lowe, paymaster of the mill, and two clerks had just about finished making up the pay rolls about 11 o'clock. Although Shortis had made threats of violence against Mr. Simpson and others, no steps had been taken to exclude him from the mill premises, and Shortis entered and loitered around the office, while Mr. Lowe was at work. He nonchalantly reached over the counter, picked up Mr. Lowe's loaded revolver, which was lying on his desk, and shot the clerk Wilson, the bullet taking effect in the side.

Mr. Loy, a clerk, thinking it was an accident, made for the telephone to call a doctor, but Shortis took deliberate aim and shot Loy through the heart, death being instantaneous.

Mr. Lowe had been attending to Wilson, and a shot aimed at him struck Wilson in the forehead.

Lowe, seeing how matters were, grabbed the pay boxes, which contained $25,000, and ran into the vault with them, pulling the massive door after him. Shortis then went to the door and said to Lowe to come out, as he did not wish to injure him. Lowe replied that he was locked in and could not get out, though that was not the case, the door being simply shut.

Shortis said, "Give me the combination, Jack, I will let you out."

Mr. Lowe replied, "Just give the knob a sharp turn and it will open."

The murderer did so, and, of course, locked the safe, which was what Mr. Lowe wished.

Lebouf, the night watchman, entered at this juncture and was shot dead. Wilson, by a superhuman effort, managed to crawl about 200 yards and touched the electric fire alarm button. Shortis made renewed efforts to enter the vault in which Mr. Lowe was, but in the meantime the firemen entered and overcame the murderer, after a terrible struggle.

The inquest on the bodies of the victims, Loy and Lebouf, was held on Saturday and resulted in a verdict in each case that the deceased came to his death at the hands of the prisoner Shortis. The funeral of the victims will take place Monday and will be attended by all the directors of the Cotton Company. At the inquest, at the prompting of reporters, Shortis demanded counsel, but consented to wait for the preliminary trial, which opens Monday, and H. C. St. Pierre, Q.C., has gone out to defend Shortis.

Shortis was a cigaret and dime novel fiend and had several firearms in his room. Your correspondent had an interview with him at the inquest He was asked if he had any friends in Canada?

"No; I have not," he said.

"How long have you been in Canada?"

"I came over here about two years ago; came over to make my fortune. Nice, kind fortune, is it not? I was born in Waterford, Ireland, and educated in a college there. Am going on 20. In the Cotton Company's employ I was learning the business, and was first with the Globe Cotton Company, and then came here. I got no money for what I did."

"Do you care to speak of last night's occurrences?"

"No, I do not. I do not know what to think. I seem to be just recovering from a nightmare. I have telegraphed for a lawyer, and until he comes I cannot do anything."

The accused seems to take the affair very coolly, and as far as external appearance is concerned does not feel at all the horrible crime of which he stands accused.

Mr. Lowe, who rushed to the vault with Arthur Lebouf, tells a most graphic story of the shooting. At the vault door Shortis burned paper to try and frighten them out, and remained for some time standing at the door, ready to shoot them if they emerged. I visited the scene with Mr. D. MacMaster, Q.C., who represents the Crown, and Mr. Lowe went over the whole scene for us. By actual test, it was ascertained that he could, as he says, hear in the vault all that transpired.

Wilson may recover.

South Victoria Reformers.

Lindsay, March 2.—The Reform Association of South Victoria held a convention here Saturday to nominate a candidate. Several candidates were nominated, viz., G. McHugh, Thomas Stewart, Wm. Lownsboro and E. A. Bowes. After the second ballot it was soon that the contest lay between George McHugh and Thos. Stewart, but as neither candidate could secure a two-thirds majority the convention was adjourned for a week.

CONSERVATISM IN PEEL.

Mr. A. F. Campbell, Ex-M.L.A., Nominated to Carry the Standard at the Dominion Elections.

Brampton, Ont., March 2.—There were rumors on the streets of Brampton today that there would be dissension at the Peel Conservative convention this afternoon and that six or seven candidates would stand for the nomination. When the convention opened, however, things went evenly, and though a large number of gentlemen were nominated, they all successively retired except A. F. Campbell, ex-M.L.A. for Algoma, who was unanimously made the candidate.

Mr. Campbell is a native of Peel and has lived in Brampton for 20 years. Eight years ago Mr. Campbell made a good run in the same constituency, although he did not reach Ottawa. The Conservatives are sanguine of his election this time, however.

The nominees were: A. F. Campbell, Brampton; Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, Toronto; W. A. McCulla, ex-M.P., Brampton; Robert Wilson, Brampton; Dr. Mueller, Brampton; R. Blair, Brampton; James Jackson, Meadowvale; J. W. Beynon, Q.C., Brampton; B. F. Justin, Brampton.

POSSIBLY A SESSION.

With the Elections Between May 27 and June 5, Says Tory Whip Taylor.

Port Perry, March 4.—There was a good attendance at the annual Conservative convention, held in the Town hall here Saturday. Mr. J. B. Dow of Whitby delivered a short address, which was full of patriotic sentiment, and urged upon the people to support a policy which had a Canadian dress, with Canada first and Canada last, and not a policy concocted by Americans, and in every way unBritish. He had every confidence in the present Administration. Mr. George Taylor, Conservative whip, and member for South Leeds, gave a splendid address of an hour's duration, in which the principal questions before the people were discussed. The Conservatives had the same policy with a new leader, while the Reformers had a new policy with the same leader. He gave figures, showing the enormous increase in trade with the Mother Country in the past 17 years. The farmers would have plenty of time to consider the question before marking their ballots.

Mr. William Smith, M.P., gave a short address, principally dealing with local affairs. He impressed it upon the young men to carefully weigh the facts set forth by the former speakers.

In conversation with Mr. Taylor, he informed your correspondent that the elections would in all probability take place between May 27 and June 5. There might possibly be another session before then.

Messrs. McKay and Ryckman Will Both Retire From the Field.

If F. E. Kilvert accepts the position of Commissioner of Customs at Ottawa, Aleck McKay will succeed him as collector at Hamilton, otherwise he will be appointed Inspector of Customs for Western Ontario. Local Conservatives are already figuring on their candidates. Two new men will be required, as Samuel Ryckman has also decided to retire. Among the names mentioned are Samuel Barker, formerly manager of the Nortnern Railway; F. W. Fearman, John Hoodless and J. G. Bowes.

BELLEVILLE, MONDAY, MAR. 4.

A SUMMER CARNIVAL.

A public meeting is to be held to-morrow night to determine whether a summer carnival shall be held in Belleville this year.

We cannot, after candidly considering the subject, and taking into account the experience of other places which have held such affairs, see anything in it for Belleville. Toronto made two attempts, both of which resulted in failure; and Hamilton, which made one fairly successful effort, reports that the expense was so great that it could not be repeated and the after effects not satisfactory. With these examples before them the people of Belleville are not likely to view the project in a very roseate light, or to be willing to have any of their taxes devoted to such an object.

If private persons choose to take up the matter at their own risk and expense, well and good; but if the Council have any money to spare, it had much better be expended in aid of the District Fair or on permanent improvements than in support of a project of so uncertain and unpromising a character as a summer carnival.

THE POLICIES.

The general elections, as to the date of which we hear so much speculation, at the farthest are near, and again there are two great political parties asking confidence. There are of course new factors in the campaign, the Patrons, the P.P.A., the McCarthyites—but it is an assured fact that the next Premier will be either Sir Mackenzie Bowell or Hon. Wilfred Laurier. Then strictly speaking, the elector has the choice of two policies, and he must study them without prejudice before he makes his conclusions. The Conservative policy of sixteen years' standing has made Canada advance. She has made strides in all lines. There are more deposits of cash in the Savings Banks of Canada than ever before. Her commerce has grown wonderfully. She has stood the financial crisis of the world without a break. People who listened to the tale of woe told by Cartwright, Laurier and others, and who thought that, by their stories, they could do better afar off, are returning to Canada, their first love. A colony of this kind of ex-Canadians from Michigan are asking help from the Canadian Government. Does this speak ill of the National Policy?

On the other hand compare the Liberals, who are like the afflicted, who grasp at every medicine to find a cure. They have, as a body, advocated everything under the sun but protection, and would advocate that, no doubt, if they had a chance, as is evidenced by the fact that leader Laurier and his lieutenants, Paterson, Joly, Charlton, and others have done so. They have advocated a Revenue Tariff, Free Trade, Commercial Union, etc., and what they are now advocating we cannot find out, as their leader's utterances are very contradictory. It is office Mr. Laurier is after, and his fine-spun sentiment will have to work miracles if it wrests from the Canadian people their old hope in time of trouble, the National Policy.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

The New York Sun fancied that it discovered some odd human labels during their little election fuss last year. Dink Betts and Pod Dismuke were some of their best. But how do these compare with Shippy Spurr, the Liberal nominee in Annapolis, N. S.?—Montreal Star.

To Wm. Paterson, M.P.: Will you please answer the Globe's query, "Has the N.P. made you rich?" "You had better speak now."

Mr. Laurier will do great things, he says, when he has learned just what the Manitoba schools are. Like Nelson at Copenhagen, Mr. Laurier has been putting the telescope to his blind(ed) eye. There are none so blind as those who won't see.

THURLOW CONSERVATIVES MEET.

A very large and enthusiastic meeting of the township of Thurlow Liberal Conservative Association, was held at the office of W. B. Northrup, M. P., on Saturday afternoon, the 2nd inst., at 2 o'clock.

Among those present were Henry Denyes, P. R. Daly, W. P. Hudson, W. B. Northrup, J. F. Wills, Wm. Clazie, J. D. Collip, Owen Weese, J. D. Ham, O. R. Weese, Anson Latta, Wm. Latta, J. S. Hamilton, W. A. Chapman, Wm. Clarke, John Clark, R. McDavitt, John Townsend, B. Cook, George Elmy, Hart Hicks, W. Hardy, George Cook and others.

After the meeting had been called together by President Denyes, the minutes of the last regular meeting were read and confirmed.

The annual election of officers then took place, and the following were appointed to fill the positions for the ensuing year:

President, Henry Denyes, (re-elected); Vice-Pres., J. D. Collip; Sec.-Treas., Wm. Clazie. Chairmen of Polling Divisions—No. 20, R. Garbutt; No. 21, C. R. Weese; No. 22, R. Naylor; No. 23, F. Farnham; No. 24, John Creeper and J. T. McCreary; No. 25, Bert Cook; No. 26, Wm. Clarke; No. 27, John Towsend and J. S. Hamilton; No. 28, Anson Latta, and W. H. Milburn.

The President and other officers addressed the meeting, thanking the Association for the honor conferred upon the speakers in their appointments to office, and promising to do all in their power to further the interests of the Association and the Conservative party for the continued good government of our country.

Short addresses were then delivered by Messrs. J. F. Wills, P. R. Daly, W. P. Hudson and W. B. Northrup, M. P., touching a few of the questions of the day concerning the platforms of the parties now entering the field of battle for supremacy in the Dominion House of Parliament. Considerable enthusiasm was displayed by those present at various times during the addresses and it augurs well for the party in Thurlow that with such enthusiasm and the good substantial platform of the Conservative party to stand on, that Thurlow will develop great strength in the interest of the Conservative nominee, and that a majority in the township for the candidate is practically assured.

The following resolution was then moved by J. D. Collip and seconded by Owen Weese:

Resolved, that this association desire to place on record their deep sense of the great loss sustained by this country in the death of our late Premier, Sir John S. D. Thompson. We recognized in him all the grand and noble qualities that go to make a great statesman. We believe him to have been broad minded and ready to mete out justice to all. We also sympathize with Lady Thompson in the untimely death of her beloved husband.

Resolved, that this Association desire to convey to Sir Mackenzie Boweil our earnest congratulations on his elevation to the Premiership of this great Dominion and we desire to express our entire confidence in his administration, and trust that he may long be spared to fill the high position he now occupies.

The President then put the resolution after a few appropriate remarks, and it was carried unanimously by a standing vote.

The meeting was then reminded of the reception to Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Premier of Canada, here at Belleville, on Tuesday, 12th inst.

Three cheers for Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, the Premier Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell and W. B. Northrup, M.P., closed a most enthusiastic meeting.

The Moon's Influence

Upon the weather is accepted by some as real, by others it is disputed. The moon never attracts corns from the tender, aching spot. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor removes the most painful corns in three days. This great remedy makes no sore spots, doesn't go fooling around a man's foot, but gets to business at once, and effects a cure. Don't be imposed upon by substitutes and imitations. Get "Putnam's," and no other.

No Home Without It.

Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil should be emblazoned in letters of gold upon the altar of every household. It saves life when every other means for the cure of consumption or lung troubles fail. For many years Cod Liver Oil was held in disfavor on account of its unpleasant taste, and the inferior quality of the preparations. Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil revived its use because it is pleasant to take and gives immediate results in creating new blood, and thus giving sufferers the strength to overcome the dire enemy. It is the great life saver of the age. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all Lung affections. HIGH UP IN A BALLOON.

THE HIGHEST AIR LEVEL EVER REACHED.

A Scientific Balloon Voyage Into the Extreme Upper Regions—A Height of 31,496 Feet Attained—Interesting Records.

The last and most important aeronautic voyage made by Dr. A. Berson in the balloon Phœnix on the 4th December last year is described by that gentleman in The Journal of Aeronautics and Atmospheric Physics.

On the evening of the 3rd December there was a stormy east wind, which made the possibility of the journey doubtful, but it fell during the night, and at 5 o'clock next morning Lieuts. Gross and Marker, proceeded by the light of an electric lamp, to fill the Phœnix with 2,000 cubic metres of hydrogen gas. Dr. Berson somewhat altered his preparations to suit the special circumstances and aims of his aerial trip. He left the heavy anchor behind, and stretched out the long Schleppgurt grappling strap on the ground in the direction of wind before commencing his tour. The various instruments and baskets of utensils were hung up in such a manner as to facilitate the government of the balloon and the conscientious recording of scientific observations, even during the exhaustion produced in the human body when at a high altitude. At 10.28 the command to "let loose" was given. In a quarter of an hour the balloon had already arrived at a height of 2,000 metres. Stassfurt, the place where it was filled, was sailed over in a northwesterly direction. The whole of the beautiful Harz Mountains lay on the horizon below the voyager. The air in general was foggy, and thick flocks of small clouds hid the earth now and then. At first the temperature rose. At a height of 1,500 metres it was more than 5° Centigrade above zero. Dr. Berson made double notes of the readings of the instruments, cast a glance at the balloon and its ropes, looked down at the earth and threw out two sacks of ballast. An hour after the start he had risen higher than 5,000 metres, and the temperature sank to 18° below zero, and the air became very dry. The sun rays were weak. When 4,200 metres' height was reached the aeronaut felt the first slight increase of his heart's action after lifting the heavy sand bags. At 11.49 a.m. he reached the height of 6,000 metres, and the temperature sank to 25.5° below zero. He felt a little palpitation of the heart and slight general discomfort, but was otherwise well. At 12 o'clock, one hour and a half after the start, he began at a height of 6,750 metres and a temperature of 29° below zero, to breathe artificial oxygen from the bags he had with him and with excellent effect. At 12.25 the bold aeronaut had outpassed 8,000 metres, at a temperature of 39° below zero. He was now higher than he had been in the preceding May, when his highest point had been 7,930 metres and this time he felt much better than then. He now never dared to cease breathing the bags of oxygen except for a few seconds at a time and during those brief pauses he felt dizzy and dangerously weak. But while continuing the artificial breathing constantly and with relative ease, fulfilled all necessary work. Only once did his eyes close in spite of himself, but the next moment he roused himself, scolding at his own negligence; his voice in the rarefied air sounded strangely muffled. When at the height of 7,700 metres he had already risen higher than Glashier, when the latter aeronaut took his last note of the temperature. At the height of 8,200 metres Dr. Berson thought of the two French scientists who had died at that height. At about 8,500 metres Berson reached the greatest height arrived at by Glaisher on Sept. 3, 1862, when the latter fainted away, only to awake after his companions had stopped the balloon from rising any higher. But Dr. Berson, after momentary examination of his own strength and his provision of ballast, ventured to rise higher. The temperature had already sunk to 42° below zero (Centigrade). At the height of 9,000 metres his balloon passed through and above the thin stratum of high cirrus clouds which he had noticed high in the sky at his start. The veil-like stratum consisted not of ice crystals, but of well-formed snow flakes. At 12.45 a.m., two and a half hours after the start, the barometer indicated only 231 millimetres, which corresponds with a sea height of 9,600 metres, and a true height of 9,150 metres. The thermometer stood at 47.9° below zero. Even the quicksilver in the barometer had cooled to 29°, and the ray thermometer, in full sunshine, indicated only 23.8°. The balloon now stopped. There were only six large and one small sacks of ballast left, which were necessary for descending and landing. The balloon stood above the thin snow clouds in a clear sky, which stretched faintly blue above. Dr. Berson felt so well that he could certainly have risen another 1,000 metres. But he could not have done so without risking the whole of his successful journey. At this immense height, 9,150 metres, he felt much better than a short time before. Dr. Berson opened the gas valve now and then, and the Phœnix gradually descended till at 7,500 metres it stopped, and again began to rise. Another pull at the valve caused it to redescend. At the height of 8,500 metres it sailed over a river with mighty curves; it was the Elbe, at the part, as was afterwards found, near Domitz.

But now the terrible cold began to have effect. Dr. Berson, clothed as he was in thick furs, began to shake in every limb so violently that sometimes he was obliged to hold on to the rim of the basket. In slow waving motion the balloon sank and sank, and during the whole descent only one sack of ballast was thrown out at the height of 3,500 metres to moderate the rapidity. Meanwhile a close stratum of heavy clouds had hidden the earth, and prevented any ascertaining of the balloon's position. The slow descent, however, allowed of another set of observations being taken, and now the highest temperature, about 6° above zero, was found at the height of 1,400 metres. Thence down to the earth it sank again 5°. A whole hour after Herr Berson had been at the greatest height of his trip two of his fingers were frozen, but he brought them to life again by energetic friction. In the enormous cold the barograph had stopped for awhile. In the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, the northern sky showed unmistakable signs of "water," and Dr. Berson decided that he must descend more rapidly. After a few more gentle ups and downs, he could distinguish the noise and steam whistles of some large town. When 250 metres high there appeared at last below him the gray earth covered by a cloudy sky. Now, with the drag-strap, the balloon passed over a lake and presently landed, with the help of some countrymen who came up, at 3.45 p.m. on a stubble field at Schonwohld, in the west of Kiel, on the very evening when the German Emperor, the founder of the Phœnix, happened to be staying in that city.

The ascent of the balloon had taken two hours and twenty minutes; the descent full three hours. The most important results were as follows: 1. The arrival at a greater height than was ever reached before; 2. The ascertaining of an unusually low temperature at that height, and a much greater lowering of the temperature between 1,500 metres and 9,200 metres than was ever before accepted for the winter; 3. A change of temperature mornings and evenings till the height of 1,500 metres; 4. Relatively very weak insulation even at the greatest height; 5. Humidity in the highest regions, and fine mist in the sky to the enormous height of more than 10,000 metres; 6. Snow-flake structure of the cirrus clouds at 9,000 metres; 7. Tremendous increase of the swiftness of the wind upward, for, with almost perfect calm on the surface of the earth, more than 310 kilometres were made in 5 hours 17 minutes, which gives a medium swiftness of 16½ metres per second.—London Daily News.

IS CANADA A STATE OR POWER?

On How the French Answer This Depends the Treaty Ratification

Ottawa, Ont., March 4.—Is a British colony to be considered a "power" or "state"? It is said that on the answer to this question by the French Government depends very much whether ratifications of the commercial treaty between Canada and France will be exchanged and the treaty duly proclaimed as in operation. Lord Dufferin is reported as having said that he had not yet been authorized to exchange ratifications, which is practically the last step before the treaty takes effect, and to-night a gentleman who is in a position to know explained why the delay had occurred. Article 2 of the treaty with France reads: "Any commercial advantage granted by Canada to any third power, especially in tariff matters, shall be enjoyed fully by France, Algeria and French colonies." In the French version of the treaty the words, "any third power," are given "un etat tiers." Supposing Canada, as is quite possible in the near future, were to make a reciprocal trade arrangement with Cape Colony, Australia or the West Indies, would France claim the advantages of such an arrangement in our markets under the article quoted? In correspondence which took place before the treaty was signed, Sir Charles Tupper states that the term "third power" cannot include Great Britain or any British colony or possession; this treaty therefore in no way interferes with any preferential arrangements made between Canada and Great Britain or any British colony. Clearly Sir Charles is right, but it is just as well to ascertain what the French Government has to say on the subject.

Less than a dozen Voters' Lists have to be received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Among those which came to hand last week were the following: South Brant, West Durham, East Elgin, Halton, East Huron, city of Kingston, Nipissing, East Northumberland, South Oxford, Prescott, South Victoria, North Victoria and West York, Ontario; Beauharnois, Brome, Drummond and Arthabaska, Gaspe, Huntingdon, Lotbiniere, Missisquoi, St. Lawrence Division of Montreal, Quebec West, Richelieu, Rimouski, St. John's and Iberville, Soulanges, Temiscouata, Two Mountains and Wright, Quebec; Antigonish, Guysboro, Halifax, Hants and Shelburne and Queen's, Nova Scotia; St. John city, New Brunswick; West Queen's County, Prince Edward Island; Burrard and Vancouver, British Columbia; Lisgar and Winnipeg, Manitoba.

At the Printing Bureau 97 lists are in hand; 48 are already out in proof form, while 44 are entirely completed, having been verified by the returning officers.

The total revenue for February amounted to $2,550,112, a decrease of $120,000, as compared with February, 1894. The total revenue for the eight months amounts to $21,804,945, or a decrease of $2,281,574 as compared with last year. The total expenditure for the eight months is $2,235,052, an increase of three-quarters of a million.

During the month of January the total export of hay from Canada to Great Britain was only 404 tons, as against 2480 shipped from the United States. The United States exportations show a remarkable falling off, much more so than in the case of Canada for the same month.

AGE OF TREES.

They Could Tell a Thing or Two About History.

Elm, 300 years; Ivy, 335 years; maple, 516 years; larch, 576 years, orange, 630 years; cypress, 800 years; olive, 800 years; walnut, 900 years; Oriental plane, 1000 years; lime, 1100 years; spruce, 1200 years; oak, 1500 years; cedar, 1000 years; yew, 3200 years. The way in which the age of these trees have been ascertained leaves no doubt of its correctness. In some few cases the data has been furnished by historical records and by traditions, but the botanical archeologists have a resource independent of either, and, when carefully used, infallible.

Of all the forms of nature, trees alone disclose their ages candidly and freely. In the stems of trees which have branches and leaves with netted veins—in all exogens, as the botanist would say—the increase takes place by means of an annual deposit of wood, spread in an even layer upon the surface of the preceding one.

In the earlier periods of life trees increase much faster than when adult—the oak, for instance, grows more rapidly between the 20th and 30th years—and when old the annual deposits considerably diminish, so that the strata are thinner and the rings proportionably closer. Some trees slacken in rate of growth at a very early period of life, and layers of oak become thinner after 40, those of the elm after 50, those of the yew after 60.—Toronto Empire.

Marvels of Memory.

Among those who have performed great feats of memory may be mentioned Dr. Fuller, author of the "Worthies of England." He could repeat another man's sermon after hearing it once, and could repeat 500 words in an unknown language after hearing them twice. He one day undertook to walk from Temple Bar to the farthest end of Cheapside, and to repeat on his return every sign on either side of the way in the order of their occurrence—and he did it easily. In such feats as this the eye plays a chief part; yet blind people also have good memories. The Rev. B. J. Jones, chaplain of the Blind Asylum, London, testifies that a large number of pupils learn the Psalter, and that one young man was there who could repeat not only the whole of the 150 Prayer Book Psalms and a large number of metrical psalms and hymns, as well as a considerable amount of modern poetry, including Goldsmith's "Deserted Village," but the whole of Milton's "Paradise Lost," with marginal notes and a biography. Lord Macaulay on one occasion repeated to himself the whole of "Paradise Lost" while crossing the Irish channel. At another time, waiting in a Cambridge coffee-house for a post-chaise, he picked up a country newspaper containing two poetical pieces—one, the "Reflection of an Exile," and the other, a "Parody on a Welsh Ballad"—looked them once through, never gave them a further thought for forty years, and then repeated them without the change of a single word. Macaulay's mind, some one has said, was like a dredging net, which took up all that it encountered, both good and bad, nor even seemed to feel the burden. Very much like a dredging net, and more like a strainer, are the minds of some other persons, who carefully select what they will retain or have a natural facility for remembering special classes of facts. He Had That Tired Feeling

Chicago, March 3.—Percy C. Chamberlain, a retired captain in the British army, shot and killed himself in his home, this city, yesterday. He left a letter in which he said he had no other motive for the act except that he had lived too long and was very tired.

Dr Freeman of Milton Dies Suddenly.

Milton, March 3.—Dr. Clarkson Freeman died suddenly last night. He had spent a jovial evening with his family and some friends, retiring to bed at 11. An hour later he was seized with a fit of vomiting and expired in a few minutes. Dr. Freeman was ex-Mayor of the town, and as a politician was known throughout Ontario.

THE SAUSAGE.

Its Daintiest and Most Delicious Forms—How to Prepare It.

Breakfast sausage as it commonly appears in our markets is a very course article, and has well earned its reputation for doubtful ingredients. Even where the meat used is without doubt pork, the poorest cuts and pieces, which would not be considered fit for any other purpose, are ground into sausages. It is a common thing for butchers with an eye to economy to use up their tainted pork in this way. There are certain farms, it is true, which furnish sausages that are without suspicion; but the price charged is about double what the sausages would cost when made at home. It is no more trouble, if there is a good meat-chopper in the house, to make them at home than it is to make croquettes or hash. The meat-chopper, moreover, is a very useful utensil for other purposes—chopping croquettes and meat for salads and hashes; and it is especially valuable for chopping raw meats for soups. These ought to be chopped in order to extract the full value of the juices. Such a meat-chopper for family use will cost about $2.50. A week's supply of sausage meat can be easily made at once. When properly packed in a broad-mouthed jar, with a layer of lard on top, it will keep perfectly in a cold place; but it should be made as often as once a week to be in perfection.

A simple rule for sausage meat calls for seven and a half pounds of lean pork (or sometimes "for a change," half lean veal); two and a half pounds of fat pork, three ounces of salt, half an ounce of summer savory, three-quarters of an ounce of sage, and an ounce of ground pepper. Chop the meat thoroughly, add the seasoning, mix in with the hands, and chop again. Sausage meat like this is much better than when it is packed in little cases as it usually is in the butchers' shops.

The ordinary way of frying sausages is not the best way of cooking them. A far better one is to put them in the oven on an ordinary baking tin, turning them from one side to another until they are brown on both sides. In a hot oven they will cook in this way in ten or fifteen minutes. If they are in cases they should be pricked thoroughly to prevent them from bursting under the heat. When sausage meat is used, cut it into squares or form it into round cakes, about three-quarters of an inch thick, and let it cook in the same way. The French use the richest Spanish and Madeira sauces with sausages. A little chopped onion, in the proportion of a tablespoonful to a pound of sausage meat, may be browned and sprinkled over the sausages just before they are put in the oven. If the sausages are then served with a rich, brown sauce and a sprinkling of minced parsley for a garnish, they will be a very delicate dish for breakfast.

Another good way of serving sausages is with "fingers" of brown toast and mushroom sauce. Cook the sausages in the oven or on top of the stove, as you prefer. Only be careful that they are not cooked till they are hard and flavorless. They should be well browned on both sides and thoroughly done in ten minutes' cooking. Nothing is more objectionable than underdone pork. Arrange twelve sausages cooked in this way on a hot platter. Separate them by fingers of toast. Heat a good brown gravy—a Spanish sauce is most desirable if it is convenient. Mince six mushrooms and add them to the sauce, and let them simmer in it for six minutes. Then pour the sauce around the sausages and toast.

Still another nice way of serving sausages is with apple sauce or on a bed of beans. The red bean is used for this purpose by French cooks, but a white bean will serve. The beans should be soaked over night and the water in which they are soaked should be poured off them in the morning. They should then be put in a pot. To a pint of beans, measured before soaking, add a tablespoonful of butter and a small onion with a clove stuck in it. Cover them with cold water, and let them cook slowly until they are thoroughly tender, adding water as the water boils away. When the beans are soft enough to be easily crushed in the fingers, remove them from the fire. Season them with salt and pepper, take out the onion, and serve them. They are a very good accompaniment of roast pork or broiled chops, as well as of sausages.

Divorce in France.

Divorce has been legal in France now for eight years. The first year the number granted was 1,700, the second 4,000; in 1894 it was 8,000; the total for eight years is 40,000. The working classes supply the largest proportion, 47 per cent.; the peasants the smallest, 7 per cent. Incompatibility of temper was the cause in 35,000 cases. The most common time for bringing suit is the fifth year after marriage. Geographically, Paris heads the list.

A Suggestion to Joe Jefferson.

An amusing anecdote of the veteran actor "Joe" Jefferson, showing the enterprise of a local furniture manufacturer, is now being told about town. Several weeks ago, when Mr. Jefferson was playing "Rip Van Winkle" at the Walnut Street Theatre, he found among his mail one morning a letter from the furniture man. The epistle, which was written on a letter head adorned with a large cut of a folding-bed "closed" and "open," read as follows: "Mr. Jefferson: Sir—I saw you play 'Rip Van Winkle' last night, and I have a proposition to make to you. When the curtain goes up on the third act, and you rise all stiff and sore after your long sleep, you might say a few words something like this: 'Oh, how stiff I am! If I had only slept last night on one of Blank's folding beds, warranted safe, durable and comfortable, how much better I would feel this morning.' I think it would bring down the house. Now, I am willing to pay you well for this, of course. Let me know what you think of it." The owner of Blank's folding bed has not yet heard from Mr. Jefferson.—Philadelphia Record.

Nearly a Fire.

The Oak Hall clothing store had a narrow escape from a serious conflagration this morning. A pile of coats near the stove caught fire, and but for timely removal would have caused a most disastrous fire. As it was, the pile was nearly all damaged.

No Fire Sale.

We had a small fire at the Oak Hall this morning, but we are not going to have a fire sale, nor will we attempt to sell damaged goods. We have a lot of boys' coats more or less burned, and are going to give them away to the first poor lads, ages eleven to fourteen years, who will call.

SERIOUS IF TRUE.

Edward Bolyea Arrested on Saturday Evening for a Fiendish Crime

Edward Bolyea, a carter, was arrested on Saturday night and locked up on an information sworn out by his wife charging him with attempted carnal knowledge of a girl under fourteen years of age.

The prisoner was brought up in the police court this morning for trial, but his counsel asked for a remand of a week, and the request was granted.

The little girl, who is an adopted daughter of Bolyea and his wife, and whose name was Holland, is a delicate looking child thirteen years of age, but does not appear more than ten years old. She wept bitterly while in court and the Magistrate sent her to a house for protection till after the trial.

Mrs. Bolyea says her husband made several attempts on the little girl. The prisoner told a reporter that his wife wanted to get rid of him and had taken this means of doing it. He says he can prove his innocence when the time comes. There has been trouble between Bolyea and his wife for some time on account of her love of drink and several of the neighbors think it is a case of revenge on the part of the wife, as the husband is a hard-working and hitherto honorable man. P. J. M. Anderson appeared for the crown and E. Guss Porter for the accused.

MADE WAY WITH THE CHATTELS.

A Huntingdon Farmer Tries to Defraud the Freehold Loan Company.

Alva B. Spencer, a farmer who until lately owned two good farms in the 4th con. of Huntingdon, is now in an unenviable position by reason of his crooked doings. Some time ago he placed a chattel mortgage upon his loose property with Jas. A. Chisholm, of this city, local agent of the Freehold and Loan Company. There was also a mortgage on the land owned by Spencer and by default in payment the farms had been advertised for sale and Mr. Chisholm went out to secure the property under chattel mortgage. He found everything gone and Spencer could not or would not give him a reasonable account of their removal. The agent came to the city and laid an information against Spencer for theft. He was arrested and brought to the city on Friday. When arraigned in the police court he pleaded guilty to the charge and was remanded until Wednesday morning for sentence.

Subsequently he gave Mr. Chisholm an order for a span of horses, a roller and a set of harness, but would not explain where the rest of the implements were. Spencer was at one time a well-to-do farmer, but he ascribes his downfall to hard times and the depreciation in land values.

A SHOCKING SUICIDE.

Wellington Parliament, a Wealthy Farmer Who Lived Near the Carrying Place Shot Himself Through the Head on Sunday—Death Was Instantaneous.

Our Trenton correspondent sends the following:

On Sunday morning, about 6:30, Wellington Parliament, a well-to-do farmer living near the Carrying Place, shot himself through the head, dying instantly. Mr. Parliament has been in poor health for the past five years, and lately had become quite despondent.

He was in town on Saturday and in apparently good health. While here he purchased two bottles of laudanum, which he took before committing the rash act.

It was some time before the body was found and life was then extinct.

He was a member of Consecon Lodge A. F. & A. M., and also a member of the A. O. U. W. lodge.

In Memoriam.

The death of Mrs. T. S. Clark has caused very deep sorrow, especially amongst the members of Bridge St. Methodist church, as was evinced yesterday in many ways. Her accustomed seat in the choir was draped in black, and had on it an exquisite floral tribute in the form of a harp. All of Professor Dingle's organ voluntaries breathed the sentiments of the congregation. Mr. F. Eaton's vocal solo in the morning, "Not lost, but gone before," was most appropriate, and brought tears to many eyes. The choir was so overcome with grief that it was with difficulty they could sufficiently control their feelings as to lead the devotions of song. At Sunday School, the Superintendent eulogised Mrs. Clark's philanthropy, her sympathy with those in sorrow or distress, and recalled one or two of the many instances of her self-forgetfulness, in her desire to alleviate the woes of others. In the evening, the Rev. Mr. Baker conducted a memorial service, at which the congregation was very large.

Known Here.

V. C. Shortis, the Valleyfield murderer, is not unknown here, having stayed at the Queen's Hotel in this city for two or three weeks in June '93, shortly after coming to Canada. The young man was not doing well in his native city, Waterford, Ireland, and was sent out here hoping that in a new country he would mend his ways. He brought letters of introduction from influential friends in Ireland and England to Canadian friends of theirs, several of whom tried to get the young man positions. He however retained any situation he got but a short time, preferring to live a Bohemian life. A gentleman in this city, well-known for his willingness to help a friend, not only secured situations for Shortis, but supplied him with funds from time to time, as he knew some of his family in Liverpool. He had, however, to give him up as uncontrollable.

For Miss Stinson.

Miss Niblock, of 1232 Gaylord, gave a very pretty tea Thursday afternoon in honor of her guest, Miss Stinson. Miss Niblock wore, to receive, a white mull with lavender ribbons, and Miss Stinson, who is petite and very fair, with a lovely complexion, wore a crepe de chin of her favorite tint of pale blue. The house was dressed in pinks and ferns, and those assisting in serving were Miss Alice Davidson, Miss Florence Miller and Miss Blanche Bennett. Among those present were: Mesdames Kassler, George Tritch, J. Joralemon, McCracken, Milton Smith, Barton Lester, Davidson, Francis J. Arkins, Theodore Smith. Misses Ferguson, Roberts, Currier, Morrison, Gibbs, Fallas, Sears, Arkins, Belle Jones, Fanny Jones, Misses Creswell.—Denver News.

A Deserter Caught.

Officer Morton last evening arrested Adolphus Dagenais, a Frenchman, who says he deserted from A Battery on August 8th, 1893, after having served fourteen months of the three years he was signed for. He says he has been in Texas since. The battery was communicated with and they will send up an escort for Dagenais this evening.

The Weather.

It was very pleasant with a high temperature yesterday morning, but as the day progressed it became overcast and grew steadily cooler, with a light fall of snow which was drifted by a strong N. E. wind had not ceased until 3 p. m. to-day. The readings of the thermometer were: Lowest last night, 4 below zero; at 8 a.m. the same; at noon 4 above zero.

PROBABILITIES.

Fresh to high northeasterly to northwesterly winds; cold, with light local falls of snow.

TORONTO'S THIRD FIRE!

About $800,000 Worth of Property Swept Away by a Conflagration on Yonge and Queen Streets.

KNOX CHURCH DESTROYED!

Jamieson's and Simpson's Big Stores, and Many Other Shops Consumed by the Flames.

THREE FIREMEN BADLY INJURED!

TORONTO, Ont., March 3.—A serious conflagration broke out at 1 a.m. in the large seven-story dry goods house of Robert Simpson at the south-west corner of Yonge and Queen streets. A general alarm was turned in shortly after one o'clock and the entire fire department were promptly at the scene.

The Simpson building collapsed within an hour, the walls falling on Yonge street, carrying telegraph, telephone, electric light and trolley wires with them.

A strong wind from the northwest carried showers of sparks and burning brands several blocks away. The flames spread to the Wanless jewellry establishment and Love's drug store on the south, and spread across Queen street to Jamieson's clothing house on the south west corner. This building was soon a mass of debris.

Sutcliffe's dry good store, adjoining Jamieson's building, is a total wreck. The imperial branch bank, J. F. Brown's furniture store, Charles Miln's hardware and the Tremont Hotel are in ruins.

At 2 a.m. the firemen had succeded in checking the progress of the fire on the north, but the increasing wind has spread the flames eastward.

The upper floors of several of the burned buildings were occupied by caretakers and lodgers, but so far no lives are reported lost.

2:40 A.M.

The flames are still burning fiercely. The steeple of Knox Presbyterian church, on Queen st., has just fallen and the church appears to be doomed.

The T. Eaton Company's large dry goods house, which covers nearly an entire block, is now burning.

Bonner's gents' furnishings and Toronto Furnace Co's. warehouse are gutted. On the south side of east Queen st., the Knights of Pythias hall, McCarron's hotel and livery stables and a number of small dwellings are also in ruins.

The fire is still spreading eastward and fears are entertained for St. Michael's Hospital on Bond St.

4 A. M.

The fire is now practically under control, although the front portion of Knox church is still burning.

The immense bell tower has fallen, crashing through the roof.

The church will be an almost total loss in any case.

One fireman, name unknown, was badly injured.

The Eaton big store, St. Michael's Hospital and other places previously reported in danger, escaped with little or no damage.

The loss will probably reach two and a quarter millions.

The water service, as at former fires, is lamentably inadequate, the highest streams reaching scarcely half way to the roofs of the biggest buildings.

LATEST PARTICULARS.

TORONTO, March 3.—For the third time within two months Toronto has been visited by a most disastrous conflagration. On Jan. 6th the Globe newspaper building, S. F. McKinnon's wholesale millinery establishment and adjacent places were destroyed with a total loss of about $700,000. Three days later fire broke out again in a spot adjacent to the ruins and damage was done to the extent of three quarters of a million dollars.

At half past 12 this morning a third fire started, this time at the corner of Yonge and Queen streets, the central feature of it being the vast departmental store of Robert Simpson, which was burned to the ground, building and stock being a total loss.

Immense buildings around were burned and the total loss will amount to between $800,000 and $900,000.

The insurance will probably reach two-thirds of this amount.

The origin of the fire is a mystery, but there is grave reason to believe it was incendiary in character.

Simpson's store was a six story building standing at the south-west corner of Yonge and Queen sts. It was put up last summer and a portion of he carpentering work was hardly finished. Four of the floors were stocked and two empty. The building was worth $125,000 and the stock about $350,000.

The fire started in the rear of Simpson's store and the flames spread with great rapidity.

A general alarm was rung at 12:35 and the entire force of the fire brigade was soon on the scene.

By 1 o'clock the flames had spread to each of the four corners and the fire threatened to engulf several blocks.

The steam fire engine was in action and gave valuable aid. The water pressure was good but the firemen could not pretend to cope with the flames at the top of the high Simpson building.

Wall after wall fell and myriads of sparks were scattered over the eastern portion of the city.

The clothing store of P. Jamieson, north west corner of Queen and Yonge, was soon a total ruin with all its contents. Sutcliffe & Son, millinery and dry goods, immediately north of Jamieson's on Yonge st., was gutted with a total loss of stock. G. McPherson, boots and shoes, next north, was half burned.

South of Simpson's on Yonge st. Wanless' jewellery store suffered severely in the rear, though the front was not much hurt. Neil C. Love, druggist, next south, suffered slightly. Over Jamieson's store, opposite Simpson's, was what is known as Agricultural Hall, the property of the Ontario Agriculture and Arts Association. In it were a very valuable collection of records of cattle pedigrees, and other official stock breeding records, which cannot be replaced. All were totally lost, with the building.

Further west on the same side of Queen St., was the Queen street front of Sutcliffe and Sons, which was gutted. Next came the Queen St. front of T. Eaton & Co's. great departmental establishment, which was but little injured.

Across Yonge St. the fire again did great damage. At the north-east corner stood the Henderson block, occupied by J. Bonner, gents' furnishings, and Miss M. E. Brislay, milliner. Both were burned out. The C. F. Adams Co. came next north, and the roof of this place was badly burned and their stock greatly injured by water.

At the south-east corner of Yonge and Queen Sts. stood the Imperial Bank building. This escaped damage in the lower part, but F. J. Brown, with a large stock of furniture, which was burned out, and Milne & Co., next south, stove merchants, was burned out, and C. M. Henderson, next adjoining, also lost everything. Dunfield and Co., gents' furnishings, and the Tremont House Hotel further south were about three quarters burned out.

Around on Queen street east again, the Pythian Hall was somewhat damaged, but fortunately escaped severe injury.

The two features of the fire after the Simpson building had gone, were the questions as to whether Eaton's great store would be saved, and the burning of Knox church steeple. Knox church stands next to Simpson's on Queen street, on the south side. A fire brand lit on the steeple, about the middle at 1:45 o'clock and burned steadily for nearly an hour without making any great blaze. The firemen could not reach it and it was a foregone conclusion the steeple would go in an hour or two. Thousands of people stood around anxiously gazing upwards, a fireman tried to climb up, carrying an extinguisher, but was unsuccessful in the attempt. About a quarter after 4 o'clock the steeple fell over into the street, the bell having fallen out a few minutes earlier. With regard to Eaton's, the store would undoubtedly have been burned but for the aid rendered the fire brigade by the specially drilled brigade of the Eaton employes. These were early on the spot and with strenuous exertions by being on the roof and front of their building the fire was prevented from spreading to it. It was about 3:25 before the fire was fully under control.

Three firemen were injured somewhat seriously by falling walls and otherwise, but none fatally. Chief Graham sustained a sprained ankle.

The fire spread to St. Michael's hospital and the Metropolitan church, but only for a moment, being fortunately quickly extinguished.

The scene of the fire was to-day visited by probably a hundred thousand people.

The congregation of Knox church held service in the school room, there being still all day a flicker of fire in the tower of the church, which is not, however, considered likely to spread.

The losses and insurance are about as follows:

R. Simpson (building), loss $130,000, insurance $120,000.

A Large Society Funeral.

The funeral of the late Henry McCarthy took place at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The weather was mild early in the afternoon and the attendance was very large. Rev. E. N. FIRST GAME FOR THE TROPHY.

The Bellevilles Defeat the Mutes by Four Goals to Two.

The first game of hockey for the Corby challenge cup was played on the skating rink on Saturday evening between the Bellevilles and the Mutes. There was a large crowd of spectators present in expectation of a good game and they were not disappointed. The Mutes have been practicing hard lately and they put up a much better game than they did some weeks since. The Bellevilles, however, won by four goals to two by clean combination work. The teams lined up in the following order:

BELLEVILLE.	POSITION.	MUTES.
Jamieson	Goal	Chambers
Hulme	Point	McKay
Holton	Cover Point	Lett
Thompson Wolever Weller Kelso	Forwards	Smaldon Dubois Labelle Gillam
H. Hamilton	Goal Referee	Barlow

T. W. R. McRae—Referee

Weller made a neat pass to Kelso from the draw and down towards the Mutes' goal the latter rushed with the puck. There was a mix up in the combination and Gillam got free from the tangle and down the ice he went like a shot. Holton endeavored to stop him, but the wily Mute dodged him and passed to Dubois, who scored before the audience had drawn their breath a dozen times. After this lesson the Bellevilles played more carefully and in thirteen minutes the puck lay between the Mutes' goal posts and Chambers could not find it. Weller rushed it through and the score stood even up. Before half time was called the Bellevilles had scored two more goals.

After a breathing spell the teams went at it again and it was seventeen minutes before the Bellevilles scored again. One minute before time was up Smaldon scored again for the Mutes, making the score 4 to 2. Following are the goals, by whom scored and the time.

TEAMS.	PLAYERS	TIME.
Mutes	Dubois	1 m.
Bellevilles	Weller	13 m.
Bellevilles	Kelso	3½m.
Bellevilles	Kelso	13 m.
Bellevilles	Thompson	17 m.
Mutes	Smaldon	12 m.

The Bellevilles will now have to play the winners of the Quinte-Trenton game which will be played at Trenton to-night.

A WELL-PLANNED ATTEMPT

To Escape From the Central Prison—The Nerve of Two Prisoners.

The Toronto News of Saturday says:—William H. Wilkinson, of Belleville, aged 31, and Robert A. Wilson, of Barrie, ten years younger, made an attempt to escape from the Central Prison, in which they were serving lengthy sentences.

They secreted themselves in a space between the ceiling and the roof above a small dry kiln on Thursday afternoon, and were not found until next afternoon, although the entire prison staff had been looking for them. They had provided themselves with a bag full of bread, a pail of water, several large chisels, a mallet, two formidable batons, and a quantity of clothing. They had removed two slates from the roof, and had a good view along the south wall and space of the yard between that and the adjoining shop.

Wilkinson will be remembered as the man who broke into the Marchmont Home in October last, and stole several articles. He was arrested on Nov. 7th, and convicted a few days later.

SPORTING TALK.

The Quinte hockey team will go to Trenton this evening to play their first game with the team of that town for the Corby cup.

Col. Lawrence Kip has purchased the three well-known mares, Helen Leyburn, 2:14; Autrain, 2:16½; and Grace Simmons, 2:19¼. The animals are for Jas. Gordon Bennett, who some time ago requested Col. Kip to select him a stable of trotters good enough to compete with the best on the European tracks. They will be shipped to Mr. Bennett at Nice on March 9, and it is thought that they will arrive in time to take part in the proposed trotting meet on the Riviera, which is scheduled for April 1st. Autrain and Helen Leyburn were two of the most formidable young trotters on the turf in the West last season. It is said that both can trot in 2:12 or better. Grace Simmons is also a game campaigner, although her limit is said to be about 2:15. In addition to the three trotters Col. Kip has ordered and will send to Mr. Bennett a complete outfit of sulkies, harness, etc.

SHANNONVILLE, Feb. 27th, '95.

To Mr. Frederick Burkard.

DEAR SIR AND BRO.—Whereas it has pleased the great and superior ruler of the universe in His infinite wisdom to call unto Himself your beloved companion, in this the hour of your sad bereavement, the officers and members of Loyal Quinte Lodge No. 153 C.O.O.F., desire to extend their heartfelt sympathy for yourself and family and their sorrow at the departure of such a beloved friend. Your loss is great and the depth of sorrow felt by yourself the world may never know, but you may take comfort from the fact that it is but a little while until you are called to meet her whose companionship of love you so sadly mourn. Knowing you as we do we feel assured that you will in your lonely hours find comfort in Him who alone can make this dark bright. As in your life experience "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform." We trust, brother, that in the brethren of Loyal Quinte Lodge you will find true sympathizers and helpmates, but better than all human aid we commend you and your family into the care of a heavenly father.

Oft we tread the path before us
With a weary burdened heart;
Oft we toil amid the shadows,
And our fields are far apart.

But the Saviour's "Come ye blessed"
All our labor will repay,
When we gather in the morning,
When the mists have rolled away.

We shall come with joy and gladness,
We shall gather round the throne
Face to face with thou that love us,
We shall know as we are known.

Signed on behalf of Loyal Quinte Lodge No. 152, C.O.O.F.

The Workingman's Position.

(Moncton Times)

The old assertion that everything the workingman wears is heavily taxed is too stale for anything, and it will be a sad evidence of the ignorance of the electorate if it passes for much. Under the National Policy everything that the workingman wears is made in the country, giving employment to our own people and paying no taxes at all. And if he is so unfortunate as to die his coffin is made in the country. There never was a time in the history of this country when the workingman paid so small a share of the Dominion taxes, if we leave out of the calculation taxes paid upon liquors and tobacco, the use of which is optional with workingmen as with other classes.

A telegram was received by Mrs. H. K. Lyon this morning, stating that her sister, Mrs. Duncan Martin, of New York, died last evening, at the residence of her brother B. R. Ketcheson, Esq., at one time one of the most influential citizens of the then town of Belleville, and after whom Ketcheson Ward was named. Mrs. Martin had resided in New York city for many years.

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

Reasons for Success.

The success of Norway Pine Syrup as a cure for coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles is due to the fact that it is the best and pleasantest remedy ever discovered, and because its action is prompt and certain.

Chronic Derangements of the Stomach, Liver and Blood, are speedily removed by the active principle of the ingredients entering into the composition of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. These pills act specifically on the deranged organs, stimulating to action the dormant energies of the system, thereby removing disease and renewing life and vitality to the afflicted. In this lies the great secret of the popularity of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills.

CHAPTER V.

"Is it possible that you do not know, that you do not feel, I love you, Angela? That my most ardent desire is to call you my wife! to have you with me always, sweet one. I have longed to tell you so a dozen times, but I was afraid of speaking too soon!"

He paused abruptly and stood looking at her anxiously. Angela had turned very white, and did not speak for a moment.

"I am greatly surprised," she said, at last, meeting his gaze with grave, steady eyes. "I did think you liked me, and was pleased, for I like you; but that you would make up your mind to venture on marrying a girl you know so little—it is little more than a month since we met—a girl not even in your own rank of life—seems incredible! It is the wildest imprudence!"

"That is your fault!" exclaimed Forrester, bluntly. "It may be imprudent or what you like, but I am ready to run all risks, for I know you are the only woman I ever met who seemed to be indispensable to my happiness! Don't tell me you cannot care for me, or that you love any other fellow. Speak to me, and let me know how I stand!"

"I do not love anyone in the way you mean! Not even you"—the color rose slowly and softly in her cheek—"but I think you are kind and true. Still I dare not promise to marry you all at once! You must take time to think and so must I. You must go away and consult your friends."

"Not I!" he exclaimed. "I am a free man, and able I think to promise you most of the comforts and pleasures that money can give, but, to be perfectly frank, I am not quite sure. A relative is asserting a claim to a fortune I thought my own. However, my legal adviser thinks there is but small cause for alarm." Angela did not appear to heed this. She stood in deep thought looking down. Forrester ventured to take her hand.

"What is your decision, then?" he asked.

"Oh! let us both take time to think," she said, in an unsteady voice, while her hand closed nervously unconsciously on on his. "Do not come to see me for—oh! for some time. Go away among your own kind of people. See other women. Make sure that you really need me, and I will think of you. I do not want to love you. I dread being unhappy. It would annihilate me."

"And when I may return?" asked Forrester, kissing the hand he held, thrilled by her admission that she feared to love him.

"Oh! I cannot say. A fortnight; three weeks. How long do you think?"

"Twenty-four hours," he replied, laughing. "No! I accept the test. I will go out of town for a fortnight. At the end of my banishment I will come up to hear my sentence. Keep me in your mind, I beseech you, and think favorably of all I have said. I wish you could read my heart."

"I wish I could. I wish I understood my own," she said, softly, earnestly. "Good-bye, Capt. Forrester."

"Good-bye, Angela! I will not call you Miss Cavallo. I trust you will be 'Angela' to me till death do us part. I should like to write a letter you could show to—"

"No, no!" she interrupted decidedly. "We must both be perfectly free, and a fortnight is too slight a test. You must be away a full month, indeed you must." Forrester pleaded a little longer, but Angela was firm, so again kissing her hand he reluctantly departed.

It was a bad time to leave town, as most of Forrester's friends were themselves in London, save a few votaries of fishing.

"It's an absurd freak this of yours," said Dixon to his friend and client, as they sat together in the former's private room, the day after the foregoing interview.

"Oh! I am not a London man; I like a scamper in the country, and I'll have a look at that place on the borders. I see it is advertised again."

"Pray be cautious. Our opponents seem very cocksure for some items of information that have reached me. I am rather sorry I sent off that money to India."

"GOOD-BY, CAPT. FORRESTER."

"I'm not! Even if I am robbed of my inheritance my kinswoman can well afford a couple of thousand."

"That's rather an unprincipled speech, Forrester. I am afraid it will be some time before you are put out of suspense, for there is a heap of business just now in the probate court."

"It is all an infernal nuisance," cried Forrester, impatiently.

"Very natural you should think so, but 'time and the hour run through the darkest day.' It is well you took my advice and postponed sending in your papers."

"Oh, don't croak, Dixon! I believe it will all come right, so good-by, old chap. I will let you know my movements from time to time."

"Yes, do, and I'll keep you informed of the state of affairs here." They shook hands, and Forrester went on his way—if not rejoicing, at least not seriously disturbed.

The succeeding weeks left an impression of restless discontent on the gallant lancer's memory. He wandered to and fro, finding one place more intolerable than another. He tried his hand at fishing, and vowed old Johnson was right when he described it as a rod with a fly at one end and a fool at the other. He visited various shooting boxes advertised for sale, and arranged in his own mind how the most attractive of them should be refitted and decorated to receive his bride—if Angela would consent to be his—of which he felt less and less secure as time passed by. He began letters to her and tore them up, second thoughts suggesting that he must not disobey her injunctions; but the longer he was absent from her the more intensely he longed to see her again, and the more his heart and his thoughts dwelt upon every minutiae of their meeting and acquaintance. At last he began to revive, as his term of banishment was more than half over, and the companionship of an old friend, the ex-surgeon-major of his regiment, who had retired and settled himself in good sporting quarters to enjoy the sweets of a comfortable bachelor existence, helped him not a little to get through the days, and especially the evenings. From this retreat a letter from Dixon summoned him.

"I wish you would return at once. I have a letter from Henderson, the Selwyns' solicitor, who asks for an interview to-morrow. I fancy he has something important to communicate, you had therefore better be on the spot," wrote the lawyer, and Forrester jumping happily to the conclusion that his opponents had found their position untenable and wished to make terms of some kind, and rejoicing at any necessity for returning to London, packed his portmanteau and drove off across "moor and mountain" to catch the night mail train at the station nearest his friend's house, where he had been staying for the past week.

"You have bad news for me, Dixon!" was Forrester's exclamation as they shook hands next morning in the former's office, where he hurried after making his toilette and eating his breakfast with appetite unimpaired by the anxiety, which nevertheless had grown on him through the darkness and silence of his journey.

"Yes, real bad news, I am sorry to say," returned Dixon, gravely.

"Out with it, then," said Forrester, laying aside his hat and drawing a chair opposite his friend.

"The interview proposed by Miss Selwyn's solicitor was prompted by an unusually conciliatory spirit. It was to show me the overwhelming proofs they hold of her priority to yourself as heir to your late grand uncle, and propose an amicable settlement of the affair, so saving law expenses."

"What the devil! Do you mean to tell me that I must give up the fortune and go back to the old battle with insufficient means, without making a fight?"

"I am afraid, my dear fellow, there is nothing else for it," and Dixon proceeded to lay the facts of the case before his client. It appeared that Miss Selwyn was legitimate. The certificate of her father's and mother's marriage in an obscure village church, as well as her own birth, a couple of years later, in a German town, were in her solicitor's hands.

George Selwyn, a man of weak character, had been overwhelmed with grief when his wife died, not long after the birth of their daughter, and gladly accepted the offer to adopt her made by the child's maternal aunt, who was housekeeper in a noble family, and well off for her station. From thence forward he seemed to forget that he was a father, and his sister-in-law, never quite believing in the legality of his marriage, and too glad to keep the motherless little girl as her own, lost sight of Selwyn until, about a year before his death, she received a packet addressed her in his handwriting and accompanied by a letter in which he directed that the packet should not be opened until the little Sarah was nineteen, or his brother John was dead. He had always cherished the hope of reconciliation with his wealthy, powerful brother, who would never have forgiven him a low marriage. But death took him from mundane hopes and schemes.

POISONS OF THE KITCHEN.

Some Things That Should be Watched by All Housewives.

In face of the frequent accounts of accidental poisoning, the following facts may prove both interesting and useful. In the first place, all copper vessels should be re-tinned directly the surface shows signs of being worn. Neither acid, salt nor fatty bodies will attack well-cleaned copper vessels; vinegar may even be boiled in them with safety, but should it be allowed to cool in the vessels, it will dissolve enough copper to become dangerous. The advantage in copper poisoning is that one of the first symptoms is vomiting, that is to say, the poison is rejected from the system.

Zinc, though it conceals itself so often under the name of "galvanized iron," is still more dangerous than copper. No acid foods or liquids should ever be allowed to remain in galvanized vessels. Lead, from a culinary point of view, is the least to be recommended of all the metals, as it poisons slowly without producing vomiting, while tin, iron, steel, and nickel are practically harmless.

But it is not only the vessels used in preparing food which are dangerous; many foods in themselves are legitimate objects of suspicion. For instance, the potato becomes unfit for food when it has commenced to germinate, or when it is green from having been partially exposed to the air while growing. The green parts and the "eyes" contain an undoubted poision, which has a sharp taste, and is capable of producing paralysis or even death. At the end of the winter many pigs are unhealthy through having been fed on these green potatoes or on potatoes from which the eyes containing the germs have not been carefully cut.

Mushrooms should always be carefully verified by a person thoroughly acquainted with their peculiarities. Some cooks put a silver coin with them when cooking; if the coins turns black they rejects the mushrooms. This is really no test at all, as many of the poison fungi will not blacken silver. All animal food in an advanced state of decomposition is more or less poisonous for this reason tinned fish is never to be trusted, as the fish are often stale when tinned. Smokers especially should be careful, as their taste is often not so fine as that of a non smoker and they are consequently less likely to detect a tin of doubtful fish. Mussels, again, are always poisonous, although the seat and nature of the poison has never been discovered.

WOMEN WORTH READING OF.

The Princess of Wales as a Dog Fancier —The Queen of Italy's Costly Gift.

The women's prize of $300 at the Jordan Art Exhibition in Boston has been won by Miss S. Mary Norton, by her picture of the "Kindergarten for Poor Children." Miss Norton has exhibited at both the old and the new salons in Paris.

The Czarina is fond of swimming, and is having a large bath of white marble made at the Winter Palace to enable her to pursue the exercise.

The Queen of Italy will present the Empress Frederick with A'Kempis's "Imitation of Christ" in miniature, executed by Prof. Leoni and other artists, who took three years to complete it, says The London, Eng., Queen. Sortagli has magnificently bound it in the Gothic style, and in three colors.

The Marchioness, of Londonderry, has been unanimously elected as the President of the Thorpe and Grindon (Eng.) Parish Council, Grindon being the parish in which Wynyard Park is situated. Lady Londonderry did not go to the poll, but was elected by co-optation, and has for her coadjutors a laborer, a mason, a publican, a gardener, two farmers, and a land agent.

Dr. Benson, a woman doctor, has been appointed to a government hospital in Madras, at a salary of £800 a year; in Melbourne the first appointment of a female inspector has been made; the official stenographer to the Danish House of Representatives is a woman; in Iceland women have been made eligible for municipal office; and the Universities of Gottingen and Upsala are now open to women.

H. R. H. the Princess of Wales is going in for exhibiting Russian wolfhounds (borzois). During her stay in St. Petersburg Her Royal Highness secured a handsome puppy, Alex, who, although only eight months old, measures over 28 inches at the shoulder. He is a beautiful, long, wavy-haired dog, pure white, with a well-marked fawn-brindle head, with very small ears. Alex was bred by Mr. A. J. Rousseau, by his celebrated stud dog Ataman the Great, the only gold medal Russian wolfhound in the world.

Here are some facts in regard to baths. A daily bath is necessary to health and beauty. A hot tub bath should be taken only before bedtime. Salt baths are soothing and cleansing.

Jules D'Estimanville Clement writes from Montreal: "I was suffering from skin disease, and after all drugs failed tried Burdock Blood Bitters, of which three bottles restored me to good health. I recommend it also for dyspepsia."

Beggars are promptly arrested in Vienna if caught begging on the streets.

The Medicine for Liver and Kidney Complaint.—Mr. Victor Auger, Ottawa, writes: "I take great pleasure in recommending to the general public Parmelee's Pills, as a cure for Liver and Kidney Complaint. I have doctored for the last three years with leading physicians, and have taken many medicines which were recommended to me without relief, but after taking eight of Parmelee's Pills I was quite relieved, and now I feel as free from the disease as before I was troubled."

To save life from the ravages of disease is nobler than to win a kingdom. Burdock Blood Bitters cures all blood diseases, scrofula, blotches, pimples, skin diseases, etc., by its cleansing power over the entire system.

Jutland was originally Juteland, or the land of the Jutes, a Gothic tribe.

NORWAY PINE SYRUP strengthens the lungs and cures all Throat Troubles, Couhgs, Colds, etc.

Bulgaria was formerly Volgaria, so called om the Volsci who inhabited it.

As Parmelee's Vegetable Pills contain Mandrake and Dandelion, they cure Liver and Kidney Complaints with unerring certainty. They also contain Roots and Herbs which have specific virtues truly wonderful in their action on the stomach and bowels. Mr. E. A. Cairncross, Shakespeare, writes: "I consider Parmelee's Pills an excellent remedy for Biliousness and Derangement of the Liver, having used them myself for some time."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of today, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

MANITOBA SCHOOL APPEAL

The Hearing Proceeded With at Ottawa.

MR. EWART'S SPEECH CONCLUDED

D'Alton McCarthy for the Government Puts O'Donohue, a Winnipeg Catholic, on the Witness Stand—His Statement Is That the Public Schools Were Superior to the Separate Schools.

Ottawa, March 5.—So great was the desire on the part of the public to hear the argument on the Manitoba school appeal that it was decided to adjourn to the Railway Committee room of the House of Commons, where ample accommodation was afforded. The ministers present were: Bowell, Caron, Tupper, Ouimet, Angers, Costigan, Haggart, Dickey, Daly, Ives, Foster and Dr. Montague. Solicitor-General Curran and a number of M.P.'s were also present. Mr. Ewart, Q.C., Winnipeg, appeared for the Roman Catholics; D'Alton McCarthy for the Manitoba Government, and beside him sat John O'Donohue, a member of the Winnipeg School Board, and Dr. Blakeley of the Education Department, Manitoba.

Mr. Ewart commenced his address by giving a historical resume of educational affairs in Manitoba. He detailed all the steps which led to the Greenway legislation of 1890, and strongly condemned provincial Liberals for their treachery to the Roman Catholic minority.

Resuming the address after intermission, Mr. Ewart argued that the Governor in Council was bound to hear and adjudicate upon the appeal. The discharge of functions, even of permissive laws, he held to be practically imperative. Now, the vested rights of the Manitoba minority had been shown to have been improperly taken away, and the Governor in Council could, therefore, not refuse to allow Parliament the opportunity of legislating so as to restore those rights. This opportunity could only be extended by the making of a remedial order, addressed to the Legislature of Manitoba by the Governor-General in Council. He then submitted a draft of a bill which he thought the Manitoba Legislature ought to be asked to pass. It was similar in terms to the Ontario School Act, establishing a system of Separate and Public schools.

The Solicitor-General: Does it go beyond the rights which it is claimed the Catholics of Manitoba enjoyed prior to the passing of the law of 1890?

Mr. Ewart: No, not one step beyond. We have been very careful as to that.

Continuing, Mr. Ewart argued that, as the Manitoba School Act had confiscated the property of the Roman Catholics, it should be returned to them. To show that such confiscation had taken place he called upon Senator Bernier to read an affidavit.

Mr. Bernier accordingly proceeded: He was formerly superintendent of separate schools in Manitoba, and made oath to the effect that a sum of $13,879, constituting the Catholic reserve fund, had in July, 1889, been transferred by agreement to the Provincial Treasurer, the Government promising not to divert the money from the purposes for which it had been accumulated. That promise had since been violated by confiscation under the School Act of 1890. Mr. Ewart urged that this money ought to be returned.

As to the school legislation his clients require, he would say that, while Catholics would be willing to make concessions, he was precluded from arguing to that effect at present, owing to the necessity of strictly preserving the constitutionality of appeal. For that reason he must for the present ask for a full restoration of their former privileges. In conclusion he read several extracts from political speeches to illustrate his argument, that it was only in Ontario and elsewhere, outside the province concerned, that the cry was heard that Manitoba would offer a forcible resistance to the re-establishment of Separate schools, and he made this statement notwithstanding the recent deliverance of the Manitoba Government upon the subject. In reply to a question of the Minister of Justice, Mr. Ewart said he deemed it to be incumbent upon the Government to submit some such bill as he had drafted to the Manitoba Legislature.

Before commencing his argument in reply, Mr. D'Alton McCarthy introduced as a witness for the respondents, Mr. John O'Donohue of Winnipeg. Mr. O'Donohue read his statement. He declared that he was a resident of Winnipeg, a public school trustee for Ward 3, adding, "and a member of the Catholic Church, and a regular communicant." He desired to present his views on the public school question on behalf of himself and a large number of Catholics of the Province of Manitoba, whom he represented.

From his arrival in Manitoba in 1882 he took considerable interest in schools, his business bringing him for five or six years in contact with people all over the province, more particularly in the French settlements, and it was clear to him from the first, he said, "that French schools and Catholic schools generally were not in the progressive state that the Protestant schools were."

While the school taxes should have been sufficient to maintain good schools, the class of teachers was not satisfactory, and the buildings were in a wretched condition. Seldom did he find a French teacher who could even speak English. He had called the Archbishop's attention to these facts, and a better state of affairs was promised, but nothing was done. In 1886 he made similar representations to Hon. John Norquay. Mr. Norquay's reply was that the Catholic School Board had charge of the matter, but there was no reason why the schools should not be as efficient as Protestant schools.

"I may say here," said Mr. O'Donohue, "that I don't think that 25 per cent. of the French youths can write their names, while I think I am safe in saying that 75 per cent. of the Protestant natives can both read and write."

He went on to say that when the present Provincial Government came into power he called on Mr. Martin to mend the Catholic schools. But Mr. Martin did not then think it was within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Government to do so, it being a matter which rested with the Federal House. "So when the present school act of 1890 came into force I gave it my humble and strongest support," said Mr. O'Donohue, "and have no reason to regret the course I took, but am more convinced than ever that it is best for the country and for the Catholics in particular. They should be the greatest gainers and would accept the school act if the French clergy would allow them to do so." Another grievance was that the Catholic schools were really held in fee simple by the head of the Oblate Fathers in France, who always charged a good rent for the schools.

About three years ago, Mr. O'Donohue said, he had canvassed his friends in Winnipeg and found they were favorable to the introduction, by way of compromise, of the Faribault system in force in Minnesota. He and two gentlemen named by Rev. Father Fox waited on the Archbishop about it, but his grace would hear of no compromise, adding that "he was advised by his eastern friends to accept nothing short of the repeal of the 1890 School Act." A very clever young Irish priest, Father Malony, Trustee O'Donohue went on, was obliged to leave Winnipeg in a hurry because he, too, had suggested that either the Catholic schools should be improved or the children sent to the public schools. Every day, according to the witness, Catholics called upon him to say privately what for fear of the clergy they were afraid to state openly that they wished matters were so that they could send their children to the public schools.

The school matter, he said, was first taken up in the pulpit by Rev. Father Langevin, now Bishop-elect. In his warm remarks from the pulpit, said witness, he would call the Government fact that, notwithstanding the rev. father's thieves and scoundrels, and those of his congregation that did not fall in with his views were blackguards, etc. However, the witness prided himself on the fact that notwithstanding Rev. Father's opposition, he was elected school trustee in his ward, 90 per cent. of the Catholics voting for him. He added, looking over the top of his papers towards the ministers: "You will remember the election referred to was by ballot."

He concluded his testimony by stating that two of his daughters, "good practical Catholics," taught in the public school and met with nothing offensive to their religion. He wanted it stated that his remarks in criticism of the French schools did not apply to convents, which were excellent institutions and patronized by many Protestant pupils.

In the course of cross-examination Mr. O'Donohue admitted that the French schools he referred to were "the half-breed schools." To Mr. Ouimet he said he did not himself understand a word of French, yet he did not consider that in any way detracted from his ability to judge of the progress of the French pupils. He judged of their inability to read and write, as he was in the habit of going round the country among farmers with large numbers of notes for collection.

Being called upon to proceed, Mr. McCarthy rose and stated that he objected to being obliged to go on with his argument until he had been afforded an opportunity of producing affidavits in rebuttal of those put in by Mr. Ewart. He submitted that he should have been notified of the testimony it was intended to produce.

Mr. Ewart replied that he was equally entitled to notice from Mr. McCarthy, but had received none. However, to meet his learned friend's objections, he would consent to have his affidavits merely considered as statements.

Mr. Ouimet wanted Mr. McCarthy to proceed with his argument and file his affidavits in rebuttal afterwards. Those submitted by Mr. Ewart all related to public matters that were well known. They had been before the Manitoba Legislature, and had been discussed in Parliament frequently. Mr. McCarthy, however, declared that he had never heard of them before. This claim of bad faith was altogether new to him.

The Committee of the Cabinet thereupon retired to the next room to deliberate upon the objection raised. When they returned a few minutes later, Sir Mackenzie Bowell said: "The council has decided to request Mr. McCarthy to proceed with his argument on points of law and such points of historical interest as he desires to submit. We will give him reasonable time afterwards to produce affidavits in reply to those tendered by Mr. Ewart, not submitting new matter of course, and we will hear argument upon them on a subsequent date if he so desires.

Before Mr. McCarthy had time to reply Mr. Ewart made a move. "Will you allow me to say that that would put the matter over for a year, and rather than that should take place I withdraw the affidavits altogether."

Mr. Ewart was taken at his word, the affidavits were withdrawn and Mr. McCarthy consented to proceed. But as it was now 4 o'clock it was decided that he need not commence his argument until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

SHORTISS WAS INSANE.

This Is the Line His Lawyers Will Take at the Trial.

Valleyfield, Que., March 5.—Hugh Wilson, the victim of Shortis, the Valleyfield murderer, is a good deal worse to-day, and grave fears of his recovery are entertained. An expert physician from Montreal has been summoned.

The funerals of Maxime Leboeuf and John Loy took place from the Roman Catholic Church and the Presbyterian Church respectively. Thousands of people followed the bodies to the cemeteries.

This morning young Shortis received a cablegram from his father from Waterford, Ireland, saying:

"God have mercy and pardon my poor boy."

The preliminary examination took place at 3 o'clock this afternoon. Mr. Donald Macmaster, Q.C., appeared for the Crown, and Mr. H. C. St. Pierre, Q.C., Montreal, for the defence. Mr. St. Pierre had a short interview with his client, after which he tacitly admitted that the line of defence would be on the plea of insanity.

Shortis was formally committed to stand his trial at Beauharnois on a charge of murder. When he emerged from the court the pent-up excitement of the small village crowd broke forth. There was a cry here of, "Hang him!" answered yonder by a shout of, "Kill him!" The prisoner looked upon the crowd with an expression of calm contempt and quietly remarked, "Oh, I'm used to this!"

The magistrate ordered the court, which was crowded, to be cleared, but this was only half done, and as Shortis was being taken down to the stairs leading to the street en route for the jail, there to wait transportation to Beauharnois to-morrow, the cries calling for vengeance were renewed, and an unsuccessful attempt to hustle the prisoner was made, but he was well guarded. When, however, he reached the street there was a perfect howl, and "Hang him!" "Lynch him!" and "Kill him!" were the general demands. But no one took the initiative in attempting any of the general desires.

An effort will be made to obtain change of venue to Montreal.

Massey-Harris Company and the Falls.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., March 4.—Mr. Osborne, a representative of the Massey-Harris Co. of Toronto, had a lengthy interview with the electrical power people this afternoon. The result has not been announced, but it is believed the works of the Massey-Harris Co. will be located here.

Hyman to Contest London

London, Ont., March 5.—At the Liberal convention here to-night Mr. C. S. Hyman was nominated to contest the city at the next Dominion elections.

McCleary to Oppose Lowell

Welland, March 5.—William McCleary of Thorold was yesterday chosen by the Conservatives of Welland as their candidate in the approaching Dominion elections, and accepted the nomination.

Peter Mitchell on the Warpath.

Montreal, Que., March 5.—The Third Party, in the person of Hon. Peter Mitchell, has gone to Northumberland, N.B., to open the campaign.

CANADA AND CAPE COLONY.

Sir Cecil Rhodes Offers Canada Free Trade.

OPPORTUNITY NOT TO BE MISSED

The Offer Is For Practical Free Trade Between the Two Colonies—A Canadian Commissioner May Be Sent to Negotiate the Treaty Immediately the French Treaty Is Defined—The Trend Our Trade Would Take—The Killarney Fishery Seizure.

Ottawa, March 5.—An offer has been made by Cape Colony of free trade with Canada, with all the advantages which that means, to both countries, including an advantage to Canada in the markets of Cape Colony, equal all round to 20 per cent, over us and even Great Britain. It is the first practical move in the direction of acceptance of the principle of preferential trade, which was so emphatically endorsed by the Dominion Parliament two years ago.

Substantially these are the facts. Shortly before Sir John Thompson's death, he and Sir Cecil Rhodes, Premier of Cape Colony, had a conference in London, at which the question of closer trade relations was discussed. Some time before then an offer had been made by Canada to the Cape Government for the establishment of a direct steamship service between the Dominion and Cape Colony. It was thought that if Cape Colony joined in the subsidy there would be little difficulty in rearranging the present Demerara service so as to extend it to South Africa, with the addition of one or two steamers. In talking over the matter with Sir John Thompson, Mr. Rhodes took the ground that there would be no need for subsidizing a steamship line. He proposed that Canada and the Cape should each remove their tariff barriers to the products of each other, in other words that there should be free trade between the two colonies. With the establishment of a policy of this kind and the tremendous increase in trade that must follow, a direct line of steamers would be the result without either Government paying one cent of subsidy.

As stated in my despatch of last evening, the Government is desirous of securing a definite interpretation, both from the French Government and Home Government, as to the effect of the most favored nation clause in the French Commercial Treaty They desire a specific declaration that the term "Third power" in the treaty would not apply to a British colony. In the event of a satisfactory answer being received under this head, it is probable that the Government may commission a gentleman to proceed to Cape Town to negotiate a treaty with the Cape Government. In this connection the name of Senator W. E. Sanford of Hamilton is favorably mentioned. Mr. Sanford had the good fortune to meet Mr. Rhodes in London after Sir John Thompson's death, when the Cape Premier unfolded to him his plan of preferential trade arrangements. Accompanied by and with the assistance of such an astute public official as Mr. Parmelee, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, the two gentlemen ought certainly to come back to Canada with a favorable treaty.

In view of the consideration which the Government is now paying to this question it may be well to mention a few figures showing the trade of the Cape which would be open to our manufacturers. The imports of Cape Colony in 1893 were valued at $56,161,270. These include manufactures of wool, cotton, iron, leather, furniture, doors and window sashes, hardware of all classes, agricultural implements and all machinery, paper, beer and ale, bags and bagging, wearing apparel of all kinds and many other articles which are manufactured in Canada. The exports of the Cape are not likely to interfere with our manufactures. The total exports of the Cape amount to $64,000,000 annually. Of this $25,000,000 was gold bullion, $18,000,000 diamonds, $9,000,000 wool, $2,500,000 Angora hair, $2,250,000 ostrich feathers. Practically the only thing the Cape could send to Canada would be wool and brandy. Mr. Rhodes was willing to negotiate upon the basis of free trade, and seeing that Canada has so much to gain it would be worse than folly if this grand opportunity were not seized.

It is stated that Noble Bros. of Collingwood and Killarney will secure control of their tugs, which are now in custody at Sault Ste. Marie, on condition that they give a bond covering the value. The question of re-opening the investigation is now being considered by the Government

Mr. Justice Burbidge gave judgment this morning in the case of Henry F. Coombs v. The Queen. The suppliant, on Good Friday evening, 1893, went to a ticket office at the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton, N.B., and asked for an excursion ticket to Chatham Junction, and having paid the fare, was given a ticket on the face of which were printed in capitals these words, "Good on date of issue only," and immediately thereunder, in heavy type, "No stop-over allowed." He knew there was printing on the ticket, but he did not read it. The train by which he purposed to make the journey left Moncton on that evening between 8 and 9 o'clock, and by it he traveled as far as Harcourt Station about half-way between Moncton and Chatham Junction. Here he stopped for the night, as he was not feeling well, and had business to do there. Next day, having finished his business, he proceeded on his journey by a regular passenger train. Being asked by the conductor of this train for his ticket he produced the one on which he had traveled the evening before. The conductor told him that this ticket was good for a continuous passage on day of issue only. He demanded payment of the prescribed fare, and suppliant persistently refusing to pay it the conductor removed him from the train at a proper place, using no unnecessary force therefor.

The learned judge held that (1) the suppliant had sufficient notice of the condition printed upon the face of the ticket under which he was to be carried and that if under the circumstances he saw fit to put the ticket in his pocket without reading it, he had only his own carelessness or indifference to blame for it. 2. That apart from a "no-stop-over" condition printed on face of ticket contract to carry in such a case is for one continuous journey. The petition was dismissed with costs.

It is pretty well understood in official circles that Mr. F. E. Kilvert can have the position of commissioner of customs if he so desires: It is said, however, that Mr. Kilvert is averse to accepting the position. He prefers the quiet of the city under the Mountain, Hamilton, to the care, responsibilities and hard work of departmental life.

Miss Agnes Duhamel, one of Ottawa's best known vocalists, and niece of Archbishop Duhamel, has renounced her faith as a Roman Catholic and joined the Presbyterian Church. She was received as a member of St. Andrew's Church at the Communion service on Sunday. Miss Duhamel was sent to Paris for several year by her uncle, the archbishop, to study music. It is said Miss Duhamel is engaged to a Mr. Anderson of the Civil Service, who is a member of St. Andrew's Church, but the date of the marriage has not been fixed. Miss Duhamel's step has created quite a flutter in religious circles by reason of her close relationship to the head of the Catholic Church in this archdiocese.

Notes.

The Government steamer Stanley will probably be ready to resume service across the Straits of Northumberland at the end of this week.

Major Bliss of the Ottawa Field Battery left for Toronto to-day.

Another cold snap struck the city last night. It has been quite blizzard-like to-day.

Conservative Meeting at Sunderland.

Sunderland, Ont., March 5.—A large and enthusiastic gathering of Conservatives was held in the Town Hall here to-day. Dr. Gillespie of Cannington, the chairman, Frank Madill, Major Sam Hughes, M.P., and J. W. St. John, M.L.A., of Toronto, gave short addresses. Hon. J. F. Wood then dealt at length on the policy of the Government in regard to the tariff, etc. Hon. N. Clarke Wallace, in an eloquent manner, dealt more especially with the administration of the Customs Department.

The party proceeded from here to Beaverton.

Manitoba Political Notes

Winnipeg, Man., March 5.—Isaac Campbell of Winnipeg has been asked to be the Liberal candidate for Marquette. He will decline.

The Tribune, organ of the Greenway Government, editorially advocates eliminating all religious exercises from Manitoba schools and making schools purely secular. It admits, however, that the Government does not share the same views.

MOUNET-SULLY.

The Celebrated French Actor.

The features of Mounet-Sully are familiar to Canadians, as the great actor, during his American tour, played to delighted audiences in this country. Mounet-Sully mimics the passions to the life, and there is a subtlety, an intellectuality in his delineations which places him in the front rank of great players. Mounet-Sully is a patron of the famous "Vin Mariani," and it is thus that great actor speaks of it:—"When we drink it, we sing, are gay, we love, we dream of the future, of glory, of the infinite. In fact, nothing can be better for strengthening than 'Vin Mariani.'" And this is the universal testimony, that this famous tonic coca wine nourishes and strengthens when all else fails, building up the nervous and debilitated system, driving away the blues and all despondency, and giving a new lease of life to those who were disposed to cultivate a morbid pessimism If you desire to know something about the celebrated persons who have spoken admiringly of "Vin Mariani," send your name to Lawrence A. Wilson & Co., Montreal, and they will send you an album containing their portraits, free.

BRANDOLATRY—FRENCH TREATY. BLOOD-MAKING WINES.

The public have recognized the fact that the day has passed that they should pay for labels or brands—BRANDOLATRY will soon be a thing of the past. This is proven by the enormous daily increase of our now famous wines,—all guaranteed sound and imported direct from the vineyards of France. We challenge the trade in general to prove that the brands we are offering at $3.00 and $4.00 are not the equal of those they have been and are now selling at double the price. If your dealer does not keep them, write for particulars and price list to the Bordeaux Claret Company, 30 Hospital Street, Montreal.

BELLEVILLE, TUESDAY, MAR. 5.

SIGNIFICANT FACTS.

There has been no Liberal Government in Canada, federal or provincial, that has curtailed expenditure, or lowered taxation, or reduced the public debt.

There has been no Liberal Government in Canada, federal or provincial, but has added to the expenditure, or raised the taxes, or increased the public debt.

Such are the statements of the Montreal Gazette. Can any of our Liberal contemporaries successfully dispute them?

THE POOR MAN'S TAXES.

Sir Richard Cartwright says that "In England the poor man is almost entirely free from taxes." What nonsense! In England the poor man pays a tax on his tea, on his coffee, his tobacco, his beer, all of which he finds needful; on the window panes in his dwelling (if he loves a bit of sport on his dog, on his gun,) on the vehicle with which he may have to earn his living; and in a hundred and one ways the poor man in England is taxed, just the same as elsewhere; he is taxed directly, and taxed indirectly. Almost every man who has a fairly living income, and will not perjure himself to escape it, is taxed upon it for national purposes sixpence or so in the pound.

In Canada, the poor man has his tea and coffee free, his molasses free, his sugar free, and if he foregoes the use of foreign luxuries, and will eschew tobacco and liquors, he can live entirely free of national taxation. In England he cannot so escape.

"Go and do likewise" says the contented housewife, recommending Price's Cream Baking Powder to some weary and worried sister.

A FREE TRADE FALLACY.

The New York Times of a recent date gives the following:—

"Here is a table showing the decline in the price of Bessemer pig iron, steel billets, steel beams, and steel rails since 1890:

Bessemer pig iron	$18 85	$10 00	$8 85	47
Steel billets	30 32	15 00	15 52	50½
Steel beams	69 44	26 88	42 56	61
Steel rails	31 75	22 00	9 75	30½

This is within four years, in a protectionist country! But how unhappy the Cobdenites must be! Why? Are they not getting these goods very much cheaper than formerly? Certainly. But you see that with each fall in price the percentage of duty to price is increased; and how can men be happy while the percentage of duties is increasing? But what difference does it make about the ad valorem percentage of duty, so long as the article itself is cheaper? Only Cobdenites know.

TRADE INCREASE AND THE N. P.

Grit orators tell us that trade is decreasing in the Dominion. Here are a few facts:

In the fiscal year ended 30th June, 1874, the first year of the Mackenzie Government, the total trade was represented by 217 million dollars.

For the fiscal year ended 30th June, 1878, the Mackenzie Government having been in power for five years, the total trade had fallen to 172 millions, and in the following year, three-fourths of which had expired before the introduction of the National Policy, the total had fallen to 153 millions.

Last year the total trade of the Dominion, measured by the imports and exports, was 241 millions!

There are certain articles that cannot be produced in Canada, and must be imported. We might enumerate tea, coffee, molasses, sugar, rice, articles of general consumption.

In 1878 there was entered for consumption in Canada 11,019,231 lbs. of tea (on which, by the way, the people paid 6 cents per lb. duty.) In 1893 there was entered 18,034,897 pounds of tea.

In 1878 there was entered for consumption in Canada 1,831,000 pounds of coffee; in 1893 no less than 3,594,139 pounds.

In 1878 there was entered for consumption in Canada 105,215,279 pounds of sugar of all kinds; in 1893 no less than 253,779,334 pounds.

In 1878 there was entered for consumption in Canada 8,366,993 pounds of rice; in 1893 no less than 27,862,028 pounds.

THE TICKETS FOR THE BANQUET.

Gentlemen who purpose being present at the banquet to Sir Mackenzie Bowell, the Premier, which will take place a week from this (Tuesday) evening, are requested to secure their tickets before to-morrow evening from Mr. J. P. Thompson. This is particularly requested, as the Committee will meet on Wednesday night to complete arrangements for the disposal of the seats, which are limited.

The banquet and all its accessories will be equal to the best public function of this nature that has ever taken place in Canada. The purpose of the members of the Board of Trade is to pay the highest honor in their power to the Premier in his own city; and it will be done in a manner that will reflect credit on Belleville and the Bay of Quinte district. Aiming at the highest standard of entertainment, as befits the occasion, it will be understood that it can only be reached by a liberal expenditure of money. After due consideration and careful estimates, the Committee placed the price of the tickets at four dollars. In years to come, those present at the banquet will recall with pride and pleasure their participation in an event which will have become historical.

A "MIDSUMMER MADNESS."

The general opinion amongst the business men of the city, since the experience of other places has been learned and considered, is that the project of a summer carnival is not worthy of their encouragement, as it is not likely to be profitable to more than a few, nor will its after effects be desirable.

Hamilton spent $9,000 for little or no benefit; Toronto spent a much larger sum and went heavily into debt; so it is reasonable to conclude that Belleville can hardly hope to succeed where those larger places have failed, and more particularly so as the idea has become stale.

However, the best test of the matter, if the parties who have been "booming" this visionary project insist upon going on with it, will be the response of the public to their appeal for subscriptions. They cannot expect that any of the public funds will be devoted to an enterprise of such doubtful benefit, as there are so many more desirable objects first to be considered, such as the Quinte District Fair and permanent improvements, as to the desirability and benefit of which there can be no doubt.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

Dear Globe: Does the National Policy make you twitch?

Did the Grit policy from 1874 to 1879 make the people rich? Is it possible for the Grit policy, of handing over the Canadian home market to the foreigner for nothing, to be of any real benefit to the people of the country?

Mr. Laurier has been complaining, remarks the Mail and Empire, that the Government is too slow in reaching a settlement of the Manitoba difficulty. Now the Montreal Witness finds that it is in too much of a hurry. It had the audacity to attempt to hasten the hearing at Ottawa the other day. This, however, is a moderate outrage compared with the other infamy of which Sir Mackenzie is guilty. It seems, according to the Witness, that he has a programme which will "satisfy the electorate of this province (Quebec), while not offending the Protestants or the Orangemen of Ontario." The idea of bringing a burning question to a conclusion in a satisfactory manner to everybody is preposterous, although, perhaps, slightly statesmanlike. If we had the clean men at Ottawa infamies of this kind would not have to be reported.

The Conservatives are selecting some very strong candidates. Such men as Robert Henry, of Brantford, (who has been elected three times Mayor of the city in as many contests and never was defeated for public office) for South Brant, and Joseph Seagram, the popular distiller and sportsman for North Waterloo, will not be easily beaten, despite the fact that they will have to overcome big Grit majorities. Success to them!

Good housewives never disagree as to the superiority of Dr. Price's Baking Powder over every other brand.

They Try to Deceive.

(Trade Bulletin.)

Replying to a remark made at a meeting that the Chicago market for cheese is much better than the Canadian, a Brockvillian writing, under name, "Cheddar," asks, "if this is true, how does it happen that the Canadian buyers purchase nearly all the cheese of northern New York at prices on an average one-half cent per pound lower than they pay for the Canadian make? The Yankee farmer does not often get left, but in this case he apparently has not heard of the Chicago market." How does this help the Free Trade argument? If we took off the duty the American cheese makers will take good care we don't get into the American market, to cut down their prices. Speakers and writers in Canada are too much given to making statements which imply that Canada manages the American Tariff. If they know better they are gulling their hearers or readers, if they do not know better, it would be well for them to learn just a little about trade affairs.

INSURANCE BY PERSONATION

Another Sensation in the Hyams Case.

TWO ADDITIONAL ARRESTS MADE

It is Charged That Mrs. Pillow of Montreal Personated Mrs. Hyams in the Application For $80,000 in the Equitable Insurance Company and $20,000 in the Sun, and That Her Husband and Harry Hyams Were Parties to the Conspiracy

Toronto, March 5.—Chief of Police Grasett learned yesterday that an attempt would be made to induce Mr. Pillow, manager in Montreal of the Crescent chemical works of Harry P. Hyams and Dallas T. Hyams, now awaiting trial for the murder of William C. Wells, to leave the city. Information had been lodged against the parties some time ago on a charge of conspiring with Harry P. Hyams to defraud the Equitable and Sun Life Insurance Co.'s out of $100,000, but a warrant was not issued, pending further developments. Yesterday a telegram was sent to Detective Lafontaine asking for his arrest. Later another telegram from Chief Grasett to Lafontaine came:

Before H. P. Hyams came to Toronto with the two Montreal agents, Leger and Ste. Marie, a policy for $20,000 on the life of Mrs. Hyams was put through the Sun Life Insurance Company at Montreal. When they came here the Hyams brothers went with Leger to interview Mr. George Broughall, the agent of the Equitable Life Assurance Company, in regard to a policy for $80,000 on Mrs. Hyams' life. During the interview, Miss Latimer entered the office and the Hyams, recognizing her, left as quickly as possible. A day or so after, Leger came and told Mr. Broughall that the Hyams decided not to insure in his company. It was stated that an application had already been made out by Mrs. Hyams for $80,000 in the Equitable, but owing to the abrupt termination of negotiations caused by the advent of Miss Latimer, this was never exhibited.

Miss Pillow, it is alleged, impersonated Mrs. Hyams on the application to the Sun Life for $20,000 and to the Equitable Life for $80,000. It is charged that Hyams, knowing that his wife would be suspicious if she were asked to place $100,000 on her life, induced Mrs. Pillow, with the connivance of her husband, to make out the application. Mrs. Hyams was totally unfamiliar with business matters and her husband thought that when she was being examined by the doctors she would not realize the amount that was being placed on her life, but would believe it was $5000, as her husband represented.

It is a rule of the Equitable Life to refuse all applications for policies on married women as speculative risks, unless some unusually good reason is given. When the Hyams brothers were informed of this they gave as their reason that Mrs. Hyams was drawing a large income from an estate in England, which would terminate on her death. To provide for this contingency they desired to use some of the income in insurance premiums, thus deriving a benefit from it in case of her death.

In the examination of the Hyams brothers for the Wells murder no reference has been made to the attempt to place $300,000 on Mrs. Hyams' life. The whole story of this transaction will now probably come out in court.

MORLEY'S IRISH LAND BILL.

Tenants to Receive Value of Improvements—No Rent for Improvements—Voluntary Reinstatement of Evicted Tenants.

London, March 5.—In the Commons yesterday, Mr. Sydney Buxton, Parliamentary Secretary for the Colonial Office, stated that the Franco-Canadian treaty had not yet been ratified, owing to a defect in the act of the Canadian Parliament confirming the treaty, but he hoped that as soon as the Canadian Parliament should meet the treaty would be ratified without delay.

Right Hon. John Morley, Chief Secretary for Ireland, introduced the Irish Land Bill. In his remarks introducing the measure, Mr. Morley said he believed that the purchase of holdings was the ultimate solution of the land question in Ireland, but universal compulsory purchase would take more than one generation to effect. In the meantime a modus vivendi must be found.

Mr. Morley, continuing, said that the foundation of the bill was the principle of protecting the tenant in the ownership of improvements. Henceforth only the tenant would receive the benefit of the improvement he had made upon his holdings, as the landlord would not be allowed to charge rent for improvements. Fair rents would be fixed every 10 years, instead of every 15 years as at present. Within the next two years all arrears due, he said, might be recovered, but after the expiration of that time the landlords could not recover more than two years' rent. The question in regard to evicted tenants, Mr. Morley said, would be met by re-enacting the 213th section of the act of 1891, giving voluntary reinstatement—not compulsory—in cases where the present occupants are unwilling to terminate their tenancies. He concluded by saying the Government had done its best to meet the practical difficulties of one of the thorniest subjects in the whole field of modern politics. He appealed to all reasonable men to fairly and carefully consider the matter and not lightly throw away the opportunity of placing upon the statute book a just and practical scheme.

The Irish Land bill passed the first reading without a division. Speakers of all parties approved its general principle, evidently recognizing it as an able, honest endeavor to settle a vexed question.

Costello Outfists Billy Wood.

Montreal, March 4.—Nearly 3000 people gathered at Sohmer Park to witness the 10-round glove contest between Buffalo Costello of this city and Billy Woods, late of Denver. The contest took place in 24-foot ring on the stage. Both men were in splendid condition, but Woods, if anything, showed up in better form. Jack Slavin acted as referee. The result was a draw in favor of Costello.

Smyth, Patron.

Better Movement in Cheese.

Since our last report there has been a decidedly better movement in cheese, between 10,000 and 15,000 boxes having changed hands on this market at prices ranging all the way from 8½c to 9½c, the bulk of the business beported at 9¼c to 9½c. Regarding stocks in the city, they are estimated at from 45,000 to 55,000 boxes, but in the West they have been considerably over-estimated. For instance, it was reported last week that there were 15,000 boxes in Eager's cold storage warehouse at Morrisburg, whereas there were only 400 boxes there, the 15,000 boxes having been sold and shipped out about a month ago. If the sales continue at the same rate as during the past week, it will not take long to absorb what remains in Canada. The chances are that, at the present very reasonable prices, the demand on the other side will increase, as they give retailers a fair profit at the sixpenny cut. There is a decidedly healthy tone to the New York market, and the new business that has been transacted in Montreal for English account during the past week indicates a better feeling all round. It is not expected that prices will be much higher—in fact, the trade generally looks for a continuance of present rates to work off the remaining stocks on. Besides, it would be bad for the trade if values advanced towards the wind up of the season, and it would mean an unhealthy opening for new cheese, which would be sure to result in losses. Therefore, it will be better to submit the losses on present held stocks than take advantage of a rise between now and May 1st, as high prices at the beginning of a season have seldom or never failed to incur financial reverses to shippers.

At this time last year, Canada had got rid of nearly all her surplus cheese, although prices were fully 1½c higher than at present; but the production of Canada during the past season was the largest on record, and consequently our shippers have found greater difficulty in working it off. Farmers, however, have reaped splendid profits on the season's output, are prices ruled comparatively high throughout the summer months, without experiencing the depression which invariably obtained during July in former years.—Trade Bulletin.

Baker, during which, two of Mrs. Clark's favorite hymns were sung by the choir of Bridge Street church. The bearers were Messrs. H. F. Ketcheson, C. Sulman, C. B. Scantlebury, H'y Pringle, David Gibson, and Geo. Moxam.

At 11:45 last night fire was discovered in the rear of the premises occupied by Chas. G. Row, grocer, Front St. The firemen responded promptly and soon had two streams of water playing on the flames, which were located in the upstairs of the rear portion of the building. The fire is supposed to have caught from a defective chimney, although no one can say positively how it originated. The flames did not do much damage to the stock, but the smoke and water ruined a lot of goods. The stock is insured for $1,750 in the Northern, $1,500 in the Royal and $400 on crockery in the Royal. The fixtures were also insured for $100 in the Royal. The building is owned by Richard Elvins and is damaged to the extent of about $100, covered by insurance. Jas. Wallace & Co's. stock is slightly damaged by water and smoke.

Sons of England.

At the regular meeting of Lydford Lodge, Sons of England, last night, Bro. H. F. Ketcheson, chairman of the committee appointed for the purpose, presented Bro. Charles Herring, Past President, on behalf of the Lodge, with a Past Master's Jewel, accompanying which he made some flattering remarks. Several of the brethren also spoke in a congratulatory vein, and Bro. Herring made a neat and feeling reply, after which a pleasant time was spent with speech and song, Bro. Jos. Petty in the chair. The jewel, which was from the establishment of Mr. Allan McFee, was a fine piece of workmanship and was much admired. The Lodge is in a prosperous condition and accessions are constantly being made to its membership.

An Enjoyable Concert.

The Young People's Society of Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal church held a very enjoyable concert last night at the residence of Mr. T. E. Ketcheson, Foster Avenue. The Rev. J. Simpson Trotter presided, and Madame Tourgis, organist, had charge of the musical department. The efficient quartette of Bridge St. Church rendered valuable assistance. There was an excellent programme, which was well carried out and highly appreciated.

Discharged Their Police and Engineer.

At their regular session last evening the Trenton Town Council discharged Chief Hindo and Constable Coleman, their two policemen, and their engineer on the fire engine. It is said that Constable Coleman will be re-engaged as Chief and the engineer will be hired as night watchman and engineer. Retrenchment in expenses is the cause assigned for the dismissals.

COURT OPENED.

The Spring Sittings of the High Court of Justice Before Chancellor Boyd.

The High Court of Justice opened this afternoon before Chancellor Boyd. The docket is a lengthy one and will no doubt take some days to complete. After His Lordship had taken his seat the Grand Jury were called, and selected Mr. W. C. Farley as their foreman. They were then addressed by the Chancellor to the following effect:

The Sheriff had handed him a pair of white kid gloves, which demonstrated that there were no prisoners in the County gaol. There were however, two charges which they would have to investigate, namely a person was charged with offering bribes to a Municipal Council. This was a serious offence and one that should be carefully investigated.

There was a change in the grand jury system, so that only thirteen were summoned at present, whereas formerly there were twenty-four persons upon the jury. If seven of the jurymen were in favor of a bill they would so report. They would have to inspect the county gaol and other places where persons were confined against their will. There was no poor house in this county, which he was sorry for, as he considered it a necessity in a large and wealthy county like this. In consequence poor people were compelled to be confined in gaol with criminals. This should not be the case.

Their duties, he was pleased to state, would not be of an arduous character.

SLANDER.

The case of Cole vs. McWilliams was settled to-day by the defendant paying the plaintiff $75 and costs and stating by his counsel in open court that he knew nothing against the character of Miss Cole, the plaintiff, and if he had at any time said anything against her character he was sorry for it and withdrew the same. This was an action brought by Miss Cenderilla Cole against Jacob McWilliams charging him with having made statements during the criminal proceedings in which Norman McWilliams, one of the defendants, and David Hubble were being tried for criminal assault and imputing unchastity to her. Miss Cole has always been held in high esteem by her friends, and it is pleasing to learn that her character has been vindicated in this public and ample manner. Mikel & Roberts for plff., A. R. Dougall, Q. C., for deft.

AN INSURANCE CASE.

Hubbs vs. Commercial Union.—An action to recover $400 on a policy of insurance issued by the defts., on the chattels of the farm outbuildings of the plff. Case settled by defts. paying all costs and release the plff. from the chattel mortgage of $309, held by one Mr. McKenzie, of Picton. W. Carnew, for plff.; Beatty, Blackstock & Co., for deft.

CITY CASES SETTLED.

Bulpit vs. City; Brady vs. City; Pepper vs. City; all settled for $200 without costs. These were actions for damages for alleged injuries caused by defective sidewalks.

AN ACTION WITHDRAWN.

Pearsons vs. Weese; plff. served notice to discontinue and the case has been withdrawn.

DAMAGES FOR DEATH OF A HUSBAND.

The first case tried was Clark vs. Leonard. This was an action brought by Mrs. Margaret Clark, of Percy township, against the defendant, who is a hotel keeper at Warkworth, to recover damages from the deft. on account of supplying liquor to her husband, which it is alleged led to his death. Mr. Clark was driving home when he was thrown from a waggon which caused his death.

Amongst legal gentlemen present from a distance were: Messrs. A. L. Colville, Campbellford; J. Haverson, Toronto; T. A. O'Rourke, Trenton.

Wm. Kerr, Q. C., of Cobourg, who is present, will conduct the crown business.

The Grand Jury this afternoon brought in two true bills against John G. Ronald for unlawfully offering to bribe Robt. F. Houston, Reeve of Tweed, and for attempting to bribe Robt. F. Houston, Reeve of Tweed, to vote for the purchase of a Ronald steam fire engine.

Hard times have increased the sales of Dr. Price's Baking Powder. Consumers have an eye to the great saving it insures by reason of its superior strength.

SPORTING TALK.

The Belleville hockey team and the Trentons play the final match for the Corby trophy on Friday afternoon on the skating rink.

In the Griffo-Leeds fight at Coney Island last night, the decision was given in Griffo's favor, in the twelfth round. About 3,000 spectators were present.

The stallion Stamboul that was killed at Oconomowoc, Wis., last week was not the famous son of Sultan of that name, but a namesake of that horse that had not yet attained fame. Stamboul, 2:7½, is enjoying good health at the Arden Farm in Orange County, New York. A stop ought to be put to the duplication of names, as it causes "confusion worse confounded," as in this instance, wherein the death of an undistinguished animal led to the belief that one of the best trotters and most promising sires in America had come to an untimely end.

TRENTON BEATS THE QUINTES.

A Very Fast Game from Start to Finish Ended in a Dispute.

Fourteen men (and boys) started out at 6:40 last evening to drive to Trenton. The number was to have been thirteen, but that would not have been lucky and another admirer was induced to face the "Nor-wester." The occupants of that big van were warm and hopeful at the start, but as they advanced on the road the drifts grew deeper and they grew colder, their hearts sank within them and it would have been an easy thing for the young ladies' team of east Belleville to have played rings around them. After two hours' hard work in the snow they finally drew up in Trenton. They felt much better when they had warmed up a bit and their hopes ran high that they might win the game yet. The game was called about nine o'clock and the teams lined up as follows:

QUINTE.	POSITION.	TRENTON.
Phillips	Goal	Whittier
Nash	Point	Forbes
H. Hamilton	Cover Point	A. Filion
L. Hamilton	Forwards	B. McCauley
Phippen		Geo. Nolan
Twining		H. Filion
Powell		F. Filion
J. McDonald	Goal Referee	Geo. Booth

T. W. R. McRae—Referee.

In less than thirty seconds from the face off the puck was between the Quintes' goal posts, and in less than a minute the Trenton team had scored again. It went on like this till half time when they had scored five to one. Lindsay Hamilton froze one of his feet and had to quit the game and Trenton threw off one man. With six men each they started the second half and shortly after the face Trenton scored again. In a few minutes A. Filion shot on the Quintes' goal and up went the referee's hand, but the Belleville players claimed "no goal" and left the ice. They refused to return and the game was awarded to Trenton by 7 to 1.

Booth, the Trenton goal referee, was certainly unfair in his decisions and the Quintes were justified in leaving the ice, but perhaps it would have been more sportsmanlike for them to have returned when Trenton offered to change their referee.

The local team and their friends were entertained to a supper after the game.

The Trenton rink is too small for hockey and no team can work a combination on it. Our boys were at sea in so small a space and could do nothing but struggle against the inevitable.

The Trenton team will now have to play the Bellevilles and that game is looked forward to with interest.

Health, strength and contentment are promoted by using Dr. Price's Baking Powder.

MARMORA & LAKE CONSERVATIVES.

MARMORA, March 2nd, 1895.

The local Conservative Association of the townships of Marmora and Lake met in the Town Hall here at 2:30 this afternoon and was very largely attended. Every section was well and enthusiastically represented. After the formal opening of the meeting, election of officers, &c., were gone through. The following resolution was moved by Mr. W. F. Page and seconded by Mr. J. A. Nickle:

That the Liberal Conservative Association of the townships of Marmora and Lake, in session assembled, hereby tender our hearty congratulations to the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, K.C.M.G., Premier of the Dominion of Canada, on the well deserved honor bestowed upon him by his Gracious Sovereign.

The fact of his having represented this constituency for over twenty years in the Parliament of Canada, over fifteen years of which he was a member of the Cabinet, gives us more than ordinary interest in his advancement and in the maintenance of the Government of which he is the honored leader,

Believing as we do, that the policy of the Conservative party is for the best interests of the country, and the only one that is truly loyal to Canada and British connection, we hereby pledge ourselves to support the Government of Sir Mackenzie Bowell by every loyal means within our power, and to send from this, his old constituency of North Hastings, a member fully in accord with the well defined policy of that Government.

Carried unanimously by a standing vote.

J. W. PEARCE,
President.
W. E. GLADNEY,
Secretary.

After the passing of the above resolution a few of the minor affairs were put in shape and the work of this Association was reported in good order.

The President then called on our present member for an address, which was promptly responded to by Mr. A. W. Carscallen, M.P., who, though briefly, fully expressed his confidence in the principles of our present Government, and regretted very much that matters were so that he could not possibly take the field again and carry the old flag gloriously to victory.

Moved by W. M. Jones, M.D., seconded by Thomas Warren, that a resolution of sympathy be tendered our member, Mr. A. W. Carscallen, in consequence of the illness of his partner in life, whom he has been advised by her physician to take south as soon as possible.

The business of the Association being completed, the meeting was closed with three rousing cheers for our Government, our Leader, and our Queen.

THE GRIM REAPER'S HARVEST.

Another Well-Known Belleville Lady Passes Over to the Silent Majority.

Death has been particularly busy during the past year amongst the older citizens of Belleville and to-day we are called upon to chronicle the demise of one of our city's best known and most highly respected ladies in the person of Mrs. Adam Henry.

Mrs. Henry, who was a most active woman when in health, was taken ill about ten days ago and her ailment was pronounced brain fever. She rallied somewhat from the first attack, but took a relapse and rapidly sank till the end came at five o'clock last evening.

Mrs. Henry, who was a daughter of the late Paul Becket, was born in this city on August 10th, 1847, and was married to Mr. Henry on the 20th of August, 1872. Mr. Henry has been engaged in the grocery business for the past seventeen years and his late wife has been a faithful helpmate to him. No children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Henry. Mrs. Henry had been for many years a member of Bridge St Methodist church. Besides her husband and adopted son she leaves behind her mother, three sisters and a brother to mourn her untimely death. To the bereaved husband and friends we extend our sympathy. The funeral will take place from her late residence, Church St., on Thursday afternoon.

Correspondence.

Whilst correspondents will be accorded space for the expression of their ideas on topics of public interest, it must be in all cases understood that the views so expressed are simply those of the correspondents themselves.

To the Editor of the INTELLIGENCER.

DEAR SIR.—In searching through old documents some days since I discovered in a small box two medals of much interest. One is Father Mathew's medal of 1840, who was the great apostle of temperance. The other is the great O'Connell medal. Both are as bright as the day they were made. Of the latter I'll offer a few remarks now, and possibly of the other in a few days.

The Daniel O'Connell medal I have is of 1843. The name "Daniel O'Connell" sweeps half around the upper face of the medal and his massive figure, elegantly wrought, in the centre. "The Liberator of Ireland" is around the bottom face of the medal near the rim. He gained Catholic emancipation. The medal measures nearly 5½ inches in circumference. On the other side of the medal is a most graceful female figure representing Erin; she has one hand on the harp, the Wolfdog watchful at her feet and the old historic round tower erect in the distance. Around the face of the medal close to the rim are his words "Who would be free, himself must strike the blow." Then at the foot "Repeal Year 1843."

At those assemblies, where likely three hundred thousand would be present and a regiment of soldiers in the rear, O'Connell and his friends would be feasted in the evening to a splendid dinner spread at tables a little elevated. The Government reporters were crowded at a table near by, their duty being to note down every word Dan would utter. Smiling, he looked down at them, and he hoped our "Guardian Angels!" were ready to commence, when they noded assent.

Dan stood up and opening the ball, said "Fellow countrymen, you already know this is going to be a great and momentous day for Ireland." The reporters' eyes were every moment on O'Connell and their pencils flying over the sheets like magic, but though O'Connell spoke with power, animation and force for twenty minutes the reporters were unable to catch a single sentence or word even, for Dan spoke so far in Irish, and then commenced with one of his powerful addresses that were read and studied the world over.

One of his last letters to Ireland was to my father, when he was at Birmingham preparing for his journey to Rome on his intended visit to Pope Pius IX. He was very ill and requested his son John to write for him and thank my father for all the kindly and effectionate greetings with which my brother, Very Rev. Canon Ivers, and all his Irish friends received him at Birmingham. I have his son's letter. Poor O'Connell died while on his journey to Rome, but had the great consolation of being accompanied all through, and during his last moments by a faithful Irish priest.

I am, dear sir,
Yours truly,
JOHN IVERS.

CONSERVATISM IN STIRLING.

The Village Association Wide-Awake—Election of Officers—Delegates to the Madoc Convention.

STIRLING, March 5.—The Liberal Conservative Association of the village of Stirling met in McKee's hall on Monday evening last with the largest attendance we have had for several years.

About 8:30 the president, Mr. Thomas McKee, called the meeting to order and addressed the meeting in a very appropriate manner, after which the order of business was taken up.

The President called for the election of officers, which resulted as follows: President, Thomas McKee; Vice-President, J. E. Halliwell; Secretary, Geo. E. Cryer; Treasurer, Jesse Barlow.

The next order of business was the appointing of delegates to attend the convention at Madoc on the 14th of March. About 25 delegates were elected to attend the convention, and the Association did not ask the delegates to pledge themselves to support any candidate, but to use their own judgment at the convention and support the man that they think will be the best to fill the position.

After several short addresses from the members of the Association the meeting was closed and the members went home feeling encouraged in their work. They parted singing "God Save the Queen."

Chief Justice Armour on Insurance,

The learned judge has given judgment in an insurance case, holding that a man cannot by his will deprive his wife of the benefit of insurance policy made to wife and children, transfer it to his children, but he can by an instrument in writing, other than a will, attached to or endorsed, or identifying the policy by its number, transfer the benefit from the wife alone to the children alone or vice versa, or vary the apportionment the wife and children are to receive. But he also held that where a policy is made payable to the wife alone, the husband cannot by will vary its terms. The distinction between "a will" and "an instrument in writing" is one of the subtleties of language cognizable only to the legal mind, and which prove such mines of wealth to lawyers.

SALT RHEUM CURED.

A Lady Who Has Suffered Much Tells How She Found a Cure.

Among the numerous ills that afflict mankind there is none more annoying or more difficult to eradicate from the system than salt rheum. Those who suffer from it really endure tortures and frequently present the appearance of a mass of sores about the head and hands. Mrs. John Mosher, of Mosher's Corners, N.S., suffered for two years in this way and almost despaired of getting rid of the trouble. She says that for over a year she was under the care of a physician, but beyond lotions that somewhat allayed the irritation found no relief. The trouble affected her in the head, which would at times be covered with little sores, the appearance of which not only caused intense annoyance, but great discomfort as well, as the irritation was sometimes almost unbearable. Finding that the treatment she was receiving from her physician was not having any beneficial effects she determined to discontinue it and give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial. By the time two boxes were used there was a great improvement in her condition. The irritation was allayed and the sores began to heal and disappear. She continued the use of Pink Pills until she had used two more boxes, when the trouble had completely disappeared, and although months have now elapsed since she discontinued the use of Pink Pills there has not been the faintest trace of a return of the trouble. Mrs. Mosher is naturally very much elated over the great benefit she has derived from the use of Pink Pills, and is loud in her praises of this greatest of all modern medicines.

The experience of years has proved that there is absolutely no disease due to a vitiated condition of the blood that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will not promptly cure, and those who are suffering from such troubles would avoid much misery and save money by promptly resorting to this treatment. Get the genuine Pink Pills every time and do not be persuaded to take an imitation or some other remedy a dealer, for the sake of the extra profit to himself, may say is "just as good." Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure when other medicines fail.

A Humorous Fact

About Hood's Sarsaparilla—it expels bad humor and creates good humor. A battle for blood is what Hood's Sarsaparilla vigorously fights, and it is always victorious in expelling foul taints and giving the vital fluid the quality and quantity of perfect health. It cures scrofula, salt rheum, boils and other blood diseases.

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

CHAPTER VI.

The news of John Selwyn's death did not reach his niece till a considerable time after the event. Then her aunt opened the packet and found the papers now in her solicitor's hands, nor did the fact that his intestacy transformed her adopted daughter into an heiress occur to her till suggested by a friend of her husband who also recommended her to a solicitor.

As the story was unfolded to him an expression of grim despair gathered over Forrester's face.

"You see it will be impossible to fight against such proof," said Dixon, sympathetically. "I am awfully sorry for you, my dear fellow. The only little bit of possible good in the whole affair is that your kinswoman may let you off the debt you unconsciously incurred to her estate."

"My God!" cried Forrester, starting up and beginning to pace the room. "It is an awful blow! I am hard hit in more ways than one. I have asked the sweetest girl in the world, as I think, to marry me, and I hoped to hear her say 'yes' to-morrow or next day. Now marriage is too wild an imprudence. I dare not drag her into an abyss of poverty."

"A girl! What girl?" exclaimed Dixon, impatiently. "You don't mean to say you have been such an idiot—"

"Yes, I have! I know what you mean. I have followed up my acquaintance with my traveling companion, and to give her up will cost me more than any other loss—fortune, station, anything!"

"Good heavens! how incredible it seems to me," said Dixon, as if to himself. Forrester continued his troubled walk without heeding him.

"Give me pen and paper," he exclaimed, after a few minutes' silence. "I will write and ask her to see me to-morrow. Then I can explain all to her and she will decide what's to be done." Dixon pushed over the blotting pad to him and Forrester wrote a few lines rapidly, then, as he addressed and fastened the envelope he said: "I leave myself entirely in your hands, Dixon. I suppose the best thing I can do is to get back to my regiment as soon as I can. Thank heaven I did not send in my papers. It's all like my cursed luck." He wrung his friend's hand and was gone.

Somewhat to Dixon's surprise Forrester did not appear next day, and in the evening when the former, who felt rather uneasy about him, called at his hotel he was informed that Capt. Forrester was out—had been out all day.

"He has been running his head into some noose, I have no doubt," was Dixon's mental comment as he took his way to his snug bachelor's quarters in Victoria street, and spent the evening expecting a visit from his unlucky friend. He was disappointed, however.

It was not till noon next day that Forrester made his appearance. He looked haggard and depressed, but had evidently endeavored to pull himself together and spoke with more composure than at their last meeting.

"Here's a note I received this morning," he said, handing it to Dixon. "Rather startling, eh! I suppose I had better keep the appointment."

"Dixon read as follows:

"DEAR SIR—I should very much like to speak to you respecting the property we both claim, as I cannot help feeling for the disappointment you must have had. Will you meet me to-morrow at Messrs. Henderson's office about two o'clock? If you will not or cannot, please address to me, their care."

These lines were written the day before and bore no address.

"Go!" cried Dixon, handing back the note, "of course you must go. Why don't you go in for the heiress? It would be a splendid solution of all difficulties and she may be a tolerably looking girl."

"Thank you. I don't fancy the underbred niece of a housekeeper," said Forrester impatiently. "Besides I am not a free man until I have come to an understanding with the lady I asked to be my wife. I have just come from her place. I was so puzzled and worried at having no answer to my note yesterday that I went up to Kilburn this morning and found she was laid up with a bad cold. Still she might have sent me a line in reply."

"Probably she has heard that you have lost or are likely to lose your fortune."

"No. That cock won't fight, Dixon. She can know nothing of my affairs. She is among a totally different set of people. However, I will see this Selwyn girl, though I can't see the use of an interview. One must not be uncivil."

"No, certainly not," returned Dixon, and they continued to talk of Forrester's affairs for a considerable time, Dixon perceiving with grave uneasiness what a stronghold his friend's passion for his fascinating traveling companion had taken upon him.

At last it was time to start for Parliament street, where the office of Henderson was situated.

Forrester walked thither in a sort of dream. It was cruel hard lines to be robbed of love and money by one fell blow. What a different aspect life bore to-day from what it did two days ago. Why did Angela avoid him? It looked like avoidance. If she loved him and would wait for him, there was something still to hope for, but how pale and dim compared to the vivid colors hope wore for the last month.

"Yes, Miss Selwyn is expected," replied a clerk to Forrester's inquiry, when he reached his destination. "Please walk up, sir," and Forrester, with the same sulky curiosity stirring in his mind, ascended to the private office of the solicitor, a grave, sedate man, who received him civilly, and then conducted him into another room, observing that Miss Selwyn was anxious to see him alone, though he (Henderson) did not quite approve of the step.

"I myself don't see that an interview can do any good," returned Forrester, gloomily. Whereupon, having given him the Times, Henderson closed the door and left him to his own reflections.

The succeeding ten minutes seemed exceedingly long, but at last the door opened and a small, slight figure dressed in black entered.

Forrester gazed at her in speechless astonishment. "Miss Cavallo," he cried, recovering himself. "This is most unexpected! I thought you were too unwell to leave your room?" and he took her hand in both his own.

"It is imprudent!" she returned, unsteadily, flushing and then growing white. "But I came by the wish of Miss Selwyn, whom I could not refuse."

"What? do you know Miss Selwyn?"

"Yes, intimately. I am here by her wish, to open a rather delicate matter—which—" she paused.

"I am very pleased she has chosen such an ambassadress," put in Forrester, smiling. "Why did you not answer my note? It has been no small addition to my troubles, your silence."

"I knew I should see you to-day," she said, "and preferred to wait until you had heard Miss Selwyn's proposition."

"What proposition?" asked Forrester. "Does she want to divide the property with me?" And he laughed bitterly.

"Something of that kind," said Angela, gravely. "She says she does not like to deprive you and she does not like to return to poverty herself; so if it seems good to you, perhaps you might enjoy it together."

"Is this an offer of marriage?" exclaimed Forrester, a look of amusement relaxing his countenance.

"It is, Capt. Forrester."

"And pray did you not tell my kinswoman that Forrester was not in the market? Who knows, as well as myself, that there is but one woman I would marry at present."

"But, Capt. Forrester, I have no fortune to replace that which you have lost; and it would never do for you to burden yourself with a penniless wife. I thought it best to give you this message and to assure you that so far as I am concerned you are free—quite free—"

"There is something I cannot fathom under all this," cried Forrester, a strange flash of suspicion darting through his brain. "You are playing some game. Tell me the truth, Angela. Who is Miss Selwyn? Where is she? Can I not see her?" He caught both her hands and looked intently into her eyes.

"Yes, you shall see her, and you will not be too harsh in your refusal," exclaimed Angela, her sweet eyes alight with a smile, arch, bright, joyous.

"No! But she must understand that my heart has passed into your keeping! That my future is in your hands!"

"She will forgive it all! Nay, she will love you the better for it. Ah! Can you not guess? Do you not see through my little ruse?"

"Good God! What do you mean?" cried Forrester, clasping her in his arms. "Do you—can you love me?"

"Yes, I do love you. No one will ever love you better than your kinswoman Sarah Selwyn! Will you forgive my deceit?"

"Give me one kiss, a long one, and I'll forgive whatever you like. Now tell me what the mystery about Miss Selwyn is?"

"Simply, that we are one and indivisible. I am Sarah Selwyn, but I have never used my real name! My dear parents, as I consider Aunt and Uncle Cavallo, in adopting me, wished to separate me as much as possible from my father and his people, so they renamed me after my mother, and it is only a short time ago, not more than two years, that I knew I was not really their child! You must let me go, Capt. Forrester! I can speak better if you do! It had been settled that I was to come over to Mrs. Bartlett to look for an engagement to sing at concerts. Then this wonderful news about old Mr. Selwyn dying without a will came to my dear good father, and he said he must urge my claims, but I thought it so impossible that I could ever become rich or grand that I begged to be let to look for an engagement all the same, so I came over to London, and met you, and you thought you too were rich and offered to share all you had with me. Now I am rich, so you must not refuse my offer to share what I have with you!" There was something infinitely bewitching in the sweetness and piquancy of her voice and look as she said this.

"My darling, I cannot believe that such a solution of my difficulties, my despair, is possible. But never more will I call you anything save Angela! Are you really my opponent—my victorious opponent?"

For answer Angela walked across to a door which opened into Mr. Henderson's room. "Ray, come here and explain to Capt. Forrester who I am," she exclaimed.

"Certainly," said Henderson, joining them. "This lady is Miss Selwyn, your second cousin, and heir of the late Mr. John Selwyn. I trust her generous sympathy with you in your disappointment has not betrayed her into any imprudence."

"It has," rejoined Forrester, looking radiant. "She has committed herself frightfully. Three weeks ago she all but refused me; to-day she has promised to be my wife. But to you I leave the tying up of her property strictly on herself."

"Ahem!" said Mr. Henderson, taking off and wiping his spectacles. "Then I presume this case will be settled out of court."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of to-day, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

URGES NON-INTERFERENCE

Mr. McCarthy's Argument in the Manitoba School Case.

HE ADMITS THERE ARE GRIEVANCES

The Privy Council's Judgment, He Argues, Does Not Compel the Council to Give Remedial Legislation, Which If Granted Would Mean That Separate Are Superior to Public Schools

Ottawa, March 5.—For four hours to-day D'Alton McCarthy endeavored to show that the Government ought not to take steps towards redressing the grievances of the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba. Mr. McCarthy admitted that they had grievances, but that it would be bad policy for the ministry to do anything in the direction of establishing separate schools in Manitoba. The address of the leader of the Third Party sounded very much like a stump speech to an Ontario audience rather than a carefully-thought-out argument in support of the case of the Manitoba Government. The meeting of the Privy Council was again largely attended by the general public, much interest centering in the proceedings.

At the outset Mr. McCarthy said, while appearing as the representative of the Manitoba Government, he did not wish it to be understood that the Government recognized by his presence the jurisdiction of the Privy Council and the judicial powers that they might exercise. Mr. Ewart had a right to appear here, but it must be remembered he did not represent the Catholics in general, he only represented a portion of the Catholic minority. No poll had been taken to ascertain the wishes of the Catholics as a whole. A portion of the history which Mr. Ewart had given had no bearing on the case. The Manitoba Act must be interpreted by itself, independently of what had happened between the settlers and William Macdougall and others. Nevertheless, he thought he ought to show that the "bill of rights," submitted by the Manitoba settlers to the Government envoys, does not contain any reference whatever to Separate schools. There was, however, a reference to education. Again in the list of rights submitted to Sir Donald Smith by the "Council of Forty," and sent to Ottawa, no reference appeared to Separate schools. The question under consideration should be dealt with on its merits solely.

There was nothing in the judgment which could be treated as having dealt with or disposed of this matter. Neither had the course to be followed by the Governor-in-Council been determined. No court had determined that you must hear appeal; the court had said you may do so.

Mr. Dickey: Do you contend that there would have been a constitutional option on the part of this council to hear the appeal?

Mr. McCarthy: I go that far. The hearing of the appeal was one thing; disposal of it another. He hoped that it would be held to be the wiser and better course and in the best interests of the country to let the matter rest where it was. There was not a word in the questions submitted as to whether or not if the council had power to hear the appeal they ought to exercise it in any particular way.

He proceeded to cite from the argument before the Judicial Committee last December, to show that the judges fully recognized that their only duty was to decide the right of the Governor in Council to hear the appeal. If they had ventured to give instructions as to what the council should do the Judicial Committee would have been stepping beyond their jurisdiction.

In reply to Sir C. H. Tupper, who asked if, in the Judicial Committee's decision some action on the part of the Government was not implied, Mr. McCarthy replied: It is an anomaly.

Here Mr. Curran remarked: "They state distinctly the rights of the minority have been affected." This led to Mr. McCarthy's admission that a grievance existed, and that is the ground of appeal. How those rights should be redressed is the question to be decided, if at all. In event of the remedial order being made it would be an order in council. Under our system all judicial functions had been withdrawn from the Crown. He was proceeding to argue on this line when Sir Mackenzie Bowell interpellated: "We admit this is a political body, not a judicial one."

Mr. McCarthy proceeded to quote the statements of certain Ministers as to their views of appeal. Quoting Hon. Mr. Ouimet, he said the Minister of Public Works had said if a constitutional course was not adopted he would have to retire from the Ministry.

There was much laughter when Sir C. H. Tupper remarked, "Surely, you would not have him remain in if an unconstitutional course was followed."

At 1 o'clock an adjournment took place.

Resuming his argument after luncheon, Mr. McCarthy said that whether the Government interfered or declined to interfere, the result would be to displease one set of persons or other in the country. Thus, it was purely a political question. To show that this view was generally held throughout the country, he quoted a speech of Mr. Pelletier, who urged strongly that the matter be settled before a general election, pointing out that Mr. Laurier had only promised to interfere if it were found that the Roman Catholic population were obliged to send their children to Protestant schools. If the schools were purely neutral he would not interfere, therefore Mr. Pelletier condemned him.

Mr. McCarthy admitted that a refusal to entertain the minority's petition would certainly cause the Government to lose some of its supporters in the country, but even defeat in defence of liberty would be more glorious to them than victory otherwise.

Hon. E. Blake, he said, was careful in his argument before the Privy Council to impress on Their Lordships this view of political responsibility, and Mr. McCarthy would impress it on the council now that the question had come before them, not as one determined by any decision of the Judicial Committee, but as one in which they were charged with political responsibility.

As for the statement that the pledge of separate schools was renewed to the French Catholics of Manitoba at the abolition of the provincial senate, Mr. McCarthy argued there was no power in the then Manitoba Government to bind subsequent legislatures in that respect. Further, he was instructed by Attorney-General Sifton that the alleged bargain between Mr. Greenway and the late Archbishop had been repeatedly denied. He was also authorized to say that Mr. Joseph Martin had no authority to make the promises he was declared to have made at St. François Xavier in 1888, in the name of the Liberal party of which he was a member.

Coming to the question of the petition of the minority, he would remind the council that while the legislature of Manitoba might refuse this session to pass remedial legislation, next session it might change its mind. Meantime the authority to pass remedial legislation would also be within the power of the Dominion Parliament. Thus, there would be concurrent legislative jurisdiction. And there being thus the right with the Government of the Dominion to set this machinery in motion, it became necessary to enquire what considerations should prevail in order to induce the Government to act. Now, what the Government was asked was to change the school laws of the province, to establish a Separate school system against the will of the majority. Surely this was a serious question; and yet in the hasty manner of present procedure the Government of Manitoba was to be called upon suddenly to defend or alter its school system. The council was being asked to coerce a great province of the Dominion. Not a member of the council but had already made up his mind for or against Separate or Public schools. He knew there were members of the Cabinet present who, unless they had changed their minds, favored Separate schools. In a country where, except in the Province of Quebec, we have no state religion it was a hackneyed argument to say that public money should not be used to propagate denominational teaching. The state simply owed the children of the country an elementary education, and the council could not act in this case one way or other without declaring itself either in favor of a public or Separate school system. Moreover their decision would stand as an example.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell asked whether, applying that argument to Ontario, Mr. McCarthy would undertake to say that anyone by refusing to sanction or sign a petition for the abolition of Separate schools would thereby be declaring in favor of the Separate school system.

Mr. McCarthy had no direct answer to make. The cases were not analogous, he remarked. Later on Mr. Ives observed that he thought the question was this: The Catholics of Manitoba claimed they had a right to Separate schools, which right had been taken away, and they asked to have these schools restored by a remedial order.

"In making that remedial order, you argue, then, that we would be pronouncing in favor of Separate schools?" inquired Mr. Ives.

Mr. McCarthy: "What I urge is this, that this council cannot assent to the prayer of a petition for the re-establishment of Separate schools in Manitoba without declaring thereby that the Separate school system is preferable to the system of public schools."

This assertion evoked a general laugh all over the room, and an incredulous shaking of many heads.

Mr. Haggart: "What do you consider our powers, the extent to which we could go in making a remedial order?"

Mr. McCarthy: "To restore, I suppose, the rights which have been said to have been taken away."

Mr. Haggart: "Suppose we go beyond that; is there any power of remedy?"

Mr. McCarthy: I should suppose the courts of law would correct that.

Continuing, Mr. McCarthy argued that the Manitoba Government had not had to deal with the question of Protestant vs. Catholic, or English-speaking vs. French, but with a polyglot community which could only be dealt with by common school system. Now he found that only French names appeared on the petition for separate schools. The French were confined mostly to the district of Provencher. The Roman Catholic population of the province was 20,500 out of a total population of 152,500 and 9000 of these Catholics were in Provencher. Speaking of the policy of the Manitoba Legislature to render its population homogeneous, Mr. McCarthy said it was surely a laudable one in a province whose population was of such diverse origin—the majority being concerned, of course, in the assimilation of the population—to have the people cease to be French.

Hon. Mr. Ouimet: So the object of the law of 1890 was to do away with the French?

Mr. McCarthy: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Ouimet: And Catholics?

Mr. McCarthy: Oh, no. A man can be a Catholic and not be French. It was the various national distinctions which it was desired to obliterate.

Mr. McCarthy was commencing to cite the refusal of the Dominion Parliament to interfere with the school legislation of New Brunswick in 1873, when the hearing was adjourned.

A series of valuable and interesting letters on Canada, contributed by G. R. Parkyn, to The London Times last year, are to be published by Messrs. MacMillan in their Colonial Library Series. The title of the work is "The Great Dominion: Studies of Canada." On many points the articles have been much enlarged as the result of Mr. Parkyn's visit to Canada last summer, when attending the Ottawa Conference. A new chapter has been added on "Northern Canada, the Great Fur Country," in order to make the book more fully representative of the various aspects of Canadian life. It was at first intended to bring out the volume in an illustrated form, but this plan was abandoned.

The answer of United States authorities to the representations of the Dominion Government for recognition of the Canadian herd and stud books by the Treasury Department at Washington not having proved conclusive, Hon. Mr. Angers is again moving to secure the desired object. Until 1893 these stud books were recognized in the United States, but in the latter year the Treasury Department insisted on entry in the United States herd and stud books, in order to obtain admission of pedigreed stock from Canada to the States. Last session the Agricultural Committee of the House of Commons took official cognizance of the matter.

The Marine Department has received a communication from Mr. Smith, deputy Minister, stating that the Imperial Committee on the manning of ships has completed taking evidence, and is now considering its report. Mr. Smith sails for Canada on April 6.

A Number of New Measures Introduced.

AMENDMENT TO THE MEDICAL ACT

Mr. Marter Presents a Petition Asking That All Contractors for Public Works Shall Pay Union Rates of Wages—Bill Respecting School Assessment Rates—Debate on the Budget.

Toronto, March 6.—The promise of an exciting and interesting debate on the budget drew a large crowd of visitors to the Parliament buildings yesterday afternoon. The promise was not, however, realized, for only one speaker added to the literature already published. Mr. Howland occupied the floor from 3.15 until the adjournment, a few minutes before 6 o'clock. Much had been expected from the member for Centre Toronto; but at the conclusion of his speech the feeling among the members, even on the Opposition side of the House, was one of disappointment. Mr. Howland was terribly prolix, and his sentences were so involved that at times it was with the greatest difficulty his auditors could follow his argument. For nearly an hour he indulged in generalities, speaking of the relations between the three parties in the new Legislature. He devoted considerable attention to the Patrons; but whether he was praising or blaming that body, not even Leader Haycock could gather. Then he went on to show that the Government had taken credit for many things that had come into their hands simply owing to the fact that they had the reins of power, and by no effort of their own. He accused the Ministers of want of foresight in the administration of the affairs of the province, and concluded with these words: "The policy of the Government may be summed up in a few words; it is a record of departmental mediocrity and unfortunately of bleak, utter, dense incompetency."

At the conclusion of Mr. Howland's address the House adjourned until to-day.

Mr. Garrow introduced a bill to amend the Public School Act, providing that municipal councils shall have power and shall be compelled to rectify errors or omissions in school assessment rates, so as to prevent inequalities in the assessment of properties. The bill was read a first time, as was another brought in by the same member, giving municipal councils power to vary the amounts of statute labor payable in certain defined localities.

A bill was introduced by Mr. German and read a first time, providing that, when a prisoner or inmate of a public institution dies, the death shall be reported to the county attorney, who shall have power to decide upon the necessity for an inquest.

Another bill introduced by Mr. German provides for the abolition of the limit of $5000 which there is at present in the amount of property which may be held by religious and educational societies, by declaring that the value of their buildings shall not be included.

The Provincial Secretary introduced a bill in blank for the further protection of children. Asked by The World what were the provisions of this bill Mr. Gibson replied that the council had not yet definitely decided as to its terms. The amendments would not, however, be of a very important character.

Mr. Hardy's bill respecting jurors has been printed. The terms are as follows: "In all civil cases at the time of the passing of this act or thereafter depending in the High Court of Justice or in a county court, or in any matter or cause within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature, where issues are tried or where damages are assessed by a jury, it shall be sufficient if 10 of the jurors empanelled for the trial or assessment shall agree, instead of 12 as heretofore required, and in such case 10 jurors may give the verdict or answer the questions submitted to the jury by the judge.

"A verdict rendered or question answered under the provisions of this act shall have the same effect as the verdict or answer heretofore given by 12 jurors. This act shall apply to special juries and shall be read with and as part of the Judicature Act."

Mr. Marter presented a petition from the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada praying that a wages clause may be inserted in all specifications for public works, providing that contractors must pay the union rate or such other rates of wages as prevail in the locality where the work is being performed.

Mr. St. John presented petitions from the Town Council of Toronto Junction to consolidate and rearrange their debenture debt; from the Town Council of North Toronto to authorize the issue of debentures to purchase or bonus street railways, and from the Georgian Bay Ship Canal Company to extend the time for the commencement of the work, to alter and enlarge the borrowing powers of the company and also to ratify and confirm certain contracts made between the company and other companies or corporations.

The Patrons in caucus have determined upon the lines of their amendment to the Medical Act. They propose to abolish the examination by the Medical Council and substitute a final examination prepared by a board, consisting of three members appointed by the Medical Council, one by each medical college and two by the Government. The curriculum is to be approved by the Lieutenant-Governor, and it is to be uniform in all the medical colleges. Midwives in country districts who commence by assisting their neighbors may, by procuring a certificate of good character from the local Board of Health and after giving evidence that they have attended at least ten cases of maternity, be given power to practice in the municipality and charge fees.

Under the present system the tariff of fees that may be charged by the medical men is arranged by the electoral district societies and approved of by the Medical Council. The Patrons propose that the Government shall approve of the tariff instead of the Medical Council.

ROBBERY BY ROASTING.

Toledo, Ohio, March 6.—News of a robbery, accompanied by torture, inflicted on Mr. and Mrs. John Schonbrich, residents of the little town of Ai, west of this city, has reached here. Between $5000 and $6000 in cash was taken by the robbers. A demand was made on the old man for his money, and upon his refusal to tell the hiding-place the robbers roasted his legs over the flames. When the agony became unbearable he told where $1200 was concealed. His wife was subjected to the same treatment and she finally told her torturers where $4000 to $5000 more could be found.

DID HE INTEND SUICIDE?

Strange Sequel to a Secret Marriage—Now in the Hospital

Toronto, March 6.—The students of Trinity Medical College are much excited over the secret marriage of one of their fellows and his rumored attempt at suicide subsequently. The student in question is Hugh F. Kerr, a young man from Regina, N.W.T., who came here in October last to study medicine and boarded with Miss Fox of 375 Parliament-street. Miss Fox had a niece named Miss Charlotte Lamb living with her, a sprightly young lady to whom all her boarders were more or less attached. Kerr and Miss Lamb became great friends, and on the 21st of January they went to the residence of Rev. John A. Morrison, at 255 Carlton-street, and were quietly married. Mr. Morrison, who is pastor of Oak-street Presbyterian Church, did not know Kerr, but performed the ceremony pursuant to license in the presence of witnesses. The marriage was kept a close secret from all their friends and relatives by the young couple.

In the meantime an old affection of the spine, caused by a kick received from a horse when Kerr was on a ranch in the Northwest Territories, had showed itself, and the young man became subject to epileptic fits attended by hallucinations and attacks of moroseness. On the night of the fire of Jan. 6 he was seized with one and they recurred from time to time. He showed considerable jealousy of Miss Lamb and two weeks ago to-night was particularly morose, imagining that everyone was slighting him. He went to the bedroom of Miss Lamb, who was not then known to be his wife, and dragged her out of bed reproaching her for not coming to sit and talk with him in his room as had been usual with her.

Later in the night a fellow boarder named Dunn was aroused by very heavy breathing in Kerr's room, and entering found him writhing on the bed. On the table was an upturned cup and a phial of nitrate of silver, which led the household to believe that Dunn had taken poison. Dr. Duncan, who lives across the street, was summoned and gave the young man an emetic; and Dr. Sheard, who is a friend of Kerr's, was also called on, but it was found that the man had taken no poison, and was simply suffering from a fit.

A rope found in the room led to the belief that Kerr had attempted to hang himself, and this statement was made to the doctors, but his neck bore no evidences of this. Kerr had also concealed a hatchet in his room for some unknown purpose.

Miss Lamb did not reveal the fact of her marriage to her aunt, and to her parents, who also reside in Toronto, until after the occurrence, and they, being afraid for her bodily safety, have been anxious to secure a separation. The young lady, however, clings to her husband. She was for a time prominent in the Salvation Army and is a very comely girl.

Kerr is now in the Hospital, being treated for epileptic fits, and has lost his memory of some of the events in question. His father is a wealthy hardware merchant at Regina, and is coming to Toronto to take him home. The young man is very robust, with a grip like iron, he having been a cowboy. He is very eccentric in his manners.

East Durham Reformers Doubtful

Millbrook, Ont., March 6.East Durham Reform Association met here to-day. There was a divided opinion as to the advisability of placing a candidate in the field, as already the Conservatives and McCarthyites have chosen their standard-bearers, and many thought it best to leave the fight to these two. Several nominations were made, but each candidate thought it would be better to await the result of the Patron convention, which is to be held here next week.

BELLEVILLE, WEDNESDAY, MAR. 6.

NORTH HASTINGS CONVENTION.

The Conservatives of North Hastings will meet at Madoc on Thursday, the 14th inst., for the purpose of nominating a candidate for the Commons. The party in the riding are full of enthusiasm in support of the Administration of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who represented them in the Commons for twenty-five years, and there will no doubt be a grand rally on the occasion.

A note from Mr. F. J. Thompson, President of the Liberal-Conservative Association for North Hastings, informs us that the Premier, Hon. Sir Charles H. Tupper, Minister of Justice, and the Hon. Dr. Montague, will be present and deliver addresses.

GRITS AND PATRONS.

The charge which has been repeatedly made in these columns, that there is an understanding between the Grit leader and the heads of the Patrons' Order, that they shall not embarrass each other in the nomination of candidates for Parliament, and assist each other in defeating the Conservative nominees, has so far met with no denial. In view of the facts, indeed, we doubt whether denial can be successfully made. In this Province we find that the Patrons and the Grits are in alliance against the Conservatives, in the constituencies named herewith, the former having nominated candidates whom the latter will support, namely: East Hastings, North Hastings, Prince Edward, Lennox, Frontenac, South Leeds, North Lanark, South Lanark, Carleton, Glengarry, West York, East York, and Prescott.

We also find that, in return for the abstention of the Grits, as above stated, the Patrons have not nominated candidates in any of the following constituencies, which are at present represented by Grits: Addington, Russell, West Ontario, North York, and Peel.

The foregoing is but a partial list, but this fact is further to be added to it: In Grenville, a Patron was nominated against the Conservative member, but he retired, and attended the meeting which nominated a Grit candidate.

Let us have further light on this subject, in order that the Conservatives who have in good faith joined the Patrons, may not be deceived.

HOT SHOT FOR THE DOCTOR.

The Hamilton Spectator says: "Rev. Dr. Carman publicly accused the Dominion Government of paying for masses for the repose of the soul of the late Sir John Thompson, and wrathfully protested against the supposed expenditure. The Premier, in a courteous letter to Dr. Carman, assured him that he had been misinformed, and that his accusation was groundless. For a week or more Dr. Carman remained silent. Compelled at last, by reference in the press, to speak, he publishes a letter full of the gall of partizanship, in which he meanly insinuates that the Premier lies. The fiery Doctor thus repels the charge that he attacked the Government:

"Has it come to this, that a man can say nothing in defence of country or liberty without attacking the Government? In such a case the question arises, which should get out of the way, the country or that Government?

"It will thus be seen that, in Dr. Carman's opinion, he has a moral right to circulate slanders against public men, whether there is or is not any ground for such slanders. How did such a man come to be General Superintendent of the great Methodist church in Canada?"

And how comes it, it may well be asked, that no other head of a Protestant denomination in Canada considered it necessary or advisable to set his lance in rest against the alleged "abomination," against which Dr. Carman tilted with such ludicrous results? Does the Rev. gentleman imagine that he is the only worthy and capable champion of Protestantism and equal rights to all?

ABSURD FALSEHOOD.

PREPOSTEROUS STATEMENTS REGARDING THE PREMIER.

Sir Mackenzie Disposes of Charges Made Against Him by a McCarthyite—A Tissue of Misrepresentation.

Mr. C. W. Sawyers, of Peterborough, has received the following letter from Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Premier of Canada, in which he deals with a letter published in the Peterborough Review a short time ago over the signature of the Secretary of the McCarthy Club:—

Privy Council Office, Ottawa,
February 28th, 1895.

My Dear Mr. Sawers,—There is an old adage which declares that "A lie will travel thousands of miles before truth can get on its boots." I was never more convinced of its correctness than after reading a letter published in the Peterborough Review, over the signature of "W. H. G. Armstrong," dated "16th February, 1895," which some friend had sent to me.

Mr. Armstrong, after giving his reasons for moving for the appointment of a committee at a meeting of the County Orange Lodge of Peterborough to draft a resolution of congratulation to myself, and to the Orangemen of Canada, upon an Orangeman being called to the Premiership of the Dominion, and on the recognition of his Sovereign's favor on the ground of services rendered, adds:—

"That though I did that, I most certainly decline to support politically a Government which has squandered the people's money by paying for requiem masses, and endeavoring to force Separate Schools on the Protestant population of Manitoba and the North West, and an Orange Premier who voted against the Orange Incorporation bill in the House of Commons, when introduced by the late Brother John White, against every Protestant measure brought forward by Dalton McCarthy, and voted for the incorporation and endowment of the Jesuits and Home Rule for Ireland."

If this Mr. Armstrong is not a lineal descendant of the typical Hibernian immortalized in song, who "meets with a friend and for love knocks him down," he ought to be.

It is a marvel how a man, unless he is demented, could possibly pen such a paragraph without the slightest basis of truth. Let me analyze this paragraph and see what it contains:—

1—That "the Government paid money for requiem masses." This is not true, and has been denied publicly over my own signature.

2—That "the Government endeavoured to force Separate Schools on the Protestant population of Manitoba and North-West." The best evidence of the correctness of this charge is that the Government refused to disallow the Manitoba Act abolishing Separate Schools, but left the question of its constitutionality to be decided by the courts.

3—That "the Orange Premier voted against the Orange Incorporation bill in the House of Commons, introduced by the late Brother White." This is utterly false; the "Orange Premier" never gave such a vote.

4—That I "voted against every Protestant measure brought forward by Mr. Dalton McCarthy." No such votes can be found recorded upon the journals of the House of Commons or anywhere else.

5—That I "voted for the incorporation and endowment of the Jesuits." No such proposition was made in the Commons, and, therefore, I could not have voted for it.

6—That I "voted for Home Rule for Ireland." I voted for no motion having reference to Home Rule that was not supported by Mr. Armstrong's present Patron saint, Dalton McCarthy.

I cannot help thinking that every man whose moral perceptions are not blinded, and whose mind is not seared by party prejudices, or the result of evil associations, will ask himself how it is possible that a man believing, as I suppose Mr. Armstrong does, the charges contained in his indictment, could have been a party to the complimentary resolution to which his name is affixed, and which contains the following laudatory paragraph:—

"Be assured that your brethren have every confidence that you will in the future, as in the past, maintain not only the true and noble principles of their order, but uphold the honor and dignity of your exalted position in the Councils of Canada and of the Empire; and in accordance with the aims and principles of the Orange Association, do justice to all classes and creeds in our fair Dominion."

How do these sentiments, to which I find Mr. Armstrong's name attached, accord with the charges that I tried to force Seperate schools upon Manitoba and the North-West, which, by-the-way, Mr. McCarthy declared in the House of Commons he preferred to what he called "Godless schools"; that I squandered the people's money by paying for requiem masses; that I voted against an Orange incorporation bill; that I voted to incorporate and endow the Jesuits; and that I voted against every Protestant measure brought forward by Mr. Dalton McCarthy? I shall not attempt to reconcile this gentleman's position, further than to add that were I guilty of the political sins of which he accuses me, it certainly would be no compliment to the "brethren" to have such a member of their flock promoted to the Premiership, and receive Imperial honors from his Sovereign.

I shall, notwithstanding this condemnation of Mr. Armstrong, endeavor "in the future, as in the past," as expressed in the resolution of congratulation which Mr. Armstrong assisted in framing, to act in accordance "with the aims and principles of the Orange Association, do justice to all classes and creeds in our fair Dominion."

Yours truly,
MACKENZIE BOWELL.

THE HENDERSHOTT MURDER

Trial Expected to Commence To-Morrow Morning.

ALL THE WITNESSES ARE ON HAND

Chief Justice Meredith in His Address to the Grand Jury Upholds the Newspapers in Securing and Publishing All Facts in Connection With Such Cases—The Canadian Jury System

St Thomas, Ont., March 6.—The Assizes at which W. D. Welter and John Hendershott will be tried for the murder of the latter's nephew opened yesterday afternoon. It is not thought that there is any possibility of the case being postponed. It will likely be set for Thursday morning.

The case was before the grand jury yesterday, which is expected to return a true bill this morning.

In his address to the grand jury, speaking of the Hendershott murder, Chief Justice Meredith said it was not necessary for a person to be present at a murder to be guilty of the crime. There may be a promoter and an actor, and the one who procured the other to commit the murder is just as guilty as though he committed it himself.

After reviewing the facts of the case His Lordship said: "No doubt, a great deal of publicity has been given to the facts, or supposed facts, in this case. In these modern days, with the newspapers anxious as they are, and very properly, to get all the information and facts in regard to a case of this kind, sometimes it turns out, and through no fault of the newspapers, that statements given as facts are not wholly correct, and people are thus prone to form erroneous conclusions, pro and con, from what they read in the columns of the newspapers. It should be the duty, and it is important that it should be so, of grand and petit jurors to feel that they form a part of the judicial system just as much as the judges.

He might properly say, having recently been appointed, that the judiciary of this country was one upon which no one thought of casting the slightest suspicion. In this respect our country stood pre-eminent on this continent. This was because the judges do their duty in accordance with the oath they had taken, and were not influenced by circumstances, which they should not allow to influence them, or to which they should not pay attention.

It should be the jurors' firm desire to free themselves from any prejudice, and discharge their duty between the public and the prisoner, and between one litigant and another according to the facts given in evidence. He believed that this was the course of the juries in this country, and that they did not pay any attention to what they heard outside of the court room. If any one had formed an opinion from what he had heard or read, it was his duty to remove his prejudice and come with his mind clear to the discharge of his duties.

The first case taken up was an action for damages for injuries received, brought by Robert Ferguson against the Townships of Southwold and Yarmouth. It is in progress.

MINISTERS AT GUELPH.

Christian Kloepfer Nominated by South Wellington Conservatives.

Guelph, Ont., March 6.—The Liberal-Conservative Association of South Wellington, at a convention yesterday nominated Christian Kloepfer as their candidate. With a Patron and Liberal in the field the Conservatives think Mr. Kloepfer will be elected.

A public meeting was held in the new Opera House, when addresses were made by Hon. Mr. Haggart, Hon. Dr. Montague, Hon. Clarke Wallace and Hon. J. F. Wood.

THE IRISH BILL APPROVED.

A Measure Drafted in the Interests of the Tenants.

London, March 6.—The cordial reception given the principle of Mr. Secretary Morley's Irish Land bill by all political parties was emphasized by an article recently published from the pen of Mr. Thomas W. Russell, Liberal-Unionist member for Mid-Tyrone.

"There is an issue," he wrote, "so straight, so plain and so unmistakable that discussion ought to be almost impossible. The issue I refer to is this: 'Ought the Irish tenant, who has built his own house, drained and fenced the land he tills—ought such a man to pay rent on his own expenditures?'

"This, I submit, is a clean and clear issue. The landlord contention is that the tenant has sufficient protection under the law as it stands. But by the official statement issued by the landlords' convention last month, they have gone a step further than this. In this document they defend what I must plainly describe as the confiscation of the tenant's property.

"I see no way out of a grave difficulty save by Parliament resolutely going back to the clear intentions of the act of 1881—by sweeping aside all legal casuistry, by declaring that while the landlord is entitled to a fair rent upon the land and its inherent capacities, he is not entitled to tax the tenant's industry."

IRISH PRESS ON THE LAND BILL.

The Bill Generally Accepted As a Fair and Reasonable Measure.

Dublin, March 6.—The Freeman's Journal expresses the opinion that the Land bill, introduced in the House of Commons yesterday, contains provisions of vast utility to the tenantry of Ireland.

The Independent (Parnellite) says the vital part of the bill is the question of improvements, which requires to be further explained. The voluntary agreement in regard to evicted tenants, it thinks, is a shameful submission to the Lords.

The Unionist Northern Whig, the organ of the Ulster farmers, accepts the bill as a fair and reasonable measure.

Drug Smuggler Pettengill Skips His Bail.

Specific Duties, ad Valorem Duties, and Protection.

(Halifax Herald.)

A great deal of nonsense is being uttered now-a-days by Grit speakers and writers about specific duties, ad valorem duties, and the varying degrees of protection afforded according as the import prices of foreign commodities are changed. The Grits do not lay it down as a sound and defensible proposition, but one and all assume it as a self-evident fact, that if there is a specific duty on a foreign article, and the foreign price falls to one half what it was, the protection from that very fact becomes doubled! So far from this being self evidently true, or true at all, it is the very opposite of the truth. To illustrate: Suppose that a certain article is produced extensively in the United States at a dollar a bushel for example, and there is a Canadian duty of 15 cents a bushel on that article. The Grit says "That is a protection of 15 per cent." Now suppose the foreign price to fall to fifty cents a bushel. The Grit says "Ah! the protection is just doubled; that is a protection of 30 per cent in favor of the Canadian monopolist!" That is Grit jargon; now what are the facts? When the foreign price of the goods was a dollar a bushel, the first cost and the duty together amounted to $1.15 a bushel, and the Canadian producer must therefore undersell $1.15. When the foreign price fell to fifty cents a bushel, the first cost and the duty together amounted to 65 cents a bushel, and the Canadian producer would then have to undersell 65 cents! Would that Canadian producer have reason to think that his protection was thereby increased? would he feel when he had to cut down his price from, say, $1.15 a bushel to 65 cents a bushel, that he was becoming more and more a bloated monopolist? Our readers will rather think not; and yet that ludicrously false assumption of the Grits, to which we have referred, constitutes the basis of nine tenths of Grit criticism on specific duties.

Take the case of kerosene oil, about which the Grits are constantly harping. In 1878, when they were in power, the duty of their own fixing was 6 cents per wine gallon, equal to 7 1/5 cents per imperial gallon, and the first cost of the oil imported that year was about 22 cents a gallon; the duty was therefore about 33 per cent. of the first cost. The first cost of a gallon of United States oil, therefore, in 1878, together with Canadian duty, would be between 29 cents and 30 cents. This, of course, the Grits thought all right. In 1893 the duty remained just as the Grits left it, but the cost of United States oil had fallen from year to year till it was only about 7¼ cents a gallon; so that the first cost of a gallon of foreign oil, together with the Canadian duty, amounted to less than 14½ cents. And the Grits thereupon raised a tremendous howl that the oil duties were affording 100 per cent. protection, and it was "an outrage" on the people of this country! At the same time the common sense Canadian looked on and saw that the "outrage" consisted in U. States oil, apart from freight charges, being imported into Canada at just about half what it had been sixteen years before. He also saw that the tax paid to the Government was just the same as before, and that he could better afford to pay it than when the oil and duty cost twice as much. Now, as to the protection afforded to the Canadian oil producers: was that increased by the fall in foreign price? Certainly not. The difference was that in 1878 they had to compete against a price of 30c. and freight charges, and in 1893 they had to come down to compete against about 15 cents and freight charges. Where is the increased protection in this? There is none. Nor was there any increase in taxation; the tax per gallon was the same in 1893 as in 1878, and the fall in the foreign price, instead of increasing the tax, only made it all the easier to pay. The only change the Liberal Conservatives have made in the oil duty was to reduce it from 7 1-5 cents to 6 cents a gallon.

The foregoing considerations should make it plain that the fall in the foreign price of goods, upon which there is a specific duty in Canada, neither increases the Canadian taxation, nor the protection to the Canadian producer. All the Grit howl, therefore, about certain specific duties having become, by the fall of prices equivalent to 50, 60 or 100 per cent, and therefore that the protection is increased—all this is the veriest clap-trap. The increased or decreased ad valorem rate of specific duties, from a fall in foreign prices or a rise in foreign prices, has nothing to do with the burden of taxation; it does not increase it a cent or diminish it a cent. If another illustration of this Grit absurdity is needed, take that of the rice duties, in which they say there has been a most iniquitous increase in the ad valorem rate. It is of no practical consequence whatever whether there has been or not; the substantial fact is that the rice consumed in Canada in 1878 paid one cent a pound taxation, while the rice consumed in Canada to-day pays only three-tenths of one cent a pound in taxation, or less than one-third what it did under Grit misrule.

North Hastings Farmers' Institute.

The first meeting of this Institute was held in the Town Hall in the village of Madoc on Saturday, Feb. 23, at 2:30 and 7 o'clock.

There was a fair attendance of the leading farmers of Madoc and Huntingdon and and a few from Rawdon and other municipalities.

Mr. James English, the President, occupied the chair with his usual grace and ability, to the satisfaction of all present.

T. G. Raynor, President of the Central Farmers' Institute, spoke on "Our Fodder Crops," with special reference to the planting, cultivating and harvesting of fodder corn, and recommended the silo as being the most compact and economical way of curing and storing the crop.

Mr. Alex. Yuill, of Carleton Place, spoke on "Care and Management of our Dairy Herds," giving the system as practised in their own stable, kindness and regularity in feeding and milking being two important factors in producing either milk or in raising and fattening stock.

Mr. Raynor then spoke on "Orchards and fruit growing." Mr. James White gave a very pithy and practical address and Mr. McComb made a few remarks, when the meeting adjourned.

In the evening Mr. Raynor spoke on "The objects and system of carrying on the Farmers' Institutes and some of the benefits to be derived from them," and also on "The care and management of manures," and Mr. Yuill gave "Winter dairying and its reference to corn and the silo."

A. F. Wood, ex-M.P.P., gave an interesting address on the practicability of the Institute and other matters. All the addresses were listened to with marked attention and discussion quite lively and interesting for the first meeting followed and was taken part in by Messrs. Caskey, O'Hara, Jarvis, Principal Brown, of the Model School, J. McComb, S. Salisbury and others.

The second meetings were held at Springbrook on Monday, the 25th Feb., with President English presiding, and owing largely to the efforts and enthusiasm of Mr. James McComb, the attendance was much larger than at Madoc. One of the pleasing features was a good attendance of the fair sex, and at our future meetings we hope to see many more of them.

We were also specially pleased to note the presence of Warden Martin, of Stirling, Ex-Warden James Duncan and to have the assistance of Prof. James Whitton, who gave a very practical address on Winter Dairying and the feeding of cows.

"Butter Making," "Tillage," "How to make the farm attractive," and other like subjects were ably handled by Messrs. Raynor and Yuill and discussions of different subjects were taken part in by several of those present.

Messrs. Raynor and Yuill speak in highest terms of the Agricultural College and experimental farm at Guelph, and think it a great mistake that many more of the intelligent farmers' sons of this province especially, do not avail themselves of the splendid opportunities there offered for acquiring the scientific and practical knowledge so necessary to the proper understanding and carrying on of this grand work of agriculture in an intelligent and successful manner.

PROPOSED SUMMER CARNIVAL

THE PUBLIC MEETING IN THE CITY HALL SLIMLY ATTENDED.

Letters Read From Ottawa and Hamilton Relative to Their Carnivals—The Council to be Asked for a Grant—The Hotel Keepers Expected to Contribute $1000.

A public meeting was held in the City Hall last evening to discuss the proposed summer carnival. The attendance was small, in fact it was a question in the minds of the promoters at 8:15 whether to go on with the discussion of the question or not. The audience could not be called representative, but it was thoroughly unanimous, those opposed to the project not having taken the trouble to be present.

Mayor Walmsley, chairman, after calling the meeting to order, called the following gentlemen to the platform: Mr. Corby, M. P., Ald. Yeomans, W. N. Ponton, W. C. Mikel, Thos. Ritchie, Col. Lazier, Henry Pringle, and F. S. Wallbridge. His Worship said he was pleased to see so many young men present, as they were the future taxpayers and they showed their progressiveness by attending. The committee appointed had secured considerable information that would assist in the details of the work and also show the advantages to be derived from the venture.

W. N. Ponton, Esq., read a letter from Ottawa, which stated that the recent Carnival there had been a success. The city had granted $1000 for lighting, etc. The proceeds had amounted to $14,000 and the expenditure had been $13,000. Another letter was read from C. R. Smith, Sec.-Treas., of the Hamilton Board of Trade, giving an account of their carnival held a few years ago. The expenditure on the whole affair was $9,300. With the Hamilton letter were extracts from a speech delivered by an Englishman, who attended the carnival.

Ald. Yeomans was called upon and read a letter from John J. Harrison, of Ottawa, a former Bellevillian. It stated that the subscriptions to the carnival amounted to $10,000. The City Council did not contribute directly, but made arrangements for extra lighting. There was a surplus of about $1000, which would likely be refunded to the Council. It gave work to poor people and set money in circulation. He suggested constant advertising and a responsible committee to carry out a carnival successfully. A friend of his thought Belleville an ideal place for a summer carnival.

Henry Pringle also read a letter from a gentleman in Ottawa to Mr. H. Corby, M. P., giving pointers on the subject. He also read another from H. H. Gildersleeve, of Kingston, to the Mayor, offering what assistance he could give. Another from R. C. Carter, Manager of the Deseronto Navigation Co., stating that his company would deal liberally with the carnival committee. Another from J. Lyons Biggar, regretting his inability to be present.

Mayor Walmsley said if the carnival was held it should be an honor to Belleville, but it would require money to carry out the scheme. He called upon ex-Ald. W. N. Ponton.

Mr. Ponton said if we do want a carnival the audience present should give an expression as to whether they wanted it or not. He said the date of the carnival had been suggested for July 1st to 4th, and he thought it would require $3,000 before the scheme could be put under way. The City Council, in his opinion, should contribute $1,000, and he for one would not be in favor of going on with the affair if the Council did not make a grant. He spoke at some length on the facilities of Belleville for a carnival. We should advertise the city and our bay so that many who do not know of its beauties may come here and see it. He thought a carnival would tend to advertise the city. The carnival would put money in circulation and bring money into the city. He was sure enough attractions could be obtained to draw people here.

W. C. Mikel was called upon, and spoke briefly. He thought nature had done much for Belleville, and he considered her facilities ample for the holding of a carnival. He was of opinion that the Council should give at least one-third towards the expenditure. The carnival would impress upon visitors the fact of our progressiveness. He was in accord with the scheme, if the funds could be raised.

Ex-Mayor Wallbridge said he was heartily in accord with the object of the meeting. He was satisfied that the carnival would draw a large crowd of people. He suggested one day for bicycling, one day for a regatta, and horse races on two other days. He did not think it would cost as much as mentioned by Ald. Ponton. He thought the receipts at the gates of the attractions would largely meet the expenditure. He suggested that one day be set aside for a fireman's celebration.

Col. Lazier said he had always had and still had great faith in this city of ours. We have a first-class hotel, granolithic walks, and will have an electric street railway before the carnival comes off. He would give a liberal subscription towards the carnival. He thought the Council should deal liberally with it also.

Thos. Ritchie, said he had not given the matter much consideration, but as far as he had been informed, he was heartily in accord with the project if the affair could be carried out successfully. He thought the carnival would bring our city prominently before the outside world. He thought, however, we should go slow in the premises. He did not think a public meeting the best means of arriving at a conclusion of this kind, but thought a full committee should be appointed to draft some plans, which could be submitted to a subsequent meeting. He thought the ladies should be consulted in the matter. To make the carnival successful the citizens must be unanimous. He was ready and willing to do all he could to promote the carnival if they decided to hold one.

H. Corby, M.P., said we must go into this matter with our eyes open. He was sorry there were not more present. He thought the City Council should be asked for at least $1,000. He suggested subscription committees for each ward and he would, with the Mayor, take Front st. He would not be in the city after May during the summer, but would assist the committee by a good subscription.

Ald. Yeomans said his committee had been given orders at the first of the year to keep a guard over the civic money bag. He did not think the gentlemen who had suggested that the Council give $1,000 were really serious. The gentlemen who had offered their time and assistance on behalf of the carnival had shown their progressiveness. Although he had vowed he would not work on a subscription committee, yet he felt almost persuaded to retract that vow and go in to help the project. He regretted the small attendance and thought it would be wise to appoint a committee which could report at a subsequent meeting. The Council's grants were regulated by law and could only be made for certain purposes. He suggested that the committee get what subscriptions they could and then ask the Council to supplement it with a grant and he had no doubt they would act fairly in the matter. He thought $4,000 could be raised without any assistance from the Council. The hotel-keepers should be very liberal in their subscriptions, as they would be greatly benefitted by the carnival. He was in accord with the project and would assist in any way possible.

Mr. W. W. Power said he was in sympathy with the carnival. As far as the hotel keepers were concerned he was sure they would do their share. He thought no trouble would be experienced in raising $1000 from the hotels and saloons. The Queen's hotel would do its share.

Cameron Brown said he would do all in his power, both financially and otherwise, for the success of the carnival.

W. S. B. Armstrong, of the Ontario, said he had been accredited with being dead against the carnival, but he was in favor of it if it can be made a succes. A market day crowd would not tend towards the success of the carnival.

Ald. Ponton moved, seconded by Frank Lewis, that this committee pledge their hearty support and financial assistance towards the summer carnival.—Carried unanimously.

Col. Lazier moved, seconded by H. Corby, M.P., that the following gentlemen be a committee to take the project into their consideration: Mayor Walmsley, H. Corby, M.P., W. H. Biggar, M.P.P., Thos. Ritchie, the aldermen of the city, ex-Mayor Wallbridge, ex-Ald. Mikel, ex-Ald. Ponton, Henry Pringle, C. M. Stork, Col. Lazier, John Brasier, J. C. Jamieson and T. S. Carman. The committee will meet a week from next Thursday at H. Corby's office.

HUNG HIMSELF.

An Ameliasburg Farmer Commits Suicide by Hanging Himself in His Barn.

WELLINGTON, March 6th.—A sad affair took place yesterday afternoon at the home of Harvey Terry, about four miles from this place. Mr. Terry had just returned from attending the funeral of a neighbor, when, taking a rope to the barn he fastened it to a beam, and standing on a box, made a slip knot and placed it around his neck, then with a short piece of rope he fastened his hands behind his back and kicked the box from under his feet, and when found life was extinct. Mr. Terry was a well-to-do farmer and no cause can be given for the rash act except the loss of his barn last fall and the continued ill health of his wife.

Woman's Christian Association.

At the monthly meeting held yesterday reports were received from the various committees engaged in the work. The Hospital Board reported that twenty patients had been treated during the month, five being city poor. The Treasurer reported having received two donations of large amounts, one for $25 and the other $20. The need of an ambulance was spoken of and the ladies urged to attend Miss Gordon's lectures at the hospital. The Dorcas Society reported having sent to the hospital 12 men's night shirts, and having distributed to the city poor 18 new garments and 26 second class articles, also new material given to a poor woman unable to sew for herself. Much distress and poverty was reported by the ward visitors, and $133.68 was given out for the relief of the city poor.

Mrs. Bowen, whose case has been brought before the public through the city press, has received assistance from the Association for years, but an extra dollar was allowed her for this month.

Another Charge Against Spencer.

Alva B. Spencer, who pleaded guilty on Friday last to the charge of removing and disposing of chattels under mortgage held by the Freehold and Loan Company, of Toronto, was brought up this morning for sentence. A charge has also been laid against Spencer and his son William of obtaining $150 from E. D. O'Flynn & Son, Madoc, on January 1st with intent to defraud. The Magistrate said he felt inclined to be lenient in the first case, as there was no doubt the prisoner, who had heretofore borne a good reputation, had been driven to dispose of his stock and implements by cramped circumstances, but he would reserve his judgment until the subsequent charge had been tried. The case was enlarged till five o'clock this afternoon. P. J. M. Anderson appeared for the Crown; A. R. Dougall for the prisoner and F. E. O'Flynn for O'Flynn & Son.

Give us Pure Air.

The lawyers are complaining of the decidedly unsanitary state of the police court room. A prominent barrister said this morning that after standing over the register in the Magistrate's court a few minutes to warm he felt so weak that he could scarcely walk. The stench that comes up from the basement is nauseating, to say the least. Those whose duties call them to the police court every day are complaining of the impure air they are forced to breath and it is time some steps were taken to remedy this decidedly unhealthy condition of the room.

Speaks From Experience.

The Mail and Empire says: "Belleville is considering the advisability of having a summer carnival and the INTELLIGENCER very wisely says: 'We cannot, after candidly considering the subject, and taking into account the experience of other places which have held such affairs, see anything in it for Belleville.'" It is not necessary to repeat the remainder of the quotation.

You Want to buy Right.

You, the average man, now pay out from necessity all the money that you earn—your expenses exactly balance your wages. Have you ever stopped to reflect that a saving of 25 per cent. in the former is precisely equivalent to an increase of 25 per cent. in the latter? At the Oak Hall Clothing House such a thing is possible, it is easy, it is unavoidable.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

THE SPRING SITTINGS WITH JURY BEFORE CHANCELLOR BOYD.

A Long Docket—Several Cases Settled—A New Issue Unsuccessfully Raised—Other Important Business.

The case of Clark vs. Leonard, in which the plaintiff sought to recover damages from the deft. on account of the death of her husband, alleged to have been caused through the use of liquor procured at the hotel of the deft. at the village of Warkworth, was brought to a close at the finish of the case for the prosecution.

Aaron Clark, sworn, said: He was a brother of the late Walter E. Clark; was was with him on the occasion of the accident; it was the 20th of November last; the deceased and witness went to Warkworth; they got there about 2 p.m. Witness did not see his brother again until about 6 o'clock that evening. He appeared to have had a drink or two; saw him again at 8 o'clock in Leonard's hotel, when he (deceased) asked the boys to have a "smile." They went in, but witness did not drink. They started for home about 9 o'clock at night, and had gone but a short distance when the waggon upset by striking against the corner of the sidewalk; all were thrown out, and Walter, when picked up, was insensible, and bleeding from the mouth, nose, ears, and was also vomiting blood. He was taken into Dr. Free's office, where he remained for a week, when he died. He was insensible the greater portion of the time.

In cross examination by J. Henderson, the witness said the night was very dark and his brother was driving rather fast when the waggon was overturned.

Mr. A. Cassidy, sworn, said he saw Walter Clark at Leonard's hotel the night of the accident. It was about 8 o'clock. Witness had a drink with the deceased, who had been drinking considerably.

Chas. Dingman, sworn: Saw Walter Clark at Warkworth on Nov. 20th; witness and Clark had a couple of drinks together; Mr. Leonard served them; they drank whiskey and pop; did not see Mr. Clark after 6 o'clock; Clark was not intoxicated at the time.

A. Baker, sworn, said he accompanied Walter Clark to Warkworth on November 20th; did not see Clark drink anything that day; saw Clark about 6 o'clock in the evening; he appeared to have been drinking; Clark came out of Leonard's hotel; when Clark got into the waggon he stumbled somewhat. Witness asked Clark to let him drive, but he refused. Clark drove the horses very fast. They had not driven over about 80 or 100 yards when the waggon struck the sidewalk and was overthrown. All the occupants were thrown out. Clark was rendered unconscious by the injuries which he received. Clark was recognized as a first class driver.

Dr. Free, sworn, said he remembered the night Walter Clark was brought to his house. He was bleeding from the mouth, nose and ears. He was insensible, and remained so the greater part of the time. He died a week later. Hemorrhage of the brain was, in his opinion, the cause, of death.

Dr. Richards was sworn and corroborated the testimony of Dr. Free.

Mrs. Ella Clute, sworn; Saw Mr. Clark at her store on the night of the accident. He came in on three different occasions. He appeared to be considerably the worse of liquor.

Mrs. M. A. Clark, sworn, said she was the widow of the late Walter Clark. She remembered the day her husband went to Warkworth. He was considered to be a first class driver of horses.

This concluded the case for the prosecution and Mr. Haverson contended that a case had not been made out. His Lordship concurred with him and entered a nonsuit.

DAMAGES CLAIMED FOR A KICK BY A HORSE.

MCCULLOUGH VS. ANDERSON.—This was an action brought by William McCullough, a farm servant, resident in Ameliasburg, against Wm. Anderson, ex-M. P. P., by whom he was employed at the time of the occurrence, to recover damages for injuries received by him, by one of deft's. horses kicking him. The plff. swore that about 8 o'clock on the morning of December 30th, 1893, he was cleaning out the stable at Anderson's, when he was kicked in the abdomen by the horse in question. Witness was laid up until August, 1894, from the effects of his injuries. He had not been able to work since, although he had tried to perform various kinds of labor. Drs. File, Gibson, McCall and Quackenbush had attended him off and on since he was hurt.

Cross-examined by Mr. Clute.—Had used the horse at ploughing and doing other work about the farm. He never knew the animal to be vicious, but had seen him kick on three occasions.

Drs. Gibson and Quackenbush testified as to treating McCullough, who appeared to be suffering from an injury to the abdomen.

Paul Campbell, sworn, said he worked for the Messrs. Anderson for two seasons and the horse "Joe," which had kicked Mr. McCullough, had kicked on several occasions.

At this stage of the proceedings the court adjourned until 9:30 Wednesday morning.

WEDNESDAY, March 6th.

The case of McCullough vs. Anderson was continued this morning and was not concluded until 1 p. m., when the jury retired.

Noble Dafoe swore that he worked for some time for Mr. Wm. Anderson and knew the horse "Joe." He had seen him kick on several occasions.

Dr. McColl was called and testified that he prescribed for McCullough for injuries which he received from the kick of a horse.

Mrs. McCullough testified that she remembered when her husband was injured. George Anderson brought him there. George told her that Mr. McCullough had been kicked by the same horse which had kicked him (George) in the spring. Wm. Anderson called at the house and during a conversation stated that the horse was a vicious old brute. Her husband has been more or less ill ever since he was kicked.

This concluded the case for the plff.

Dr. File testified that he was called to see Mr. McCullough two days after he was kicked and found him suffering severe pains in the stomach. Witness did not think that McCullough was seriously hurt. McCullough said he had been seriously hurt five years ago by a runaway.

Willoughby Anderson, sworn, said he knew the horse "Joe," who was 14 years of age. He purchased the horse 11 years ago and broke it; never saw the horse kick or saw him act viciously.

Geo. Anderson and Wm. Anderson, jr., testified that the horse was a quiet animal.

Mrs. E. Steel testified that she was a daughter of Mr. Wm. Anderson, and had often ridden and driven the horse "Joe," and always found it quiet.

Royal Jones, swore that he was a blacksmith and had often shod the horse; never saw the animal kick; considered it a quiet animal.

Wm. Anderson testified as to the animal being a quiet one, and not having kicked except when he was tormented.

This concluded the case and Mr. Clute addressed the jury on behalf of the defts. and Mr. Wright for the plff. His Lordship summed up.

The jury after being out for one hour, returned into court and rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for $800 and costs. Lyons and Wright for plff., Clute & Williams for deft.

TRUE BILLS.

The Grand Jury this morning brought in two more true bills against John D. Ronald, for offering to bribe Frank Campbell, of Tweed, to assist by his vote in the council to procure a Ronald fire engine for use in the village.

THE Y.M.C.A. DIRECTORS.

They Held Their Regular Monthly Meeting and Discussed Association Affairs.

The regular monthly meeting of the Y.M.C.A. directors was held last evening in the Association rooms and there was a good attendance.

It was decided to hold special services in the Association rooms, commencing Monday next, to be led by Rev. W. W. Weeks, of Moncton, N.B.

The report of the Educational Work Committee was received. Good work has been done in the classes and the lecture course had been quite profitable. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Dr. Anglin, for his very able lecture a few weeks since.

On motion the W.C.T.U. were allowed the use of the parlor for their meetings, to commence on April first.

Philharmonic.

A larger number were in attendance at the Philharmonic rehearsal last night than for some weeks past, and in consequence good work was done on the music to be presented at the next concert, which is expected to take place late in April. Address and Presentation.

On Saturday evening, March 2nd, the members of Shannonville Lodge, No. 301, A.O.U.W., turned out to their Lodge meeting in large numbers, it being the occasion of receiving the report of Bro. A.D. Walker, M.D., representative at Grand Lodge held in Toronto, Feb. 20th and 21st. A pleasant event then took place when Past Master Workman, Bro. A. D. Walker, M.D., was presented with a gold P.M.W's. jewel, and the following address:—

March 2nd, 1895.

PAST MASTER WORKMAN A. D. WALKER, M. D.

DEAR BROTHER,—For four years you have occupied the chair of this Lodge and during all that time we have been pleased to observe the zeal and untiring efforts you have put forth for the advancement of our Lodge and the Order in general. We trust the many admonitions you have given us may incite a greater zeal on the part of the officers and members of this Lodge for the advancement of the Order. It is encouraging to know that there has been a large increase in the membership of this Lodge during these years, and while this is gratifying to us as Workmen, we are also reminded that one of our number has been in the silent tomb during the time of your occupancy of the chair. The first time our membership has been broken by the messenger of death. Rev. Hudson was called very suddenly, but we have the consolation of knowing that death cannot enter that abode into which he has been removed, and that he made provisions for those dear ones whom God in his mercy has not yet seen fit to call hence.

We therefore desire to give expression to our feelings of appreciation for the service you have rendered us during the last four years as Master Workman of our lodge and with the best of fraternal feelings, we press you to accept this P. M. W. badge as a small token of our brotherly regard.

We desire that you will receive this, our gift, not for its real value, but as memento of the esteem and regard we hold for you, personally, and as a slight token of our gratitude for the lively interest you have always taken in the welfare of the lodge.

We also commend the wisdom of the Grand Lodge in their selection of you as District Deputy Grand Master for Quinte District, knowing that you will faithfully and ably perform the duties devolving upon you in the said office. Trusting that the Past Master Workman's chair of our lodge will be filled as often during the present year as your professional duties will permit, and that we may continue to work together in harmony and good will, we wish you and yours blessings and success in all the callings of life.

Signed on behalf of Shannonville Lodge, No. 301 A. O. U. W. in charity, hope and protection.

W. A. ESMOND, M.W.
R. H. LIDDLE, Recorder.

Dr. Walker, in accepting the jewel, made a suitable reply, thanking the members for their marked kindness to him in the past, and hoping that the friendship that had existed between him and the lodge would ever continue, and that in the time to come the lodge would never have reason to change their opinion of him, due to any error of his of omission or commission.

Montreal Markets

Montreal, March 4th.—Grain—There appears to be very good demand for grain and the market is very firm. Oats are quoted at 40c and peas at about 69c. There is not much doing in either barley or rye, and prices remain purely nominal. Wheat, No. 1 hard, nominal; peas, per 63 lbs, in store, 69c to 70c; oats, per 34 lbs, store, 39c to 40c; rye, No. 2, 52½c to 53c; barley, feed, 49c to 50c; barley, malting, 57c to 58c.

Flour—There is a fair local demand, but the export business is on a very moderate scale. Prices, however, are quite firm in sympathy with the strength of the wheat market. Straight rollers, $2.90 to $3; extra, $2.50 to $2.70; superfine, $2.35 to $2.40; fine, $2.20; strong bakers', Manitoba, $3.65 to $3.70; strong bakers', Manitoba, best brand, $3.70 to $3.75; spring patents, Manitoba, $3.90.

Meal—In sympathy with the continual advances in oats the market for meal is firmer, with sales of granulated and rolled at $4. Granulated and rolled, per brl, $3.90 to $4; granulated and rolled, per bag, $1.90 to $2; standard, per brl, $3.90 to $4; standard, per bag, $1.90.

Feed—Scarce and high about fits the position of bran at present. The demand is fairly good. There is not a great deal doing in either shorts or mouillie. Bran, $18 to $19; shorts, $19; mouillie, $21 to $22.

Cheese—While there is a little better feeling to the cheese market the volume of business has not increased to any appreciable extent. White cheese over the cable is quoted at 48s and colored at 49s 6d.

Butter—Jobbers did little or nothing today owing to the storm. Prices remain about the same. Creamery, 20c to 21c; townships, 14c to 17c; western, 10c to 13c; rolls, 11c to 14c.

Eggs—The colder weather, smaller receipts and a good steady demand all tend to keep the market very firm. Montreal limed eggs are quoted at 19c to 20c and and fresh at 28c to 30c.

Dressed hogs—The colder weather has created a little firmer feeling, with sales at $5.60 to $5.70.

LIVE STOCK.

This is a dull period of the year for live stock, as is clearly shown by the condition of the local markets. Ther were all dull today, and there is nothing that would indicate a material improvement in the near future. Cable advices are less encouraging, quoting live cattle lower at 10c to 11c and sheep at 11c to 12½c. There was a larger run of cattle at the C.P.R. yards this week, but there was a falling off in sheep. Hogs showed an increase. This morning at the market three loads of choice western cattle were taken for Quebec account. A comparative statement of receipts follows:—This week—Cattle, 738; sheep, 37; hogs, 479; calves, 123. Last week—Cattle, 423; sheep, 829; hogs, 83; calves, 49. The receipts of horses this week were 87 head, against 16 last week. Trade at the east end market this morning was fairly brisk. There were about 550 head of cattle offered and the majority sold within the range of 2½c to 3½c. About 60 calves offered and 150 sheep and lambs; the former sold at about $3 to $12 each and the latter about 3½c per lb. There were only a few spring lambs offered. They sold at $6 each.

The Weather.

Fine winter weather continues. The lowest temperature last night was 1 above zero; at 8 a.m., 9; and at noon 36.

PROBABILITIES.

South to west winds; fair weather; higher temperature.

Sunday Observance.

The meeting in reference to Sunday observance, which was held last night in Emmanuel church, was largely attended. Rev. J. S. Trotter, Rector, presided and the speakers were Rev. Messrs. Marshall, McCamus, Woodcock and Roberts.

SIDNEY CROSSING.

MARCH 4th.—Your fair city's commodious emporium must have been well crowded with rural vendors, judging from the numbers who passed through here on Saturday.—Miss Hattie Pringle, of Belleville, returned to her home on Saturday, after spending a pleasant week with her friend Miss Minnie Fletcher.—Mr. John Johnston, our worthy Inspector, paid an official visit to this institution of learning last week. We presume it is with pride that he revisits the the school where he, in youthful days, so successfully wielded the birch. He was a universal favorite and we always delighted in seeing him in the neighborhood.—Mrs. John Whyte left on Saturday last for a prolonged visit with her daughter, Mrs. Tom Clute, of Stirling.—The many friends and relatives of Mr. "Dan" Strohn, late of California, but formerly of this place, will be exceedingly grieved to hear of his sudden demise, which occurred in that southern clime some few weeks ago. He is a cousin of Mr. J. W. Young and well-known here. He left the Crossing in early youth in company with his cousins, Messrs. Geo. and Ezekiel Lawrence, to seek his fortune in that sunny land of the south. They were all successful and finally settled there. Mr. Geo. Lawrence died very suddenly of heart failure during last September, and the remaining brother, Ezekiel, is a prosperous and wealthy land owner, possessing some hundred acres or more of flourishing almond orchards and vineyards. During last year he shipped over two carloads of almonds to other ports. We are always delighted to hear from our successful Sidney boys who are carving the fortunes in other lands.—Mr. Ned Vandervoort spent last week with friends in Foxboro. Miss Emma Hogle is visiting her uncle, Mr. Ed. Deacon, Murney st.—Pedro has been introduced into our quiet hamlet, and already several parties have been made.—By the way, the farmers are packing in ice; it looks as though we are going to have an unusually hot summer. Messrs. Wm. and Russel Lott are kept busily at work supplying their urgent customers with the crystal cakes.—The many friends of Mrs. Henry Bleecker will be grieved to hear that she is dangerously ill.—Mrs. Webster Kelley is spending a few days with relatives in your beautiful city.—Mr. and Mrs. Emory Finkle, who have been enjoying themselves with relatives in Madoc, returned home on Saturday highly delighted with their visit. They state that the annihilation by fire of the Presbyterian church has sadly marred the picturesqueness of Madoc scenery.—Mrs. Henry Juby is visiting her daughter Mrs. E. A. Bartlett.—Mr. Stratton, agent, has been canvassing this section with catarrhal remedies and other articles manufactured by Carnaghan of Deseronto.

ROBLIN'S MILLS.

On Saturday evening the Ameliasburg amateur minstrels made their second appearance in the Town Hall here and were greeted with an overflowing house. The entertainment throughout was perfectly free from anything that would offend the feelings of the most fastidious. Numbers attended from Belleville and competent critics pronounced it the best performance given by any amateur company for years. This company have decided to play at Consecon on Saturday, March 9th, and at Wellington the following Monday.—Miss Huldah Roblin has returned home after spending two months visiting friends in Ingersoll and Cobourg.—Misses Sarah and Annie Tomblin have returned home after spending two weeks with their sister, Mrs. M. Sprague.—Miss Morgan, of Omemee, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Irvine Coleman.—Mr. and Mrs. Beddes are visiting at Mr. Albert Lout's this week—Gerard Jinks and bride, and Adam Palmer and wife, spent Sunday at Chas. Palmer's.—Robt J. Hazard, wife and daughter May, left last week for their home at Bad Axe, Michigan. Sam Smith, jr., and wife, of Demorestville, are spending a few days at Wm. H. Stafford's.—Will Johnson, of Picton, who has been visiting at his cousin's, Chas. Roblin, returned home last week.—Wm. Coleman, Trenton, spent Sunday with his parents.—A large party from Albury took in the minstrel show on Saturday night and we noticed by their smiling faces it was the best they had seen for a long time.—Albert Lout is the happiest man in town these days. It is a son.—Mrs. Butler, of Plainfield, has returned after visiting her sister, Mrs. Samuel Simmons.—Nathan Hyatt is making preparations for building a grand house in the spring.—Miss Sprague left last week on a visit to her brother, Mr. W. G. Sprague, M. D., at Barker's, N.Y.—Mr. W. H. Stafford has removed his stock of goods to the store recently erected by the A.O.U. W. of this place. We wish him success.

The Y.P.S. of C.E. of John St. Church.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of John St. Presbyterian church held a business meeting at the residence of Mr. Jas. Fleming, Cedar St., last evening. Mr. Bryce occupied the chair, and the reports of the various committees on the different lines of work being done by the Society were presented, and showed everything in a most satisfactory and healthy condition. Rev. Mr. George, pastor of the Church, was present, and made a few remarks. An impromptu programme of speeches, music and recitations, was much enjoyed by all. Light refreshments were served, and all present spent a pleasant evening.

BELLEVILLE

Daily Intelligencer.

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

Reasons for Success.

The success of Norway Pine Syrup as a cure for coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles is due to the fact that it is the best and pleasantest remedy ever discovered, and because its action is prompt and certain.

Chronic Derangements of the Stomach, Liver and Blood, are speedily removed by the active principle of the ingredients entering into the composition of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. These pills act specifically on the deranged organs, stimulating to action the dormant energies of the system, thereby removing disease and renewing life and vitality to the afflicted. In this lies the great secret of the popularity of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills.

CHAPTER I.

Meryon awoke with the issue of an interesting dream in doubt. Terah had admitted that she loved him; the prince had seemed indisposed to hear reason; but just then the purple and gold heraldic heron which formed the central device of his highness' state banner detached itself from the surrounding embroidery and flew viciously at Meryon's head. He heard Terah's voice raised in warning, and saw two black mountains at the verge of a desolate plain, sundered from each other by a rugged defile. The sun was setting behind the mountains—and he awoke.

He yawned and glanced at the long silver chain by which a lamp of pierced brass depended from the ceiling. A ray of sunlight from the east window rested on it—by which token he knew it was about nine o'clock.

The room in which he lay was beautiful and—as the bedchamber of a modern young American—singular.

Lofty and of good size, it was rather narrow for its length. Polished marbles of tender hues paved the floor, the central part of which was depressed several inches below the ends, and in a basin in this depression leaped and fell the slender jet of a fountain. A high dado glowed with oriental tiles colored like fading sunsets, and the walls above were hung with tapestries stained as with crushed roses and violets. Higher still was a wide border of dark brown wood exquisitely carved, and above this the four windows, a foot high by four times that width. Silks of mellow tone draped the ceiling.

Along three sides of the south end of the chamber extended a broad divan, part of which served Meryon as a bed. Here and there about this dim, lovely room stood vases of wrought bronze and fine porcelain. Within reach of his arm was a triple gong on a carved wood stand, with a hammer hanging by a silken cord. Meryon struck thrice upon this graceful instrument, and three soft notes of an octave's interval tingled on the air. As they subsided the portiere was pushed open, and a graceful figure entered, bearing a tray with coffee, cakes and cigarettes.

Had the figure been fully draped, you would have taken it for that of a girl, so refined and beautiful were the aquiline features and the shaggy cloud of soot-black, fine-spun hair, which fell on the shoulders. But the supple body, naked from the waist up, was that of a boy of twelve or fourteen, tawny as fine bronze. Girt round his loins was a skirt of dark blue gossamer stuff, with silver lines running through it and a silver fringe, and about his neck a double necklace of delicate silver links hung half way down his breast. Black as night were the great eyes which met Meryon's blue ones, and radiant the smile of greeting which revealed his flashing teeth.

The ensuing dialogue, though carried on in an oriental tongue, shall for the sake of uniformity be here given in the English equivalent.

"The top of the morning to you, Ebal, my beauty!" said the American. "You're a sight for sore eyes! Did any one ever tell you that you look surprisingly like the divine Princess Terah—God bless her! Maybe only an artist who has painted your portrait as often as I have could see it in your present rig; but put on one of her dresses and anyone would know it. The funny thing is that neither she nor you resemble the prince; but Terah's mother, if she were asked * * * however, there's no fathoming the mysteries of oriental—diplomacy."

"Honored lord!" murmured the boy, in a tone of half-frightened remonstrance, but smiling still. He knelt and placed the tray upon the divan beside his master. Then taking a cigarette from the enameled box on the tray he put it daintily between his lips and lit it at the silver spirit lamp.

"TENUAH SENT YOU THIS."

Having inhaled a single whiff of fragrant smoke, he handed it to Meryon with a charming obeisance and he accepted it with the complacency of one who knows his ease and likes it.

"I don't know whether this is most like Aladdin's palace or a glorified Turkish bath," said he to himself; and then to Ebal: "What news have you brought me, you rascal? What of the rose who makes cabbages of all other roses—the star that makes a brass kettle of the sun? Have you brought me nothing from her?"

Now, Ebal thought Meryon a wonderful and worshipful being, but as a born oriental he was frightened by the audacity of his passion for the young princess. From a fold of his girdle he took a small rosebud, such as grew on the gardens of Saadi or Omar, and presented it to the other as if it were a fragile explosive.

"I know nothing myself, mighty lord—but Sennah said I was to give this to you and to say that the lion must beware of the pitfall which the hunter digs in his path. That means Hatipha, the head eunuch—how I hate the old beast!" he added, lowering his voice to a whisper.

Meryon laughed. "That's all right, my lad," he said, taking the bud and kissing it. "Don't you be scared. I'm looking out for you; and I'm wiser than a thousand such old mules as Hatipha. I talk openly to you because I love you, and Senuah is our confidante because she's your sister and the princess' favorite maid—and there's no one to take her place. But I can hold my tongue when I see fit. And when the time comes"—here he bestowed upon the youth a wink of great significance. "I'll take you along with us to America and make your fortune. Well, now, be off, my beauty, and leave me to drink my coffee and meditate!"

"But I may help my lord to dress later?" asked Ebal, reluctantly retiring from the fascinating presence.

"When I'm ready I'll hit the gong. There—Allah—Il—Allah Bismillah! Clear out!"

As Ebal vanished with a smile and a sigh, Meryon fell upon the bud with amorous rapture. It fared badly, as buds are apt to do, in the cause of love. After smelling and kissing it till it looked as if ruined by premature dissipation, the lover ended by devouring it, petals, calix and all, as if by incorporating it with his bodily substance to mystically bind to his own the soul of his beloved. Then he drank his coffee and took counsel with him self.

He was an American artist in search of the beautiful, whose devotion to his art was proved by his possessing a fortune that made him more than independent of the world. He had brought good letters of introduction to the prince of this little kingdom, and had confirmed his welcome by painting a capital full-length portrait of his host. Great favor was his; a suite of rooms in the palace, and servants for his exclusive behoof. The prince was not only at all times accessible to him without ceremony, but could not get enough of his society. During his two months' sojourn he had made a lot of valuable studies, in many of which Ebal, in all poses and costumes, or with no costume save his own boyish beauty, was the centre of interest. This was all very well.

But alas for insatiable human nature and malicious fate! One day (owing to a concatentation of accidents which cannot here be detailed) he met face to face and unpremeditatedly the only daughter of the prince, Terah the beautiful. It was all up with him in a moment; and her oriental fancy seems to have been no less captivated by the fresh complexion, handsome features and red hair of the occidental stranger. They loved each other at the first intention, as surgeons say, just as young people used to do in the golden prime of the good Haroun Alraschid. Ah! Romance lingers in this old world yet, and we shall see!

HE MET FACE TO FACE THE ONLY DAUGHTER OF THE PRINCE.

Meryon had the tact to cover his face with his hands, and the presence of mind to look through his fingers. The princess replaced her veil not so hastily as to prevent a quick, artist glance from catching a rapturous impression of her dusky grace and glorious eyes. Fat old Hatipha, with pendent cheeks flapping, bustled up in vast perturbation and whipped the princess out of the infidel's sight as fast as he could. But Senuah, following, threw over her shoulder an arch glance which in America would have passed for a wink of sympathetic intelligence. Mischief was afoot.

Then followed intrigue. One afternoon the back part of the booth of Musreddin, the jewel-merchant, contained a new apprentice, with huge turban and voluminous drapery, whose blue eyes wandered from his work as Terah entered, and never left her face during the half hour she chaffered with the jeweler over the price of a ring—which, on the other hand, she would never have looked at twice, had she not been stealing a thousand glances at the back part of the shop! Again, from a meshrebie-screened window (chartered for the purpose), who glowered invisible and impassioned while Terah, her divine countenance not ten inches from his, debated interminably with Senuah as to whether they should turn to the right and visit the confectioner, or to the left to the silk mercer's; while Hatipha, the unsuspicious, stood in the shadow hardby, with mind at ease because, forsooth, the street was empty. Empty!—and all the while Terah's soft finger tips were being kissed ravenously through the lattice-work, and, when at last the debate with Senuah came to an end, folded themselves about a love-note designed in the most gloriously extravagant terms! No name was signed to that note, but perhaps the princess didn't know whom it came from, and didn't thenceforth wear it in her bosom until—paradoxical as it may seem—it got worn out, and means had to be devised to furnish her with another!

Yes, here in the heart of the guarded orient, and under the shadow as it were of the bow-string, was this love affair carried on, until this very morning of the rosebud. How was it to end? Ah, how indeed!

"No doubt," Meryon said to himself, "eloping with an oriental princess under the noses of her father and the head eunich isn't the easiest thing in the world—I never said it was! But a bonanza like that is worth a risk. The boldest way is the best; bribe Musreddin again; wait with the horses at the back door in the alley; she comes in to buy a new ring; frightful row in the street at the front between two camel-drivers; Hatipha mounts guard at the front door; Terah slips into a rear room and a suit of boy's clothes and so out at the back, mounts, and we're off! Give us ten minutes' start, and 'they'll have fleet steads that follow,' quoth young Lochinvar! That's the programme. Sorry to play such a game on the poor old prince, but that is the fault of the oriental system—and oh, my soul! what an armful of heaven she is."

He caught up a pillow and vicariously pressed Terah to his heart. Like other lovers he was sometimes constrained to wreak himself on his imagination.

"I quite pity Hatipha, too," he said, when he came to himself, "but in the bright lexicon of my youth there's no such word as getting bested by any tumble-down, earringed, dew-lapped, pot-bellied old nondescript like that—I guess not! I'll go down and interview Musreddin as quick as I can get my clothes on."

He reached for the gong, but ere he could strike it the curtains parted and in sprang Ebal, evidently in a fright.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Instinct of Self-Preservation.

"I never realized the strength of the instinct of self-preservation in man," said John F. Thompson, "until I witnessed a test of it on a steamboat. Among the passengers was a man who had a black rattlesnake in a box with a glass top. The snake was a very vicious one, and would strike the glass whenever any one approached. The owner of the reptile challenged any one in the crowd to hold his finger on the glass and let the snake strike at it. There could not be any danger, and there was not a man who did not think it an easy thing to do. One big fellow, who looked as if he never knew what nerves were, tried it first, and, after repeated attempts, gave it up. Then every passenger on the boat attempted it, and failure followed in each case. It simply could not be done. Instinct was stronger than reason and will power combined.

"I witnessed another illustration of this in Paris. A young man had lost his last sou at a gambling table. Not only was he without means, but he had lost a large sum belonging to his employer. He started for the Seine to drown himself. On the way there was a great commotion, caused by the escape of a tiger from a strolling menagerie. The animal came down the street and people fled in every direction. Instantly the man who was seeking death climbed a lamp post and hung on to the top of it, trembling in every muscle. When the animal was captured and the danger was over he went to the river and committed suicide. I was interested in the account of the suicide, and, prompted by curiosity, went to see the body, instantly recognizing it as that of the young man whom I had seen make so frantic an effort to escape death, evidently but a few minutes before he sought it, and at the very time that he was seeking an opportunity to end his existence."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of today, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

MURDER AND CREMATION

A Toronto Man Arrested for Wife Murder.

TRIED FIRE TO HIDE HIS CRIME

A. A. Dicks of Brockton Charged With Murdering His Wife to Obtain $19,000 Insurance—Was It a Conspiracy, the Body Not Corresponding With That of the Woman Insured?

Toronto, March 7.—Arthur A. Dicks, upholsterer, aged 35 years, was last night arrested on the charge of murdering his wife, Mary Dicks, on Saturday. Dicks was taken in charge by Detective Verney at his new home, 1164 College-street, at about 8 o'clock, and locked up in No. 6 Station.

The Crown believe that he deliberately murdered Mary Dicks for her insurance, and then set fire to his house to conceal his crime.

The facts of the case have been published hitherto, and are briefly these: At 1.30 o'clock on Saturday morning last the home of the Dicks' family, at 220 St. Helen's-avenue, was damaged by fire. Dicks escaped with his five children, and stated that his wife had started down the stairway with a lamp, had fallen and her rescue was impossible. In the morning the charred remains of a woman were discovered in the very midst of the hottest part of the blaze, with a shattered lamp some distance off.

It subsequently transpired that Mrs. Dicks' life was insured for $19,000, distributed as follows: Sun $10,000, Covenant Mutual $5000, Home Circle $3000, Chosen Friends $1000, and that the prisoner was insured for $27,000, as follows: Sun $15,000, Covenant Mutual, $5000, Home Life $2000, Chosen Friends $2000, Home Circle $3000.

As Dicks was a man of small means and had exhausted his last dollar in paying premiums for one year, the existence of so much insurance was in itself a suspicious circumstance. These facts were brought out at the coroner's inquest, and a reporter made the additional discovery that on or about the time that all this insurance was put on, namely, January, 1894, $30,000 additional insurance was applied for by Mrs. Dicks in the Equitable Life and New York Life, and refused.

A premium of $184 was paid by Mrs. Dicks to the Sun Life on the afternoon immediately preceding her death. Mrs. Dicks also had made a will a week before, leaving her money to her children, with her husband as trustee of the funds.

Added to these facts was the discovery yesterday made by Detective Verney, that the fire at 220 St. Helens-avenue was the result of deliberate incendiarism. Nor was this Dicks' only fire; four times has he been burned out under suspicious circumstances, each time securing goodly sums for property burned.

The Crown is acting on the theory that Dicks killed his wife immediately after the evening meal, as her stomach on examination is said to have been found full of food, recently eaten, indicative of a heavy meal of meat, potatoes, celery and pickles. As Dicks swore at the coroner's inquest that to his knowledge his wife ate nothing later than 7 o'clock, the story that she died at 1.30 a.m. will be one point in the investigation.

The darkest mystery in connection with the arrest and alleged crime is the fact that the chief means of identifying the body of Mrs. Dicks, a goitre on the neck, does not exist on the remains found, although that portion of the body is intact. All the clothing of the woman is missing. It may transpire that Mrs. Dicks is still alive and in hiding, and that some unknown woman has been done to death for purposes of fraud and robbery.

THE FIRE INCENDIARY.

A Five Gallon Can of Coal Oil Placed Where It Would Do Its Work.

Detective Verney was detailed to the case yesterday, and made a thorough inspection of the premises in which the tragedy took place. The furnace from which the fire is claimed to have originated was most closely examined, and a discovery made which led to Cicks' arrest a few hours after.

The furnace was found to be a "Novelty." In order to admit its erection in the shallow cellar it was necessary to sink it to the depth if 18 inches below the basement floor. Despite this precaution, the hot-air pipes, of which there were five, leading to different parts of the house, are quite close to the floor above. Though the night of tbe ifre was a cold one, the dampers, in two of the three pipes yet intact, are turned to prevent the heat from entering the living apartments.

Tightly jammed in between one of these hot-air pipes and the floor immediately above was found a five-gallon coal oil can. Though the floor was burnt almost entirely away at this point, from the condition of this can and the position in which it was found it seemed almost impossible that it could have fallen from the shop above after the floor had been burned away.

It had evidently been placed there with malice aforethought.

That the can had contained oil was perceptible from the streaks which indicated where it had escaped from the uncorked mouth, and ran, burning as it went, over the sides of the can, and the pipe upon which it lay. The can rested midway between where the pipe left the furnace and where it entered the register, and was turned with the mouth towards the furnace. The oil would escape from it and following the hot-air pipes lead the fire towards the register.

A curious coincidence is that the floor above the furnace was burned only directly over the pipe upon which the can lay. When the body was found by the firemen the head was within two feet of the register.

The fragments of the lamp which Mrs. Dicks is said to have been carrying when she fell were picked up half way up the stairway, and some distance from where the body lay.

A FIRE INSURANCE FIEND.

Suspicious Fires by Which Dicks Had Previously Benefited.

The fire in which Mrs. Dicks met her death is the fourth in which Dicks has been interested of late years. In 1889, while Dicks conducted business in Bathurst-street, his stables were mysteriously burned, and, though they contained very little of value, the insurance companies paid over $200 to Dicks.

Again, at Mimico, in 1893, fire visited him, this time destroying the house in which he lived, together with its contents. The Royal Insurance Company held a risk on his furniture for $750, and this amount they paid over.

Dicks' latest experience with fire, prior to that of Saturday last, was at Kew Beach, in April, 1894. The circumstances of this blaze occasioned suspicion in the minds of many of those most intimately acquainted with the full facts of the case. The house in which the fire occurred was the property of Mr. Josiah Barnett, 66 Gloucester-street, and was formerly occupied by the late Sir Adam Wilson. J. W. Bowden, Mr. Barrett's agent, was approached by Dicks in the latter part of March last and asked if he has on his list any quiet summer houses. Mr. Bowden offered Dicks the choice of many. The two went over the list together, and on visiting the Beach, Dicks chose Mr. Barnett's house as being the most suitable. The reason he assigned for his choice was that the house was more isolated than were the others.

The price agreed upon was $400 for the season of three months, $50 to be paid down, the remainder before the expiration of the first month. When the matter was laid before Mr. Barnett he declined at first to accept it, as he entertained doubts concerning Dicks' ability to pay. In an interview on the matter which took place between Mr. Barnett and Dicks, the latter stated that his wife was in poor health, and he was desirous of spending the summer months in the quietest possible place. This was less than two months after Mrs. Dicks had placed $15,000 insurance upon her life and was pronounced by the physicians of the companies a good risk.

The $50 deposit was made April 7. The residence was elaborately furnished, much of the furniture having been the property of the late Sir Adam. Dicks said the mahogany equipments were not good enough for his tastes and requested Mr. Barnett to have them removed in order to make room for his own furniture. Mr. Barnett complied, and Dicks began to move his furniture in. He had had possession of the key but two days, when at 7 o'clock the evening of the second day a fire, originating in the attic completely consumed the residence and what furniture it contained.

Dicks immediately put in his claim to the Phoenix Company in which his goods were insured, for $1500. Of this amount he was allowed $917. When in conversation with Mr. Barnett a few days after the fire, Dicks attributed the origin of the fire to ghosts. He, himself, had been in the place a short time before the blaze was discovered.

IS IT MRS DICKS' BODY?

Insurance Men Think Mrs. Dicks Still Lives—A Corpse Substituted.

The Crown has as yet no actual proof that the body which was burned was that of Mrs. Dicks. It is possible, as will be seen from the following circumstances that the body was that of another. Has some unknown woman been done to death?

Mr. A. H. Hoover, local manager of the Covenant Mutual Insurance Company of New York, took steps yesterday before Dicks' arrest was decided on to have a special investigation into the supposed death of Mrs. Mary Dicks in the fire at 220 St. Helen's-avenue, Saturday morning. His company consider they have valid reason for the suspicion that the body of the burned woman was not that of Mrs. Dicks at all, but a corpse substituted for the purpose of securing payment of the $19,000 insurance on Mrs. Dicks' life.

Mr. Hoover, when interviewed, said "The fact that Mrs. Dicks was just as anxious as her husband to have the insurance placed on her life, and that she went with him and personally applied to the various companies without having been solicited in any way, leads us to believe that if there was any scheme on foot to defraud the companies she was a party to it.

"It is a remarkable fact also that the husband should have carried $27,000 on his own life, the premiums on his combined policies reaching an amount in excess of his income, which he swears was never more than $1000 per annum.

"A number of cases have occurred of late in the United States of companies being defrauded by the substitution of a corpse to represent some living policy-holder, and we are determined to sift this matter to the bottom. The fact that Dicks carried so much insurance on his life might also lead to the conclusion that they had conspired with outside parties to procure a body of either sex. In case a male was procured the husband was to disappear and the insurance to be collected on his life."

"The body of the dead woman is burned in such a way that it is impossible to identify it. The face and scalp and hair were burned, but the neck, which will play a most important part in the case, remains intact, although badly scorched.

"When Mrs Dicks applied for the various policies on her life a year ago last January, it was remarked that on the right side of her neck she had a goitre of some considerable size. In the medical examiner's report to the Equitable Life Insurance Company, this fact is dwelt on as the chief point for identification. Mrs. Dicks alluded to it in talking matters over with the agents, and though she kept it covered up the protruberance was much in evidence. It is a curious fact, however, that the post-mortem examination made by Drs. McConnell and Caven failed to reveal any sign of this goitre."

Dr. John McConnell said, when interviewed, "The neck we found to be intact, although the flesh was cooked. We devoted particular attention to the examination of the neck and searched for marks of strangulation. Not the slightest indication of a goitre was to be found and the condition of the neck was such that it could not have been burned away."

"Did you discover anything in the condition of the corpse to indicate that death had taken place for any considerable length of time before it was burned?" asked the reporter.

"No. The indications were that death had taken place very recently. The blood which oozed from the body was arterial and not venous, as it would have been in a case where the victim had died from natural causes. The stomach was much distended and completely full of recently masticated food, indicating that deceased had partaken of a hearty meal just previous to her death. This is a certain sign that death had been recent. The legs, arms and the flesh of the back were burned, but we found the various organs in a healthy condition. The ordinary tests applied to the lungs showed that she had not been strangled.

"You may say," added Dr. McConnell, "that I only delayed the issuance of a warrant for a coroner's inquest because I wished to make a careful investigation in compliance with my oath of office. I believe that Coroner Johnson had not taken this trouble when he issued the warrant."

The Covenant Mutual will probably act in co-operation with the other companies in securing an investigation as to whether the remains were really those of Mrs. Dicks. Detectives will be set at work to see if that lady is still alive. One thing the doctors are positive of is that the dead woman came to her death but a short time before being found. Yet another circumstance in connection with this matter is the fact that, although Dicks swore his wife wore no garment but her nightdress, not a stitch of her clothing has been found.

The prisoner will be arraigned this morning.

THE DEBATE ON THE BUDGET

Government Defend Themselves Against Criticism.

ROSS REPLIES TO MR. HOWLAND

The P.P.A. Leader Denounces the Attack on His Party—Bills to Amend Division Courts Act and Registry Act—Cost of Maintaining Ontario and Michigan Public Asylums.

Toronto, March 7.—The oratory which characterized the further debate on the budget yesterday was of a better type than any that has preceded it this session. At times the discussion was most interesting. For the Government Messrs. Gibson and Ross made excellent speeches, and Mr. St. John, in a maiden effort, eclipsed himself in behalf of the Opposition.

Mr. Thomas Gibson of Huron set the ball rolling, viewing things from the ministerial side. He started out with a little amusement at Mr. Howland's expense, characterizing the speech of that gentleman on Tuesday as a chapter on constitutional law. He admitted the member for South Toronto's contention that it was the duty of the Opposition to criticize the acts of the administration, but, at the same time, he argued that the critics should be fair and honest and not make misstatements. With another touch of humor, Mr. Gibson congratulated Mr. Marter upon being elevated to the position of leader of the Opposition, and expressed the hope that he would hold that dignified position as long as his predecessor did.

He then proceeded to reply to Mr. Marter's argument that the expenditure for civil government had increased 50 per cent. since the Sandfield-Macdonald regime, an increase far out of proportion to the increase in the population. Mr. Marter had put the figure in 1871 at $114,000; but he had omitted to state that in accordance with a solemn promise by the Sandfield-Macdonald Government the salaries of employes had been increased to $183,000. Since that time also the Bureau of Industries, the License Department, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Insurance and the Bureau of Mines had been added, with the sanction of, and in some instancess, at the request of the Opposition. All these additions amounted to about $41,000. Deducting, therefore, these departments from the estimates of the present year, it would be found that the increase in the expenditure for civil government had only been 11 per cent., as compared with an increase in the population of 30 per cent.

Adverting to Mr. Marter's assertion that the Government were living on the capital of the province, Mr. Gibson said that in the matter of selling Crown Lands, the Ontario Government had simply followed the policy of the Dominion Government. As to the timber resources, they would not be exhausted in our day, but he was at one with Mr. Howland in regard to experimenting whether some means could not be devised whereby the timber resources of the country would be husbanded or increased.

Dr. Meacham followed with a speech from the Opposition desks, criticizing the method of the Government in doctoring the accounts so as to make it appear that there was a surplus when there was not. He urged that nearly all the items mentioned by the Treasurer as constituting a surplus were properly assets of the province, and he asserted that if any private business concern prepared such a statement as the Government prepared it would be considered as fraud.

Hon. J. M. Gibson then took the floor, and for half an hour defended the expenditures of the Government on account of public institutions, taking each item in detail. He granted Mr. Haycock's request for a comparison between the cost of maintaining public asylums in the State of Michigan and in Ontario, and if his figures are correct, the leader of the Patrons was completely answered. Mr. Gibson stated that the cost of maintenance in Ontario asylums is $127.22 per patient, the cost in Michigan being $214.91. The Ontario Government, he contended, had practised economy, whilst striving after efficiency in the conduct of these institutions; his only fear was that they had been too economical.

Mr. St. John made his maiden speech after recess. The member for West York was a surprise to his friends, and his answers to Messrs. Ross and Hardy, who heckled him considerably, showed the Ministers that they were dealing with no novice in the art of debate. His speech was a clear and able criticism of the Government. He commenced by urging that, in view of the fact that we had been living for some time through a world-wide financial crisis, it was the duty of the Government to be very careful and economical in the expenditure of public moneys. But, unfortunately, the affairs of this province were not conducted on the principles that governed private corporations. Constituencies to be purchased by dairy farms, electors to be corrupted by promises of public works here, and the expenditure of public moneys there, all detracted from the true principles of business.

Continuing, Mr. St. John pointed out that although the cost of living and the cost of labor had greatly decreased during the last few years, the amount paid in salaries under the head of civil government had increased from $170,345 in 1889 to $177,727 in 1894. Why had there not been a decrease in the cost of government proportionate to the general decrease? To the baneful influence of centralization of power Mr. St. John attributed this increased expenditure, and he asserted that the policy of the Government had had the effect of distrusting the municipalities of the province. There should be a development of our mining industries north, and he thought the Government would be justified in taking some of the money received from the timber resources and devoting it to establishing a smelting works in that section that now lay dormant.

Mr. E. J. Davis followed on the Government side. One of his points was a reply to the statement of Mr. Marter, that settlers were not going into the northern districts, and quoted these figures to support his contention that the criticism was not founded on fact:

	1871	1891
Muskoka and Parry Sound..	6,919	36,818
Nipissing District	1,791	13,020
Algoma	7,018	41,856

Then came Mr. Gurd, the leader of the Fourth party, that consists of a leader and a whip. Following the example of the previous speakers he had a little taffy for the Patrons. He was pleased to hear the manly and independent utterances of the hon. leader of the Patrons in his budget speech, and was pleased to know that the Government and the Third party, as he had at first feared, was not to become an admiration society. Mr. Gurd had nothing very new to add to the former criticisms of the Opposition, dealing in what he called "gleanings," but he emphatically denounced the "cowardly and unwarrantable" attack made by Mr. McNish in seconding the address on the Fourth party, which he felt disposed to accept as "the wild and empty ravings of an inexperienced man."

Hon. G. W. Ross had to defend his department against the charges that had been made against it, and in the course of his speech he found opportunity to introduce some of the humor for which he is noted. The Opposition, he said, were anxious to get to the Government desks. He wished to tell them that they would not get there by criticizing the educational policy of the present Government, even if they did so from now till the crack of doom. In Mr. Howland's allusion to the advent of the Patrons to the House as an "incursion from the rural districts" the Minister found subject for mirth, and Mr. St. John was also handled in humorous style.

Mr. Chapple introduced a bill to amend the Division Courts Act, having for its object the extension of the jurisdiction of the division courts to sums of $300 in cases where the amount claimed is ascertained by the signature of the defendant.

A bill to amend the Municipal Light and Heat Act was introduced by Mr. McKee, making its provisions apply to natural as well as to manufactured gas.

Mr. O'Keefe, Ottawa, gave notice that he will introduce a bill to add these words to the Registry Act: "The registrar shall not receive or fyle any plan or map of a subdivision of any land situate wholly or partly within the limits of any city, town or incorporated village, unless the assent of the municipal council of the municipality to such fyling be first obtained and endorsed."

Notes.

The Countess of Aberdeen listened to the debate for a couple of hours last night.

The grant to the local Farmers' Institutes has this year been increased from $3000 to $5000. The experimental fruit stations are to be doubled, and the estimates allow a grant of twice the previous sum.

During the season three outfits for the spraying of fruit trees will travel around the fruit districts, and lessons and practical illustrations will be given to fruit growers, as to the best way of preserving their trees. The estimates contain a grant of $1800 for this purpose.

To-morrow Mr. Haycock will introduce a bill to give municipal councils power to fix the date on which the picking of wild cranberries may begin.

The Patrons will, to a man, support Mr. Hardy's bill to allow ten jurors to give a verdict in civil cases. Mr. Marter says the Conservatives have not yet discussed the bill.

ST. THOMAS MURDER TRIAL.

True Bills Returned Against Both Prisoners.

St. Thomas, Ont., March 6.—The trial of John Hendershott and William D. Welter on the charge of murdering W. H. Hendershott will commence before Chief Justice Meredith at 1.30 to-morrow. When the prisoners were committed by the magistrate Welter was charged with the murder and John Hendershott with being an accomplice before the fact. In the indictment presented to the grand jury the prisoners were charged jointly with murder. At 4 p.m. the grand jury returned a true bill for murder against both of the accused. The prisoners were at once arraigned, pleaded not guilty and said they were ready for trial.

The prisoners, notwithstanding the confidence of their counsel, evidently realize the gravity of their position. Both were very pale and gazed around the court room in an anxious manner. Their voices trembled when pronouncing the plea of not guilty, and the nervous strain under which Hendershott was suffering was shown by the quivering of the muscles of his face and the nervous manner in which he grasped the railing of the dock.

Chief Provincial Detective Murray has worked up an unusually strong case against the prisoners. No less than 90 witnesses have been subpoenaed. The defence has about 60.

Cayuga, Ont., March 7.—The Conservative convention for the constituencies of Haldimand and Monck met at the Court House to-day to nominate a candidate for the House of Commons. Speeches were delivered by the Hon. J. C. Patterson, Arthur Boyle, M.P., and Hon. W. H. Montague. Dr. Montague, the present member, was nominated by Arthur Boyle, M.P., whose constituency of Monck is now wiped out. In accepting the nomination,

Daily Intelligencer.

BELLEVILLE, THURSDAY, MAR. 7.

PRODUCE YOUR PROOF.

The Belleville INTELLIGENCER very stupidly calls attention to the sugar duties (by the way, Hon. Mr. Patterson alleges there are none) by comparing them with those imposed by the Liberals. The point the tax-eaters' organ seems to miss, but which the people see clearly enough, is that the duties imposed by the Liberals upon the people's sugar went directly into the treasury to pay the people's taxes; whereas the duty is now levied so as to divert the taxes into the pockets of the refiners.—Hamilton Times.

It is very easy to assert, but not so easy to disprove, and the Times' ability in making assertions which it cannot uphold is as notorious as its total lack of courtesy. The onus of proof being on our contemporary, we call upon it to make good the assertion contained in the sentence last above quoted.

Meantime, let us repeat: The taxation on granulated sugar has been reduced from $3.50 per 100 lbs. under the Mackenzie-Cartwright tariff, to 64c. per 100 lbs. All sugar below No. 16 Dutch standard, is now free of taxation, whilst the taxation under the Grit tariff was on sugar equal to and above No. 13 D.S. (worth, say, 8c per lb.) $2.50 per 100 lbs., and on all below No. 9 (worth, say, 6c per lb.) $2 per 100 lbs.

It is evident, therefore, that the taxation on sugar has been enormously reduced under the present tariff, and the fact that the refineries are kept in operation and that the people of Canada are being furnished with 25 to 30 lbs. of granulated sugar for a dollar against 10 lbs. in the Grit period; that those who desire can escape any taxation by using the very good grades which the Grits taxed at 2½c per lb.; and that sugar is now cheaper in Canada, as compared with other markets, than ever before, is proof positive that the public interests have been most beneficially served by the present impost on sugar.

GREAT, YET SMALL.

The following, under "scare" headings, appeared in a recent issue of the Buffalo (New York) Express:

> Not deterred by the fact that almost every day one or two Canadians are held by the customs officers, and, after an examination by Inspector De Barry, sent back over the border, after acknowledging that they have been contracted in that country to work in the United States, there are still many who think that they can slip through.
>
> Yesterday morning word was sent to the Inspector from the officials at the International Bridge that they had in custody a man whom they had every reason to believe was coming over here in direct violation of the contract-labor law, and asking Mr. De Barry to go down there and examine him.
>
> The man proved to be Wm. Nichols, a farm hand from Niagara Falls, Ont. Nichols acknowledged that he had been written to by Frank Randall, of Ripley, Chautauqua Co., offering him employment, and that he was on his way there to accept the same. Nichols was to receive $100 for nine months' labor, besides his board, lodging and washing, and at the end of the nine months he intended to return home again.
>
> As this was a flagrant violation of the law, Mr. Nichols was told by the Inspector that his presence was not desired, and he was sent back to his Canadian home.

Could anything be more contemptible? Such small conduct on the part of a great nation was surely never at any time paralleled in the world's history.

Many of our people are expressing the opinion that Canada ought to retaliate against the Yankees.

EWART ANSWERS M'CARTHY

Argument in the School Appeal Closes To-Day.

INTERFERENCE IS DANGEROUS.

The Manitoba School Act of '94, Amending the Act of 1890, Not Disallowed—McCarthy Argues That Separate Schools Are Inefficient, and Claims Manitoba Was Justified in Wiping Them Out

Ottawa, Ont., March 7.—At yesterday's meeting of the Cabinet, held in the Council Chamber after the public proceedings in the Railway Committee room had terminated, it was decided not to interfere with the Manitoba School Act of 1894. This was the last day upon which the measure could have been disallowed. The act in question amended the much debated statute of 1890, which, on July 30, 1892, was declared by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to be intra vires of the Manitoba Legislature. Many petitions were sent in, asking for disallowance of last year's provincial statute, and these have been duly considered, but, inasmuch as the question of remedial legislation is now being argued before the Privy Council, and the act of 1890, which the statute of 1894 simply amends, was declared to be constitutional, it has not been deemed advisable to disallow the last named statute.

The Government to-day received a telegram signed by the British Columbia members of the Commons on behalf of the sealers, urging that the Imperial Government be asked to advance by way of a loan the sum of $425,000, the amount agreed upon between Canada and the United States as the sum to which the sealers are entitled for seizure of their vessels by the United States from 1886 to 1890. This amount Congress refuses to pay, consequently under the arrangement made last summer a commission is to be appointed to assess the damages sustained, and sealers want this sum to be advanced until a final settlement is reached. The Government immediately cabled the request to England with a strong endorsation.

Evidently the revising officers have done their work promptly, as only four lists have yet to be received in the whole of Canada.

Owing to the fact that the hearing of the Manitoba school appeal was not finished to-day, neither Sir C. H. Tupper nor Hon. John Haggart were able to go west to Dunnville to-night.

THE SCHOOL APPEAL.

McCarthy Concludes His Argument and Mr. Ewart Begins His Reply.

The Privy Council was engaged all day in listening to the argument in the Manitoba school appeals. Mr. McCarthy held the floor until about 3.30, and then Mr. Ewart rose to reply. He had not completed his argument when the hour of adjournment arrived. Replying to a question by Hon. Mr. Ouimet, Mr. McCarthy defined national schools as those common to all people of the country. If everybody in Canada professed the same religion national schools could also be denominational schools.

Sir C. H. Tupper: Are you in favor of exclusion of religion from all schools?

Mr. McCarthy: No, and the Manitoba Government does not want to drive religion entirely from the schools.

Mr. Dickey: It is, therefore, a question of degree.

Mr. McCarthy: The question is this, Ought the schools to be under the control of the state or church? The position sought by Manitoba was the same as that which existed in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, where the Public schools existed. It was not fanaticism which had led Manitoba to adopt the Act of 1890. The Liberal party of the Province, except Mr. Fisher, were unanimously in favor of that act, and Mr. Fisher must have been poisoned by his partner Ewart.

Mr. Angers: Is everybody poisoned who changes his views?

Mr. McCarthy: It depends on what the change is. Proceeding, he cited the platform of the Conservatives in 1892, in which the party declared in favor of a national system of schools if the act of 1890 were declared intra vires. Clearly then both parties in Manitoba were a unit on the question.

He then argued that Manitoba had good grounds for wiping out Separate schools, owing to the inefficiency of the teaching and inferiority of the education given. Ninety-one French schools were in existence when the law of 1890 was passed. Thirty-six of these, despite the antagonism of the priests, had been brought under the Public School Act. With regard to the question whether these schools were Protestant, he pointed out that the law declared them to be non-sectarian. He disputed Mr. Ewart's facts and conclusions on this point. He filed copies of the religious exercises used in the schools previous to 1890 and since. Mr. McCarthy then entered into a careful comparison of the two sets of religious exercises. What objection could there be to the reading of historical portions of the Bible and the gospels as now provided for by the regulations, arranging for the reading of a few portions of the Bible that Archbishop Lynch had assented to in Ontario when he approved the Ross Bible?

Sir Mackenzie Bowell: Was the Ross Bible to be read in separate schools?

Mr. McCarthy: No; it was to be read in the public schools which were attended by many Catholic pupils. He (Mr. McCarthy) claimed that Mr. Ewart was entirely wrong, therefore, in the statement that the schools were sectarian. The object of the Manitoba Government was not to promote strife or ill-will, but the very reverse. It was a fact that to-day more than one-half the Roman Catholic children of Ontario were attending the public schools, 37,466 children being registered in separate and 43,797 in public schools. This showed that even in Ontario the Catholics were not anxious for separate schools. In his, Mr. McCarthy's, own county the Catholics were strong enough to support separate schools, but preferred the public schools. He noted Mgr. Satolli's decision regarding Catholic children in the States attending public schools. It was established by practice and precept that Roman Catholic children could attend public schools and, therefore, to that extent the statement of grievances in the petition was unfounded.

Mr. McCarthy, proceeding with his argument after recess, pointed to the defeat of Mr. Fisher's resolution in the Manitoba Legislature last week as showing the strong feeling in favor of Public schools in the province. As for the rest of the Dominion, he would fearlessly assert that the general opinion of both political parties throughout the country was that in the matter of education there should be no Federal interference with provincial authorities, and further, the interference now proposed would be far more humiliating to Manitoba than would have been the disallowance of the act in the first place.

The history of the New Brunswick school case was next dealt with at length, to show the reluctance of Parliament to interefere with provincial autonomy. The late Mr. Mackenzie, then at the head of the Government, was on record as having declared that, while he regretted the imposition of undoubted grievances upon the Catholics of New Brunswick, he would not assent to its remedy by violation of the constitution.

"But," said Mr. McCarthy, addressing Sir Mackenzie Bowell, "you, sir, took even a more decided and proper stand. You were opposed to the passage of any resolution calculated to invoke interference, and declined to vote for any milk-and-water amendment, inviting interposition of Her Majesty's Government."

Thus disallowance, continued Mr. McCarthy, would be less humiliating than the proposed interference in this case, in which the council was asked to take the first step to secure the passage by the Federal Parliament of a purely local law, absolute and irrevocable as regards both Legislature and Parliament itself.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell: That is, this Parliament cannot repeal or amend its own act?

Mr. McCarthy: Not acts passed under this section (sub-section 3, section 22, Manitoba Act). Could anything, he went on, be imagined more calculated to create disturbance than the passage of a law here at Ottawa to interfere with education in Manitoba? Let this council not forget that Manitoba was driven once to the verge of rebellion by the disallowance of her railway policy, which Sir John Macdonald subsequently had to abandon. It could not be denied that the power rested with the Federal authority to pass remedial legislation, but for that matter the British Government had ample power to pass the tea tax act which led to the American revolution. It was therefore not a question of power in the present case but of wisdom and the propriety of its exercise. To accede to the request of the applicants would be to take the first step in creating a difficulty and danger that not the youngest member in council would probably live to see extinguished. And why was it sought to be raised? Because about 10,000 half-breeds years ago passed a law in Manitoba which 100,000 intelligent people sought to abolish to-day. The council had undoubtedly the right thus to interfere, so the Judicial Committee had decided, but the power to act, he argued, did not carry with it the obligation to do so. He would ask the council, therefore, not to deal with this question in the light in which it was viewed in Quebec, or some other province, but in the light of what would conduce to the prosperity and welfare of Manitoba.

Mr. McCarthy concluded with a reference to personal matters. He accused Mr. Ewart of unmanliness when in the course of his previous address he had spoken of "McCarthy and his Protestant Protective Association." Now, he never had anything to do with the P.P.A., he had never even belonged to the Orange order, of which body the President of the Privy Council was a distinguished ornament.

Mr. Ewart in reply first dealt with the personal matter introduced by Mr. McCarthy. He accepted his learned friend's disclaimer of any connection with the P.P.A. He had not intended to imply that he was connected with it. What he had said was "McCarthy and the P.P.A.," not "McCarthy and his P.P.A." Mr. Ewart referred sarcastically to John O'Donoghue's statements. In giving them to the council Mr. O'Donoghue had forgotten to produce his credentials. He (Ewart) would supply the omission; and he read from The Winnipeg Tribune the resolution passed by the Roman Catholics of St. Mary's, Winnipeg, denunciatory of O'Donoghue and his unauthorised mission to Ottawa. He pointed out that O'Donoghue's opinion of the inefficiency of the Separate schools was based upon his estimate of the ignorance of the French half-breeds.

Mr. Ewart held that if even 25 per cent. of these people could read and write it was a high tribute to the perseverance of the Catholic fathers, who, in order to instil a little education into those people, had to follow them about the country, for until very recently they led nomadic lives. Unlike the Scotch halfbreeds, who were the descendants of educated men, who taught their children, the French halfbreeds were the offspring of the roving voyageur and uncouth trapper.

Dealing with Mr. McCarthy's appeal to the council not to exercise the power of remedy, Mr. Ewart said that such a plea was in contravention of the elementary principles of law. For 25 years Mr. McCarthy, M.P., had been practising before the courts, in which the maxim was that there was no grievance without a remedy. All that was required of them in these courts was to establish a grievance, and the power of court to grant a remedy, and remedy would be forthcoming. Mr. McCarthy held that power to act did not carry with it the obligation to do so. He read the opinions of counsel on that point: "'The worship of what is called local autonomy which some gentlemen have become addicted to, is fraught, I venture to say, with great evil to this Dominion. Our allegiance is due to the Dominion of Canada. The separation into provinces, the right of local self-government which we possess, is not to make us less citizens of the Dominion, is not to make us of statute labor payable in certainl oless anxious for the promotion of the welfare of the Dominion, and it is not argument to say that because a certain piece of legislation is within the power of a local Parliament, therefore that legislation is not to be disturbed. By the same Act of Parliament by which power is conferred upon a local Legislature the duty and power, because where there is power there is a corresponding duty, are cast upon the Governor-in-Council to revise and review acts of legislative bodies. The council, Mr. Ewart added somewhat triumphantly, would probably be surprised to learn that these sentiments were uttered by D'Alton McCarthy himself. He had delivered them in the House of Commons in March, 1889. Next Mr. Ewart dealt with the statement that the petition of right produced on Monday showing that the Manitoba bill of rights made no provision for separate schools was not a valid document, inasmuch, as Mr. McCarthy put it, as it had not been dragged out until during the school dispute in 1890. Mr. Ewart produced evidence that a copy of that bill of rights had been fyled in the Department of Justice as long ago as 1874 in connection with the trial of Lepine.

Argument will be concluded to-day.

Mr. and Mrs. Latta and their son and daughter-in-law did all in their power to make the time pass pleasantly, and it was with regret that the party broke up at an early hour this morning. They passed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Latta for their hospitality, to which the host briefly replied.

ACTION FOR DAMAGES.

DAME VS. CHAMBERLAIN. — Action brought by George Dame, of this city, to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by him by falling into the bay at Trenton, whilst getting off the steamer Merritt. The accident occurred on June 13th, 1894.

Geo. Dame testified that on June 13th, 1894, he went upon an excursion to Trenton on the steamer Merritt. When Trenton was reached the passengers were transferred from the Merritt on to the steamer Varuna and thence to the wharf. There was no light and in walking off witness fell into the bay and sustained injuries. There was no guard rail on the gang plank.

James Macoun testified that he was a passenger on the Merritt on the occasion. He talked to Mr. Dame on the boat. The plff. was not intoxicated. It was a rather dark night. There was no light on the wharf and persons had to grope their way along the best they could.

John McCoy corroborated the evidence of Mr. Macoun.

Ed. O'Rourke testified that he was a passenger on the Merritt on the night in question. When Trenton was reached it was quite dark and there was no rail on the gang plank leading from the steamer Varuna to the dock.

Mr. W. D. Ketcheson's evidence was of similar character to that of the previous witnesses.

The defence offered no evidence. Mr. E. Guss Porter addressed the jury on behalf of the plff. and Mr. W. H. Biggar for the deft., the Judge summing up.

The following questions were then submitted to the jury, who after being out for about an hour and a half, answered as follows:

Ques—Could the plff. have avoided being hurt by the exercise of ordinary care?
Ans.—Yes.
Ques.—If the plff. should get damages, how much?

E. Guss Porter for plff., Bell & Biggar for deft.

A SALARY CASE.

SWAYZE VS. BOGLE.—This was an action brought by George A. Swayze, late Principal of Belleville Business College, to recover from Robert Bogle, Proprietor of the College, $941, which he alleged was due him as salary. The plff. was for about five years Principal of the College, of which the deft. is the Proprietor.

Mr. Swayze testified that he commenced his duties as Principal of the College on the 3rd of October, 1887, and continued to teach until the 4th of September, 1894. The arrangements were that he was to receive $800 the first year, $900 the second year and $1,000 the third and following years in which he was engaged as Principal. When he left he claimed that there was due him $941.

Mr. Bogle testified that he had a counter claim against Mr. Swayze and that he did not owe the amount claimed. The witness was subjected to a rather lengthy examination in reference to accounts, etc., in connection with the College, which were kept by Mr. Swayze.

Mr. Tousaw testified that the books had not been kept very well by Mr. Swayze. He also stated that the plff. was somewhat negligent in his duties whilst at the College, doing work which was not for the College.

Chas. Lingham's evidence was of a similar nature to that of Mr. Tousaw.

This concluded the case and after argument by the counsel His Lordship gave judgment in favor of the plff. for $875, and directed that the counter claim, amounting to $200, be referred to Mr. A. G. Northrup for settlement. Clute & Williams for plff. E. G. Porter and J. P. Thomas for deft.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

DIXON VS. LEAVENS.—An action for damages for malicious prosecution by Horace Dixon against David R. Leavens. Settled on payment of $25 by the deft. Carnew for plff.; Clute & Williams for deft.

THURSDAY, MARCH 7.

A DESERONTO SLANDER CASE.

HULL VS. FREEMAN—The parties reside in Deseronto. Mrs. Hull asked for damages to the amount of $5000 for alleged slander. Freeman is a groceryman in the town and it was alleged by the plff. that he endeavored to induce other persons in the same business as himself to give Mr. Hull no credit for goods, as she was poor pay.

Mrs. Hull was the first witness and related that she dealt for some time with Mr. Freeman and subsequently left him and traded at Mr. Tracy's, another groceryman. Freeman, it is alleged, advised Mr. Tracy not to let her have groceries, as he would not get his pay. Her husband was ill and unable to work at the time.

Mr. Tracy testified that Freeman had told him that Mrs. Hull was poor pay and he did refuse to allow her to have groceries on credit.

This completed the case for the plaintiff. No evidence was offered for the deft. His Lordship ruled that a case had not been made out and withdrew it from the jury and entered a non suit. Clute & Williams for plff., and E. G. Porter for deft.

A DOMESTIC DIFFICULTY.

FOSTER VS. FOSTER.—The parties in this suit are husband and wife but do not live together. He resides in the township of Ameliasburg and Mrs. Foster lives in Belleville. Mrs. Martha Foster brings this action to recover from her husband, Joseph Foster, $800, which she claimed she gave to her husband and for which he gave a promissory note, but subsequently took the note from her at the time they resided in Toronto, doing business under the name of Foster & Allen.

Mrs. Foster, sworn, said she was married to the deft. in November, four years ago. She received $3000 from an insurance of her previous husband, who died some five years ago. She married Mr. Foster at Sophiasburg. After living there a few months they removed to Toronto, where she and a Mr. Allen carried on a business as confectioners. She paid her husband a salary of $10 a week and he became dissatisfied and wanted her to give him some money. She gave him about $800. He gave her a promissory note for this amount. He subsequently took the note out of a secretaire which was in the house. When she asked him for it he said he would take care of it. He had not given her back the note, neither had he given her any money.

Mr. Foster, when placed in the box, denied that he had received the money or had given a promissory note to her.

The case was given to the jury after Mr. G. O. Alcorn, Q. C., of Picton, had addressed them on behalf of the deft., Mr. R. C. Clute, Q. C., on behalf of the plff., and His Lordship's charge.

A verdict was given for the plff. for the $800 claimed.

NOTES.

The Grand Jury this afternoon visited the Deaf and Dumb Institute and the hospital. They will make their presentment to-morrow.

Court was continued until near eleven o'clock last night.

The case of Queen vs. Ronald was called this morning, but as the accused was not present it was postponed until to-morrow. Ronald arrived in the city this afternoon from Tweed, where he has been looking after witnesses.

There has been a large attendance of spectators at the various sittings of the court.

TWO HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS.

This is the Amount to Which Parties in This City are Joint Heirs.

When Princess Charlotte, of Mecklenburg, came to America, there came with her as Captain of her body guard, one Anneke Jans Bogardus. For services performed for the princess he was given certain lands, then unbroken, but now situated in the most populous and richest quarters of New York city. He leased the property for ninety-nine years and the lease has just expired. The property is now valued at $200,000,000 and there are heirs in this city who have a claim to a share of this amount.

Bogardus had two daughters, Anna Jans and Sarah Jans, and the former was the great-grandmother of L. H. and Geo. E. Henderson, of this city. The genealogy in possession of the family clearly sets forth the ancestry of the Hendersons. Another branch of the Jans family is the Smith family, of Dunnville, Ont. There are about 180 heirs to the property, and as the courts have decided that the money must be paid over, they are putting in their claims. R. Lambton Sewell, of this city, who married the daughter of L. H. Henderson, City Treasurer, will press his wife's claim. A significant fact in connection with Mrs. Sewell's claim is that she was christened Clara Jans Henderson. There is every probability that the heirs will get the money to which it seems they have a just claim.

A Family Fight.

Frank Smith and his wife Jane, living on South John st., had a fight early this morning. Mrs. Smith knocked her husband down with an iron poker and threw a flat iron which struck him on the leg. Several culinary utensils also entered into the fight on the part of Mrs. Smith and as a result Frank is a much used up man. He says his wife drew his wages while he worked in the woods this winter and kept up Ben Sanford. She also abused her mother-in-law. He says also that Sanford runs his house. The Magistrate told him to put Ben out if he did not go at his command. Smith's mother begs about the street and she will be taken care of when found out again.

A REMARKABLE RESCUE.

IMPORTANT EVENTS IN THE LIFE OF MRS. PATRICK DEWEY.

Her Husband's Death and Her Own Narrow Escape—A Story of More Than Ordinary Interest.

Napanee (Ont.) Beaver.

Milsap is a little country settlement about four miles from Newburgh, Ont. Among the oldest and most esteemed residents of the locality is Mrs. Patrick Dewey, who bears her seventy-one years with a cheerfulness and vivacity that might be envied by many, a score of years younger. Mrs. Dewey has always enjoyed good health until about 5 years ago. At that time her husband was stricken with paralysis, and the worry and constant watching over his sick bed brought on disease. She began to waste away, was subject to severe headaches and spells of dizziness, and then her trouble was still further aggravated by an attack of rheumatism. Troubles do not come singly. Her husband was stricken with a second and third stroke of paralysis, and Mrs. Dewey's arduous task was increased. In searching for health for herself in order that she might be able to devote more of her time to her stricken husband, Mrs. Dewey tried many medicines but with indifferent results. While reading the Beaver one night she read of a case similar to her own cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and determined to give them a trial. She sent for a supply and soon after beginning their use felt beneficial results. At this stage her husband died and Mrs. Dewey lost in her overwhelming grief, forgot her own ills and the medicine she had been taking. A severe attack of la grippe ensued, and her friends thought she would soon follow her husband to the grave. He system was run down until she was but little more than a skeleton. In this condition Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were again resorted to, and Mrs. Dewey gradually regained her health and strength, and now no trace of her illness remains. He neighbors look upon her recovery as a miracle, and Mrs. Dewey herself declares her firm belief that but for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills she would now be in the grave, and she loses no opportunity of recommending them to others.

These pills are a positive cure for all troubles arising from a vitiated condition of the blood, or a shattered nervous system. Sold by all dealers or by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50. There are numerous imitations, against which the public is cautioned.

Obituary.

The many friends of Mrs. Wm. Hunter will be grieved to hear of her death, which took place at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. W. G. Happer, 9 Beaconsfield Ave., Toronto, on Wednesday morning, 6th inst., after a lingering illness of five months.

During this illness, which was endured with great and christian fortitude, she was almost entirely helpless, but her daughters, Hannah and Mrs. Happer, by constant and faithful attendance, greatly alleviated her suffering, which, as the end drew near, became almost intolerable.

Mrs. Hunter, nee Jane Simpson, was born near Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, in 1813, was married in 1833, and came to Canada with her husband and family in 1852. After residing in Three Rivers, Longueuil and Kingston they removed to Belleville in 1874, where they remained till Mr. Hunter's death in May, 1891.

In 1883 the aged couple celebrated their golden wedding, when their three sons and six daughters, all still living, gathered with their families in honor of the auspicious occasion.

From youth both Mr. and Mrs. Hunter were faithful and vigorous members of the Methodist church, in which Mr. Hunter was a class-leader for upwards of fifty-five years. Mrs. Hunter was also a Mother-in-Israel, and both were ever ready to lend a helping hand wherever the Master directed. During their residence in Belleville their labors were in connection with Bleecker St. church.

Probably no feature of their home life is more memorable and worthy of note than the exceptional degree of sympathetic love, shown every hour of the day till the very last. We trust that this pure current, after its brief interruption, shall now flow on, ennobled and still more pure, forever unbroken in the blissful regions beyond.

THE FIRST LECTURE.

Miss Gordon, Lady Superintendent of the City Hospital yesterday afternoon, delivered the first of a course of lectures to ladies, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the equipment of a city ambulance. There was a good attendance, and Miss Gordon demonstrated her thorough knowledge of the subject on which she spoke, namely, "Duties of the nurse to the patient, to the physician, and to herself." Her remarks were briefly as follows:

In undertaking the care of a sick person, especially if it be a long and painful illness, all your powers of endurance, tact, perseverance, skill, intelligence, vigilance, common sense and, especially the latter, will be called into requisition. A nurse has three duties to perform—her duty to herself, her duty to the physician, and her duty to the patient. To yourself you owe proper food, proper rest and a certain amount of exercise and recreation, for without such it would be impossible for your own strength and good temper to hold out. To the physician the most absolute obedience and carrying out of the directions received. Of course, nearly all orders are conditional, and circumstances may occasionally arise when it would not be advisable to carry out an order just at the time prescribed, but only the most positive and evident reasons justify any departure from instructions. Whatever physician you see fit to employ, have entire confidence in his skill and judgment, and don't allow any interference or meddling from would-be kind friends, and above all things, never prescribe on your own account or allow any one else to do so. The greatest possible harm may be done through mistaken kindness and judgment on the part of friends and who usually make the doctor the scapegoat for ill results, resulting entirely from treatment or deviation from orders that he is totally ignorant of. Be candid and truthful with the doctor; if a mistake has been made or an order been forgotten be sure and notify him as soon as possible. It is the doctor who has to bear the responsibility of the patient, and ever bear in mind that you can be of the greatest use by your obedience, candor and implicitly carrying out his instructions. Now, as to the sick one, he of course must be your first care and your first consideration. You must ever be on the alert to minister to and anticipate his many wants. As a rule whatever serves to keep the invalid quiet and contented is good for him. Avoid excitement on all occasions; as far as possible let every thing appear to the patient to be moving smoothly. Don't worry or bother him on any account. If he is inclined to be fretful, learn to think for him, anticipate his wants and do not call on him for decision, even of small matters, but decide for him. When there is doubt in you mind consult the doctor and not the patient. No two sick people are alike, and it is by no means the greatest sufferer who makes the heaviest demand upon the nurse. But here are essential necessities common to all, and two of the first are cleanliness and a well made and well kept bed. Of cleanliness more hereafter.

The lecturer also gave a practical illustration of how to make a bed first without a patient in it and secondly with a patient in it. The class of ladies who have entered for the course have already taken a deep interest in the study and they will without doubt be greatly benefitted by the information received.

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

The success of Norway Pine Syrup as a cure for coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles is due to the fact that it is the best and pleasantest remedy ever discovered, and because its action is prompt and certain.

CHAPTER II.

"Hallo, my son! Just ready for you," said Meryon.

"Honored lord, the prince commands your presence!" quavered the boy, agitatedly twisting together his slender fingers.

Seeing something was wrong, Meryon recognized the need of restoring Ebal's confidence by preserving a bold front.

"Commands it, does he? Isn't the old man overstraining himself a little? But of course you meant to say that he begs to supplicate the privilege of my company. Well, tell him to keep his caftan on and I'll be round in the course of a day or two."

"Do not speak so, beloved lord! Hatipha has found us out and told his highness. Oh, if they kill you, I will kill myself!" cried the child, bursting into tears.

Meryon, greatly touched, expressed it in his American way by a loud laugh.

"Don't you fret, Ebal, my jewel; neither of us is going to quit this sinful and hollow life for sixty or seventy years to come, at least. You don't half know me yet. I have but to clap my hands and say: 'Galah!' and the president of the United States would march into the palace at the head of the army, navy and New York police department, and snatch up the whole court by the scruff of the neck and dump it down hard on Blackwell's Island—yes, they would! Hand me that stocking. And talk about palaces! wait till you see the white house. Ebal, you don't know luxury, gorgeousness, extravagance, intrigue and corruption until you've been naturalized in the states as a Jeffersonian democrat or a Lincoln republican. This is a poor, simple, innocent sort of place. Why, if Hatipha were to get among some ward politicians that I know, they'd mistake him for a newborn babe—yes, sir!"

HE SWUNG HIM FORCIBLY ROUND.

"I wish we were there, mighty lord," sighed Ebal, whose black eyes had slowly expanded while he swallowed this information. "How happy we should be!"

"Well, pack your grip, for we shall be starting before long, all three of us. Hand me that necktie, will you?—no, the red one—I'm out for blood this morning! Now I seem to be about ready, don't I? I'll be back in an hour; stay here till I come, and be a good boy; do you hear?"

Thus did the young American go forth to battle. In one way the fight was an unequal one, and no one knew it better than he. But in the east (and perhaps in other places) nothing is to be gained by a timorous or apologetic attitude; and Meryon was conscious, moreover, of possessing certain resources which, if not immediately substantial, might yet serve him in good stead. With wit, knowledge, insight and courage, even a single man may make headway against a multitude.

He strolled with an insouciant air towards that part of the palace buildings in which the prince's apartments lay. As he passed through the various courts, halls and corridors he was the object of a good deal of curious scrutiny from those who saw him, as if some hint had got abroad of his being in difficulties. He noticed, for his part, that there sign of bustle and uneasiness about which could hardly have reference to himself. They had a military smack to them. War was in the air apparently. But Meryon limited his interest for the moment to the war in which his concern was a personal one.

In the prince's ante-room was a knot of courtiers and attendants, Hatipha among them. His unseemly visage wore a grimace of evil mockery as he caught Meryon's eye, and as the latter drew near he ostentatiously ignored his greeting and turned his amorphous back upon him. Meryon, with a pleasant smile, put forth his right hand and caught the eunuch by the lobe of one of his huge ears, upon which as a pivot he swung him forcibly round. The creature squealed with pain, rage and astonishment.

"Well, how is the old pudding this morning?" the American inquired, sweetly. "It mustn't forget its superiors, or its manners. Waddle in and tell his highness I desire to see him at once on particular business."

The boldness of the rebuke startled all present, but all except Hatipha himself were manifestly pleased. The head eunuch is seldom a popular personage in any place, and he had in this instance fewer friends than the average. But Meryon's blood was getting up, and he would have chastised the grand vizier himself had that functionary bit his thumb at him.

He entered the royal presence close upon Hatipha's footsteps, thus depriving the latter of the opportunity of relieving his heart of the venom which the ear incident had set boiling there. He salaamed with easy courtesy and quietly elbowed the eunuch aside as he wished his highness good morning.

Meryon had, as has been intimated, been permitted great freedom in the palace, and was accustomed to observe little ceremony in approaching the prince; but the difference at a court between a man in favor and out of it is as great as between a musk rose and a skunk cabbage. Meryon was well aware of this, even before he met the potentate's haughty stare; but a desperate game must be dauntlessly played, and dangers met half way.

The prince, a stout, autocratic, but self-indulgent-looking gentleman of fifty, sat cross-legged amidst a pile of cushions on a low divan, with the snaky stem of a nargileh in his right hand. He was alone, save for a couple of Nubian mutes, one of whom kept imaginary flies off him with a long-stemmed fan of ostrich feathers while the other squatted at the bowl, of the pipe, ready to refill it as occasion demanded.

"Sir!" exclaimed the prince, erecting himself indignantly on his royal haunches, "do you venture into my presence before I have signified my pleasure to receive you? Your lack of respect and ceremony amazes me!"

"Prince," replied Meryon, with imperturbable politeness, "I have a communication for your private ear—your private ear, prince," he repeated, with a slight gesture of the head towards Hatipha, who was fairly dancing up and down in the agony of his blood-thirsty impatience to recount his grievances.

His highness hesitated a moment, bending the full force of his glance upon the young artist, who encountered it with one full as steadfast and significant. "Retire!" he then said to the eunuch, waving his hand in dismissal.

"But, most illustrious son of Heaven," began the inflamed functionary, "you understand not."

"What!" roared the prince, in a sudden fury; "am I told by the filth that comes beneath my feet that I understand not? Retire instantly, or that foul hide of thine shall be stripped from thy carrion carcass and serve as a mat for dogs to sleep on!"

This explosion fairly blew the unwieldy eunuch out of the room, turning green as he went with mingled terror and unglutted malignity. The American and the oriental were left face to face.

"Now, sir," the latter set out, with the modified sternness of a monarch who has just enjoyed the satisfaction of scaring a subject half to death; but Meryon interposed with cool suavity.

"Since your highness desires ceremony, let me remind you that I have not been asked to take a seat. May I inquire if you expect me to conduct this interview standing?"

The prince's breath temporarily forsook him. Meanwhile he and Meryon eyed each other intently. Meryon by this time was roused to the pitch of being capable of anything. But his anger had the useful effect of collecting instead of scattering his faculties, and he was outwardly cool as sherbet and calm as a June morning. He was very different from the genial, careless young fellow who during the past six or eight weeks had amused and interested the potentate. After a few pregnant seconds the prince, reflecting that they were alone (the mutes didn't count) and inwardly sensible of the impress of a spirit he had not calculated on, intimated that a place beside him was at the other's disposal. Meryon leisurely sat down and pursued his advantage.

MERYON LEISURELY SAT DOWN.

"Let us clearly understand each other, prince," he said. "I have hitherto met you with the informal confidence which a friend naturally observes towards his friend; but I must tell you that any attempt to impose on my good nature will be promptly checked. Is that plain or shall I more fully explain myself?"

Some real curiosity blended with the outraged dignity of his highness as he asked: "What do you mean by talking to me like that? Don't you know that by a nod of the head I can cause you to be bastinadoed, boiled in oil and bow-strung?"

Meryon smiled; the smile broadened to a chuckle, and the chuckle expanded into a loud and hearty peal of laughter.

The prince frowned, clutched his beard, kicked off a slipper, put his hand towards the gong and withdrew it, and then abruptly overcome by the mysterious absurdity of the situation, burst into roars of merriment as resonant as his guest's. Hatipha, hearing from without this combined uproar of mirth, uttered a scream of despair and waddled frantically away to harem, where he rent his robes and boxed the ears of whomsoever was not active enough to get out of his reach.

Ceasing at length and wiping the tears from his cheeks with the gold-embroidered satin cuff of his caftan, his highness panted out: "And now, what have we been laughing at?"

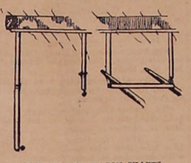
Useful Device for the Stable.

The accompanying sketches show how the thills of a sleigh or wagon may be elevated out of the way in a moment's time when the horse is removed from them. Two strips of wood are hinged together by a bolt, the end of one being nailed to a beam above. The lower end of the other piece has a stout screw eye, which meets a hook in another strip of wood nailed to the same beam when the hinged strip is raised to support the thills. The perpendicular pieces may be straps of leather, if desired.



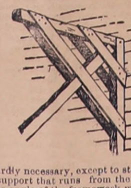
SUPPORT FOR WAGON SHAFTS.

Cutting Corn Fodder.

D. A. Kent and G. E. Patrick, of the Iowa station, report that chemical analysis shows that the maize plant first elaborates plant food, and then uses it largely in forming the grain. The ripening of the ear results in considerable loss of the nutrient matter in stalk and blade, the loss being about 12 per cent. on field weight, and 17 per cent. on dry matter, with a probable increase of loss in very wet weather. The experiments showed that ordinary field corn did best if cut and shocked late in September and early in October. The time to commence cutting corn is when the blades and husks have begun to dry, and all should be cut by the time that half the blades and husks have dried up. This gives about 10 days for cutting corn, but the fodder is even better if the grain ripens so fast that the harvest would last but five days instead of 10. The great value of the fodder, the importance of having the ears as ripe as possible, and the large size of the prairie cornfields call for a machine that will harvest the corn crop with the same facility that the self binder harvests the smaller grain.

Building a Safe Staging.

The accompanying illustration shows a method of making a safe staging for the walls of houses and barns. The method of construction is so plainly shown in the diagram that description is hardly necessary, except to state that the support that runs from the ground to the angle of the framework may be a rough pole, if joist is not at hand, though the pole should be stout. Such stagings are useful where one does not wish to mar the shingling or clapboarding by nailing on boards to build the usual, stage. Besides, these frames can be laid aside ready to be put up again at a moment's notice, providing in this way a saving of labor.



Jules D'Estimanville Clement. writes from Montreal: "I was suffering from skin disease, and after all drugs failed tried Burdock Blood Bitters, of which three bottles restored me to good health. I recommend it also for dyspepsia."

Beggars are promptly arrested in Vienna if caught begging on the streets.

The Medicine for Liver and Kidney Complaint.—Mr. Victor Auger, Ottawa, writes: "I take great pleasure in recommending to the general public Parmelee's Pills, as a cure for Liver and Kidney Complaint. I have doctored for the last three years with leading physicians, and have taken many medicines which were recommended to me without relief, but after taking eight of Parmelee's Pills I was quite relieved, and now I feel as free from the disease as before I was troubled."

To save life from the ravages of disease is nobler than to win a kingdom. Burdock Blood Bitters cures all blood diseases, scrofula, blotches, pimples, skin diseases, etc., by its cleansing power over the entire system.

Jutland was originally Juteland, or the land of the Jutes, a Gothic tribe.

NORWAY PINE SYRUP strengthens the lungs and cures all Throat Troubles, Couhgs, Colds, etc.

Bulgaria was formerly Volgaria, so called om the Volsci who inhabited it.

As Parmelee's Vegetable Pills contain Mandrake and Dandelion, they cure Liver and Kidney Complaints with unerring certainty. They also contain Roots and Herbs which have specific virtues truly wonderful in their action on the stomach and bowels. Mr. E. A. Cairncross, Shakespeare, writes: "I consider Parmelee's Pills an excellent remedy for Biliousness and Derangement of the Liver, having used them myself for some time."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of today, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

DANGEROUSLY INJURED.

Anson Dafoe, of Stirling, Seriously Injured in a Portable Saw Mill—His Recovery Doubtful.

STIRLING, March 7th.—While Anson Dafoe, a prominent resident of Stirling, was sawing lumber with a portable saw mill on the farm of Michael Kerby, half a mile from the village, about three o'clock this afternoon, he went to pull out the belt. It caught his hand and turned him several times around the pully, bruising his left hand very badly and leaving a severe cut in the forehead. He cut his right arm about half off, breaking it above and below the elbow, so the bones were left sticking out of the flesh. It is expected that it will have to be amputated. He also cut his right leg very badly and broke four or five of his ribs, and received several bad bruises. He was taken to the office of Dr. Meiklejohn, where Drs. Meiklejohn, Faulkiner, Sprague and Zwick dressed the wounds. His recovery is very doubtful.

Exciting Adventure of Allen Herrington on a Railway Crossing.

The engineer, Wm. Gorman, thinking, so he says, that it was a load of wood, jumped and seriously cut and bruised himself.

THE SPRING SITTINGS WITH JURY BEFORE CHANCELLOR BOYD.

A Mortgage Case Dismissed—A Suit for Illegal Arrest Thrown Out—Slander Suit Rejected—Patrick Wims Given $200 for Injuries Sustained in the Bridge St. Sewer.

THURSDAY, March 7th.

A MORTGAGE CASE.

CHEESEBORO VS. VANDERVOORT. This was an action brought by Charles Cheeseboro and Charles P. Cheeseboro, his son, of Sidney, against James Vandervoort, of the township of Rawdon, for illegal foreclosure of mortgage. The plaintiff and his son were indebted to the defendant for the amount of a promissory note, and being served with a writ by the deft. agreed to give a chattel mortgage to secure the same. The time for which the chattel mortgage was to run was the point in the action. The time, as stated in the mortgage, was for less than one year and the deft said this was the time agreed on. The plaintiff, on the contrary, claimed that the agreement was that payment was not to be made till two years from date, and that the term one year was inserted in the mortgage because the mortgage would not be legal if not made payable within one year from date. The deft. before the expiration of the year renewed the mortgage and shortly afterwards procured the goods to be seized and sold. The plffs. then brought this action, claiming damages for illegal seizure and sale and for a reformation of the mortgage in accordance with the alleged agreement for payment. The case tried without a jury and lasted for some hours. Case dismissed with costs. E. G. Porter for plffs.; S. Masson for deft.

His Lordship in his opening remarks in giving judgment paid a high compliment to Mr. Porter for the able manner in which he had conducted the case for the plff.

ILLEGAL ARREST.

O'DONOGHUE VS. HINDE.—This is an action brought by Michael O'Donoghue, a carpenter living in Belleville, against William Hinde, until lately Chief of Police of Trenton, for alleged illegal arrest. Mr. O'Donghue, sworn, said: I am the plaintiff in this action; on the 17th November last, I left here on the 3:20 a. m. train to go to Harwood; I arrived at Trenton about 4:50 a.m. and stopped and registered at St. Lawrence Hall; I remained there until about 8 o'clock; about that time I went over to the Grand Central hotel; I started to go over to Main Street, and had got as far as a gangway near the Purdy block.

There is a gate on this gangway; I went in this gangway 15 or 20 feet; I was standing facing the river with my back to the public street; I felt a hand laid on my shoulder and was jerked suddenly around, and was thrown on my knees, "ah! ha!" he said, "I have you at last." I looked up and recognized Hinde; he dragged me to the street, and stopping a carter threw me on my back on the bottom of the cart; he took me to the police station in that condition; when we got there he said, give me $3.50 and I'll let you go; I refused; he then locked me up and left me in the cell for about an hour; he came back then accompanied by Clarence Huffman; I asked to go and see some parties I was acquainted with in the place; he made no answer; he went out and came in again in a short while; the room up to this was chilly; he put a stick in the stove, lit some shavings and went out; he came again at seven o'clock, the stage driver was with him; he said, "Is this where I find you, I have a letter for you;" it was the answer to the telegram; I opened it and found money; I showed the money to the chief and said I have no need of this to pay you; I then showed him my pocketbook, in which there was money; I handed him a $5 bill; he took out $3.50 and handed me the change; I said you'll hear from me again; he said you want to be very thankful I didn't put you in the black hole; I then left; I did not go to Harwood, I had been delayed too long, but took next train back to Belleville; two days after a charge was placed against me by Wm. Hinde, deft., charging me with being drunk and disorderly on public streets of Trenton; I was dismissed, as the charge was not sustained.

Chief Hinde, sworn, said: I am Wm. Hinde, the deft. in the action; I am the Chief Constable in the town of Trenton; I remember the occasion in question; I first saw the plff. going into the alley named; he was very drunk; I was at this time talking to some gentlemen on the corner some 60 yards from the alley; my attention was drawn to the deft. by one of the gentlemen present; I went to the alley and found O'Donohue lying in the alley in an indecent condition about nine feet from the entrance; I did not catch hold of plff. and pull him backwards; I sent for a carter; I have known this alley for 15 years; it is roofed over by a brick archway with rooms above; the public walking along could not help seeing the plff.; when the carter came I took the plff. by the arms; I had the carter back and lifted the plff. up bodily and placed him carefully in the cart; the man was beastly drunk; I had the man taken to the police station and put him in the outside drying room and not in a cell; I laid him down by the stove, put in a fire and kept him; he never said a word and did not ask to see any person; I did not see him again until after dinner; he was then asleep; I did not then know who he was; I had made enquiries to find out who he was but had not succeeded; I never saw the man before; the man Huffman whom O'Donoghue had asked for came to see him about 6 o'clock; Huffman was drunk also; we went in together to see O'Donoghue and he was not in a condition to leave the station at this time; at 7 o'clock the Trenton stage driver came along with money; we went down to the station and found O'Donoghue standing by the fire; Smith, the stage driver, handed an envelope to O'Donoghue; O'Donoghue took out a $5 bill and said that as he did not wish to stay over Sunday would I take $3.50 to let him go; I told him I had no power to take in fines but would take the $3.50 as a security for him to appear at the police court Monday; he made no complaint against the money being taken; O'Donoghue was then let out on condition that he would leave and go to Belleville. He, however, did not leave the town at once. I knew nothing more of this case until the notice of the action was brought before me. Cross examined by Mr. Porter.

James Coleman, sworn, said he was a laborer residing in Trenton; remembered seeing O'Donoghue in St. Lawrence Hall in Trenton on November 17th last; he was under the influence of liquor; saw him some time later about the lane mentioned; Chief Hinde was with him; the Chief took O'Donoghue on a cart to the police station; people passing along the street could see O'Donoghue lying in the gangway.

Cross examined.—Did not see the plff. drink anything that day; did not see the Chief go into the gangway; saw the Chief holding the plff. on a cart when taking him to the police station.

Randall Cronk testified that he lived in Trenton; saw the plff. on November 17th; he was standing on the corner of Front and Dundas streets near the ruins of the Queen's hotel; he was very drunk and staggered; witness was talking to the Chief and called his (Chief's) attention to the plff., who went into a gangway; a carter came along and the plff. was placed on the cart and was helpless.

At this stage of the proceedings Mr. Porter, counsel for the plff., said he did not see that it was necessary for him to proceed farther, as there was no case. His Lordship entered a nonsuit.

E. G. Porter for plff.; P. J. M. Anderson and H. W. Delaney for deft.

ANOTHER SLANDER CASE.

CLARK VS. VANKLEEK.—This was an action brought by Albert Clark, of Limerick, against Mary Vankleek, of Eldorado, for damages for slander. The plff. alleged that the deft. had charged him with stealing a sum of money whilst staying at her hotel at Eldorado last summer. Action dismissed. D. E. K. Stewart for plff., A. A. McDonald for deft.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

GAY VS. CASKEY.—This was an action brought by the plff., Miss Gay, of Madoc, to recover damages against the deft., Robt. Caskey, of Hungerford, for malicious prosecution. The plff. was an employee at Mr. Caskey's, and was arrested on the charge of larceny. The case was laid over until next court. Clute & Williams for plff., D. E. K. Stewart for deft.

FRIDAY, March 8th.

ACTION FOR DAMAGES.

WIMS VS. GRANT. An action brought by Peter Wims, of this city, a laborer, to recover damages for alleged injuries received whilst working for Robert Grant, of Toronto, a contractor on the Bridge street sewer. The amount of damages asked was $1,500.

Peter Wims was sworn and said he lived in Belleville; was a laborer; in August last he was digging upon the Bridge street sewer; on the 8th of August he was engaged in moving a large stone, taking it from near the river; the stone weighed about 400 lbs.; they loaded it on a waggon and used the stakes for rollers; they put it on the waggon and took it to one of the man holes on Bridge street; when they got to the scene they began preparations to lower the stone into the man hole; the foreman, Mr. Scott, would not allow them to use a plank in putting the stone down; witness, with Mr. Scott and the carter, was taking the stone off the cart when it slipped away from the other two and came back and struck the witness on his right thigh; he was taken home in Dr. Dolan's conveyance and was confined to the house for eight weeks. He had suffered much pain since, in fact had scarcely been able to work. His doctor's bill amounted to $75. Neither the contracter nor any person who was interested in the construction of the sewer had offered to pay him anything.

Wm. Couch said he was not present when the stone was moved, but a plank and roller should have been used to move it.

F. Duesbery testified that he helped to load the stone on the waggon. It was a heavy stone. It would take four men to carry the stone.

Dr. Dolan said he attended Mr. Wims and found him suffering from a fracture in the right hip; he was compelled to keep on splints for a number of weeks; he suffered much pain.

This concluded the case for the plaintiff.

Dr. Gibson said he examined Mr. Wims on the 22nd of October, and in his opinion the injury was not a permanent one; he would not swear that a fracture had not been sustained.

Dr. Tracy corroborated the evidence of Dr. Gibson.

John Scott said he was superintendent of the work on the sewer for Mr. Grant, the contractor. He detailed the unloading of the stone and how the accident accurred.

Thos. Thompson and John Lake testified that the stone was not a very large one, and could, they thought, have been handled without a plank or roller.

This concluded the case and Mr. R. C. Clute, Q.C., addressed the Jury on behalf of the deft., Mr. C. D. Macaulay for the plff. and His Lordship summed up.

The jury were locked up for an hour and a half, when they returned into court with a verdict for the plff. for $200 and costs. Macaulay and Morden for plff.; Clute and Lyons for deft.

NOTES.

The Grand Jury made their presentment this morning and were discharged. Owing to lack of space we were unable to publish it to-day, but will do so to-morrow.

Wm. Lount, Q. C., of Toronto, was in attendance at the court this morning.

The case of Queen vs. Ronald was on trial this afternoon.

The medical profession was well represented in court this morning, there being no less than six of them present at one time.

The court has remained in session for two nights until near 11 o'clock.

A juryman named Fred Burr, who was called in a case to-day, was excused from acting upon the petit jury, as he intimated to His Lordship that he was an American citizen. His home is in Deseronto.

WITH THE HUMANE SOCIETY.

Their Penny Reading in the City Hall Well Attended.

The Humane Society's penny reading in the City Hall last evening drew a good house, especially of children, for whom the programme was more particularly arranged. The entertainment was in aid of the Band of Mercy work. Principal Gardner presided and spoke briefly of the work being done by the Society in the way of organizing Bands of Mercy in the schools.

Mr. Douglas of the D. & D. Institute, opened the programme with a number of beautiful lime light views, which greatly delighted the younger portion of the audience. Mrs. York read a delightful little story entitled "Rob and His Donkey," which was also illustrated with views. Mr. Douglas gave a number of views illustrating the work of the Society, and these were followed by some amusing illustrations from Tennyson's "Enoch Arden." Several miscellaneous views and the distribution of literature brought the entertainment to a close and all went away feeling a greater sympathy in the work of the Humane Society. The Society wish particularly to thank Mr. Douglas for his kindness in furnishing such excellent lime light views.

SPORTING TALK.

The proposed ice trotting races have been abandoned.

The American schooner yacht 'Mohican,' owned by Mr. C. Herrington, was completely gutted by fire at Brighton yesterday morning. The 'Mohican' arrived at Brighton from New York last week.

In their first race at Cannes, the new 90 ft. cutter Ailsa defeated the Prince of Wales' Britannia by 4m., 15s. actual and 3m. 3s. corrected time. The wind was light. The Ailsa has proved herself a wonderful boat. Her performance, considering that it was the first day she had her racing sails on, was marvellous. Her owner, A. B. Walker, and her designer, Will Fife, were on board.

The Trenton and Belleville hockey teams were to have played this afternoon the final match for the Corby trophy, but the game has been postponed till this evening. This will be one of the best games of the season, as the Trenton team are coming here with a determination to win the cup and the result decides which team will hold the cup for a year. The Belleville team are in good form and will put up an obstinate defence.

NAPANEE WHITEWASHED.

The Quintes Win a Hard Fought Game by Four Goals to Nil.

A week ago Wednesday the Napanee hockey team played the Quintes here and owing to soft ice neither team was able to score. Napanee came up again yesterday afternoon and the two teams played last evening. The ice was in fairly good condition, with the exception of a hole on the north side. There was a big crowd of spectators, but, unfortunately for the hockey teams, too many came over the fence and stole in at the gate without paying. Some people have no shame when there is an opportunity to get something for nothing.

QUINTES.	POSITION.	NAPANEE.
Nash	Goal	J. Hamm
Powell	Point	McDougall
Phippen	Cover Point	Merritt
Hamilton Weller Kelso Twining	Forwards	W.D.Rockwell F.S.Rockwell C. Trimble W. Corson
F. McKeown	Goal Referee	Radford

Frank Doyle, Referee.

The game started easily with both teams feeling their way and picking out the weak points in their opponents' play. There was no weak spot in the Quintes' team, as was soon evidenced by their brilliant work. The Napanee forwards did some beautiful work and had they been supported as were the forwards of the Quintes, the result might have been different. The first goal was scored after twenty minutes of hard work by Weller. After the face off the puck went up and down for a few times and Kelso got it on his side of the ice and put it through by a neat shot from the side. No more goals were scored up to half time, although the Napanee team rushed matters for the seven minutes left.

The teams were given ten minutes' rest and started in again. It looked for some time as though neither team could score, but the Weller-Kelso combination finally prevailed and Weller added another goal after twenty-five minutes' play. Within one half minute of time Kelso scored again and time was called.

The Napanee boys played a nice clean game, but one of the young Rockwells lost his head and did some slugging; he soon awoke to the ridiculousness of his play and desisted. The Quinte goal had a close call at one time and the spectators thought Napanee had scored, but the referee said not.

The Napanee team took their defeat like gentlemen, and hope to get even at a future date.

BELLEVILLE BEATEN.

The Colts of the Curling Club Defeated by Their Peterborough Confreres.

A friendly match was played here last night by the "colts" of the Peterborough Curling Club and those of the local club. The game, which consisted of twenty-two ends, was, during the greater part of the time, closely contested, but the Peterborough men finally won by twelve shots. Many times the score was tied on both rinks, but after half game the visitors began to draw ahead, and had a small majority, when a six end near the close on No. 2 gave them a commanding lead, which they held to the end. There was good, bad and indifferent curling, but we have seen the seniors play an inferior game to that which the juniors put up last night. Following is the score:

BELLEVILLE.	PETERBOROUGH.
RINK NO. 1.
M. Wright,	S. D. Hall,
F. G. Lewis,	W. Thompson,
J. A. McFee,	C. B. Clegg,
J. F. Wills, skip—21	D.Davidson, sk.—18
RINK NO. 2.
W. W. Brown,	C. LeBrun,
H. Smart,	G. S. Hay,
T. W. R. McRae,	C. N. Brown,
E.H.LaRoche, sk.—18.	G. Horkins, sk.—33
Totals 39	51
	39
Majority for Peterborough	12

After the match was over the players and a few of their friends adjourned to the Hub hotel, where supper was partaken of. Mr. W. H. Biggar, M.P.P., occupied the seat at the head of the table, Mr. J. F. Wills the vice chair. After supper had been partaken of a number of toasts were proposed and responded to by the greater number of those present. Songs in the interval were rendered by Messrs. F. Lewis and S. Lennox. The handsome cup which was given for competition between the colts teams of Belleville, Campbellford and Peterborough, and which was won this year by the latter club, was upon exhibition and greatly admired. During the evening Mr. Biggar presented the cup to the winners, making an appropriate address. Mr. G. Horkins, in accepting the cup on behalf of Peterborough, said they highly appreciated it and would endeavor to keep possession of it.

The party broke up at an early hour after spending an enjoyable evening.

Died at Prince Albert.

Mr. A. H. Jones, of Sidney, has received a message from Prince Albert stating that his daughter, Mrs. Ramsay, was dead. He telegraphed to have the remains sent here for interment. No particular have been obtained as to the cause of her death. Deceased lady, whose name before marriage was Ida Jones, was about thirty-five years of age and a general favorite among her many friends in Sidney. She was married about eight years ago and leaves beside her husband a family of small children.

COMMITTEE WORK.

The Contract for the Front st. Sewer Awarded to Walter Alford.

Four of the civic committees met last evening, and, from the work gone over, next Monday night will be a busy one for the Council.

WATER AND GAS.

The Water and Gas Committee recommended the payment of a few accounts and also that tenders be asked for lighting the coal oil lamps of the city, tenderers to furnish all coal oil, chimneys, wicks, etc., and to state the location of each lamp proposed to be lighted by them in their respective tenders.

PUBLIC WORKS.

The Public Works Committee passed the pay sheet and also recommended that owing to the slowness of the work of getting out stone in the city quarry, Mr. Frank Dolan be given a contract for 300 cords to be taken from his quarry on Murney st. The tenders for Front street sewer from Hotel st. to the upper bridge were opened and was as follows:

Robert Thompson and Wm. Donohue tendered for the section from Hotel st. to McMahon's livery at $2.40 per lineal foot; from McMahon's livery to upper bridge, $2.30 per foot; manholes, $37.50 each; gullies, $52 each.

Jas. Ross tendered for the whole work from Hotel st. to the bridge $2,717; gullies, $50; manholes, $25, or a total of $3,092. Walter Alford tendered for sewer, $2.35 per lineal foot; gullies, $35.60; manholes, $54.60.

The committee, after considering all the tenders, awarded the contract to Walter Alford, his whole tender being the lowest, namely $3,080.

FIRE COMMITTEE.

The Fire Committee passed a few accounts and decided to take a night in the near future to consider the alleged deficiencies in the fire department equipment, as set forth in Inspector Howe's report.

PRINTING COMMITTEE.

The Printing Committee met last evening and opened the tenders for printing from the different city offices. They were unable to finish the business and will report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The Weather.

Under the influence of spring-like weather, the snow is melting and settling rapidly. Last night the temperature fell to 8, but at 8 a. m. had risen to 22, and at noon it was 46.

PROBABILITIES.

Fair to cloudy and decidedly mild; followed by colder northwesterly winds and snow flurries.

A DELIGHTFUL ENTERTAINMENT.

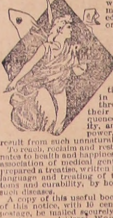
Mr. Thos. Stewart's Bible Class Gave a Conversazione at Col. Brown's.

Last evening a delightful conversazione was held at Col. Brown's by Mr. Thos. Stewart's Bible class, which rivalled, if it did not excel any entertainment of a like nature given this season. Perhaps the fact that Col. Brown opened his spacious residence for the occasion, was in itself a sufficient reason for the crowded house which rewarded those who so energetically prepared the very enjoyable programme.

The bag pipes was there and Mr. Wm. McIntosh's soul-stirring strains pleased the audience. A chorus by the class won for them a well deserved encore. Mr. A. Gillen's solo was highly appreciated; Mr. Lalonde delighted the audience with his violin solo and was rewarded with a hearty encore. A duet by the Misses Falconer and Graham and a song by Mr. W. McLean were rapturously received, and a recitation by Mrs. Larke, who at the last moment very kindly consented to fill the place of a lady who was unavoidably absent, brought the first part of the programme to a close. That Mrs. Larke's recitation was much appreciated was evident from the applause with which she was greeted.

A great deal of interest, however, centered in the inimitable performance of the renowned German family under distinguished management and patronage. The almond-eyed Celestial, the unspeakable Turk, Sambo and the fortune telling gipsy, the "ould" Irishwoman and the ever-present dude, all combined to give enjoyment and promote mirth by an original entertainment, which will render this versatile family popular and famous for all time to come.

The young ladies of this class deserve great praise for the pleasant and happy evening they afforded last night to those who were present, and Col. Brown deserves the heartiest thanks of all for so hospitably opening his doors to all last night.



GOOD SPIRITS

follow good health while low spirits, melancholia, impaired memory, morose, or irritable temper, fear of impending calamity and a thousand and one derangements of body and mind, result from pernicious, solitary practices, often indulged in by the young, through ignorance of their ruinous consequences. Nervous debility, and loss of manly power, not infrequently result from such unnatural habits.

To reach, reclaim and restore such unfortunates to health and happiness, is the aim of an association of medical gentlemen, who have prepared a treatise, written in plain but chaste language and treating of the nature, symptoms and curability, by home treatment, of such diseases.

A copy of this useful book will, on receipt of this notice, with 10 cents in stamps, for postage, be mailed securely sealed in a plain envelope. Address, WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

BELLEVILLE, March 7th, 1895.

DEAR SIR,—I wish to contradict the statement in your last night's issue in regard to the Smith family on John st., stating that I had been a frequenter of their house and received his money. There is no foundation to it, as I never knew him to have money enough to supply his own family's needs.

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

CHAPTER III.

Meryon did not at once reply. He took his cigarette case from his pocket, selected a cigarette and said to the Nubian of the nargileh: "Boy, a light." After obtaining it he drew in a whiff or two with a thoughtful air and then turned gravely to his host.

"Prince," he said, in a tone of icy distinctness, "it is fortunate for you that I did not take your bravado in earnest. If I thought," he continued, with a stern and keen look, "that you actually meditated violence to me and thereby to the all-powerful nation which I represent—if I believed that, within three months your kingdom would have been wiped from the map, and you and your subjects would be on your way to New York to become waiters in the public restaurants!"

There was a silence. Both smoked. Meryon with long, serene inhalations, his highness with short, sharp puffs. At last he said: "Your statement, Meryon Pacha, seems improbable. I have indeed heard that your nation is great, and I know that the ways of Allah are unfathomable. Injustice dwells not in my heart. You will admit that you have been hospitably entertained—" Meryon stiffly inclined his head, at the same time slightly lifting one eyebrow and shrugging the opposite shoulder—"but it has come to my ears that you have ventured to look upon and even to address communications to the princess, my daughter, apparently presuming her capable of deigning—"

Once more Meryon interrupted. "Prince, you employ words which I won't take from you. 'Deigning!' Does the tom-tit condescend to the eagle? It was my whim to lay aside the cares of sovereignty (which I must resume on my return home) and masquerade in this out-of the-way little corner, for a while, as a mere traveling artist. But in birth, station and power you're simply not in sight, beside me, not to mention your interesting family."

The prince, by a nervous jerk of the elbow, upset the nargileh, which the Nubian deftly caught and replaced.

"I've been studying your little principality," resumed the other, "with a friendly disposition to do something to improve it. I heard you had a daughter, and it struck me she might be the means of my helping you. I'm unmarried, and though I could get a wife worth a dozen of her in New York or Chicago, to say nothing of Boston, yet I believe in occasionally crossing the higher strains with humbler blood, and I have had thoughts of honoring you and exalting her by a union with myself."

A dozen things rushing at the same instant to get uttered at his highness' single mouth, naturally got wedged, like people trying to escape from a burning theatre, and the prince became crimson, but said nothing at all. Meryon went on:

"AND IT'S YOUR FAULT."

"But a serious objection has arisen, for which you are primarily to blame, and which you must remove if I am to go on with the scheme Terah—though I'm confident she is a good little girl and personally incapable of evil—is, nevertheless, conventionally speaking, damaged goods. And it's your fault."

The novelty of his sensations was hypnotizing the prince. His eyes rolled outwards, and his breathing was stentorious. But he no longer attempted to address the meeting.

"Qui facit per alium, facit per se," the American continued; "you are to blame for the crimes of your head eunuch, for you ought to have known better than to intrust such a clumsy beast with such delicate responsibilities. Either from brute carelessness or worse, this fellow, Hatipha, the other day, suddenly sprung Terah on me with her countenance in a condition which I shudder to describe. It—she—I—in short, her veil was down!" Here Meryon bowed his head upon his knees, and tremors shook his frame.

Inarticulate gurglings came from the prince's lips. Drops of sweat formed beneath the rim of his turban and ran down into his beard. This was a great day for him, never to be forgotten!

"Anyone less magnanimous and charitable than I would have turned his back upon her and you forever," the artist went on presently. "Such an outrage upon an unsuspecting guest can hardly be too severely resented. But compassion for Terah—who was really as much shocked as I was—and friendship for you led me to forbear. I caused word to be sent to her that, on certain conditions, I would try to overlook the matter. And I am now here, prince, to tell you what the conditions are."

His highness, with eyes goggling on vacancy, stretched out his arms in front of him and rapidly closed and extended his fingers. It is uncertain whether this indicated that he wished to catch hold of an elusive word, or of something more substantial. Either way it was expressive.

"What I require," said Meryon, with stern impressiveness, "is your straight-out apology; and to prove its sincerity, it must take the form of delivering up Hatipha into my hands, to be annihilated as I see fit." Having thus delivered himself, Meryon took another cigarette from his case, signed to the Nubian for a light, and added composedly: "I have spoken!"

The spell upon his highness was broken. A confused roar proceeded from him, which perhaps set out to be a sort of laugh, but went on like the cry of a tiger thirsting for meat. He clapped his hands against his thighs, kicked off both his slippers (which the Nubian of the fan impassively restored to him, receiving in acknowledgment a violent kick in the stomach), and betrayed other symptoms of strong feeling. Gradually the waves of emotion became less agitated, and allowed him to employ human methods of speech.

"Meryon Pacha," he said, "I have been indignant. I heard reports of you which made me wish to kill you. You have spoken, and made things look different. I am more indignant than before, and somebody must be killed, but I am willing it should not be you. You have spoken of Hatipha; it shall be! I will discipline him. I will draw off his hide in strips an inch wide. I will burn out his eyes with hot needles. I will tear out his tongue, and cut off his hands and feet. I will rub his carcass with red pepper and sirup, impale him upon a stake ten feet long, and set him in the public square for the flies to eat. Yea, by the beard of the prophet, he shall be taught etiquette!"

Meryon mused and shook his head. "The punishment is too light," he finally said. "Ordinarily, I might be satisfied with it, for I am more forgiving and tender-hearted than a woman. But the dog's offense demands some really adequate penalty. I think I must have him boxed up and sent to New York to be naturalized and run for mayor on his record. It is necessary, too, that my own countrymen should see that my honor is vindicated. I will think it over. In the meantime let him be shadowed."

"Is the penalty you made a very terrible one?" asked the prince.

Meryon smiled wearily. "Merely to read the account of it in the newspapers is punishment enough for most crimes," he replied. "I hate to inflict it; but mercy is one thing, weak indulgence to sin, such as your proposition would amount to, is another. And from the reputation of the woman I marry every shadow of a stain must be removed."

"As to that," said the prince, whose natural suavity was returning, "though I suppose what you say of yourself and your nation is true, still I could easily—very easily—have your head cut off, and say to your people (when they came to ask) that yout had been killed by somebody else. But I, too, am tender-hearted, and what you say about the princess is certainly true, for Hatipha himself told me so—and other things! So I should like to have you for a son-in-law, especially if it would benefit my kingdom. But how would it benefit it?"

"Well, looking at it strictly as a financial measure, I should say it would benefit you about a lac of rupees' worth a year, very likely more—what with the summer visitors, the boom in trade and new openings for unmarried ladies." After a pause he added: "But, mind you, I haven't yet promised I'll take her. My system got a bad shock that day, and I may never get over it."

The prince was silent for a long time, doing more thinking than was perhaps good either for him or Meryon. At last he said:

"Allah is great. Man knows little, and sometimes lies. Your words, Meryon Pacha may be truth or not. You wish to live; you also wish, I think to marry my daughter; but whether you desire the good of my kingdom is as yet hidden from me. But there is a way, if you choose, to prove it."

"Yes?" returned Meryon, in an indifferent tone.

"Yes. This morning I have news that the prince, my nearest neighbor, is going to make war on me. I am unprepared and need help. Beyond the country of my enemy lies another kingdom, whose king is my ally. If a messenger from me could reach him in three days from now I should be safe. But if I send one of my own subjects he would be stopped and slain, for his speech and features would betray him. But you, Meryon Pacha, could go in safety, for there is no war with your country, and since you are a sovereign, as you say, and able to destroy all who injure you, you have nothing to fear. I will give you a message to my ally which will tell him that you are my friend and are to be my son-in-law, and that my kingdom is in danger. Now, Meryon Pacha, will you do this thing to win the princess and save the kingdom?"

The American reflected a moment. The prince was ingeniously beating him with his own stick, so to say. The threat of war was probably a fact; but the secret embassy was devised as a means of getting rid of him without seeming to do so. On the other hand he could not, after his late magniloquence, decline to do his future father-in-law so ostensibly facile a service. There was but one weak point in his highness' argument. He put his finger on that.

"The letter which I am to take to you ally will make me known also to your enemy, if he searches me. He would treat me as a spy and I should have no ground of complaint."

"OH, WELL, I DON'T CARE IF I DO."

The prince smiled an oriental smile. "You are prudent and far-seeing, Meryon Pacha," said he. "But if I protect you from this peril, will you accept the adventure?"

"Oh, well, I don't care if I do," replied the other, twisting his red mustachios. He already had a glimpse of an expedient for making the affair serve his own purposes.

"It is well," said his highness. "Return to me at sunset to day and I will give you the final directions."

"All right," returned Meryon, briefly, and the interview ended.

Pronunciation.

Good old Deacon Thayer who was school trustee in the town of Mendon, Mass., once said, when addressing the village school: "A correct pronunciation is of the utmost importance in this world and the world to come." But how many people have it? We heard three words mispronounced yesterday by persons of far more than ordinary culture, and the errors are all common ones. Before "desuetude" was dragged from its own desuetude by the president few persons pronounced it correctly. Very many persons habitually rhyme "squalor" with holler, and hardly anybody pronounce "aresis" correctly.—Boston Gazette.

Jules D'Estimanville Clement.

writes from Montreal: "I was suffering from skin disease, and after all drugs failed tried Burdock Blood Bitters, of which three bottles restored me to good health. I recommend it also for dyspepsia."

Beggars are promptly arrested in Vienna if caught begging on the streets.

The Medicine for Liver and Kidney Complaint.—Mr. Victor Auger, Ottawa, writes: "I take great pleasure in recommending to the general public Parmelee's Pills, as a cure for Liver and Kidney Complaint. I have doctored for the last three years with leading physicians, and have taken many medicines which were recommended to me without relief, but after taking eight of Parmelee's Pills I was quite relieved, and now I feel as free from the disease as before I was troubled."

To save life from the ravages of disease is nobler than to win a kingdom. Burdock Blood Bitters cures all blood diseases, scrofula, blotches, pimples, skin diseases, etc., by its cleansing power over the entire system.

Jutland was originally Juteland, or the land of the Jutes, a Gothic tribe.

NORWAY PINE SYRUP strengthens the lungs and cures all Throat Troubles, Couhgs, Colds, etc.

Bulgaria was formerly Volgaria, so called om the Volsci who inhabited it.

As Parmelee's Vegetable Pills contain Mandrake and Dandelion, they cure Liver and Kidney Complaints with unerring certainty. They also contain Roots and Herbs which have specific virtues truly wonderful in their action on the stomach and bowels. Mr. E. A. Cairncross, Shakespeare, writes: "I consider Parmelee's Pills an excellent remedy for Biliousness and Derangement of the Liver, having used them myself for some time."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of today, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

BRUTALITY IN BIDDULPH

A Tenant on a Boycotted Farm Visited By Masked Men, Assaulted and Warned Off the Place.

London, Ont., March 9.—Brutal doings are again reported from the Roman line in Biddulph. The boycott seems to be in effect there as strongly as it ever was, and the result was nearly a murder on Tuesday night. The victim was Mr. Herford, who a week ago completed negotiations with the Dominion Savings and Investment Society for the rental of lot 23, concession 7, of Biddulph. This is the farm on which the unfortunate Edward Bowers resided, and from which he fired the shot that killed William Cain. It will be remembered that Bowers' defence was that by renting the farm he had earned the hatred of his neighbors. The farm was taken from the man who previously occupied it because of his failure and refusal to meet the payments, and the friends of the evicted tenant resolved to make it an expensive matter for the company, and for whoever dared to live upon it. Bowers' life was threatened many times and this is why he fired the shot that took Cain's life.

Herford moved to the farm on Tuesday and not suspecting trouble was taking things quietly when he was confronted by a crowd of masked men, who attacked him with fists and clubs, knocking him down and brutally kicking him. Some of the masked villains shouted to their comrades, "Don't kill him now," and the attack ceased. Herford was warned never to appear on the place again or his life wouldn't be of long duration. The farm adjoins the Donnelly farm, and the spot where that family were brutally slaughtered is but a stone's throw from the house.

THE UNEARNED INCREMENT.

Brought Up and Discussed in the British Commons.

London, March 8.—Andrew D. Provand, a Liberal representing a division of Glasgow, brought up in the Commons this evening the subject of the unearned increment. He moved that: "No system of taxation can be equitable unless it include the direct assessment of such enhanced value of land as is due to an increase of population, wealth and growth of towns."

Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, President of the Local Government Board, replied that without doubt there had been a continuous increase in the value of urban land. The landlords had enjoyed the full benefit of the increment without bearing their share of the increase of taxation. He could not commit himself to any particular scheme of reform, nor promise a Government bill, but he could express his hearty endorsement of Mr. Provand's views.

After Sir Edward Clarke, Conservative for Plymouth, had argued against Mr. Provand, the motion was passed without division. The short debate was heard with keen interest by the House, as it bore directly upon the vexed question of ground rents in large towns, most notably London.

SHOT FOR STEALING WOOD.

A 16-Year-Old Cornwall Boy Charged With Shooting an Indian.

Cornwall, Ont., March 9.—Frank Easterbrooke, jr., a lad of about 16 years of age, was brought over from Cornwall Island to-night and locked up, charged with shooting an Indian. The Indian, whose name is Mike Oak, was cutting wood on Easterbrooke's farm and the young man ordered him off. Upon his refusing to go, he levelled his gun and shot him, the bullet taking effect in the side. The Indian's condition is considered serious. The Easterbrookes are the only white people on the island and there has always been considerable trouble between them and the Indians.

Later it was learned that the shooting of Oak was not by Easterbrooke, but by William Carpenter, his hired man, and was done after Easterbrooke and himself were attacked by the Indians.

SENTENCED FOR LIFE

Barney Murray, the Murderer of William Bright, Refused a New Trial.

Buffalo, March 9.—Justice Ward today denied Barnie Murray a new trial and sentenced him to imprisonment for life for the killing of his former employer, William H. Bright. Bright was the manager of the Genesse oil works, which went into the hands of a receiver owing Murray a small sum for wages. Murray tried to collect this from Bright, who would not pay, and a quarrel ensued between the men, in which Bright was shot and almost instantly killed.

Embezzler Keene to Be Extradited.

New York, March 8.—James Matthew Keene, who was arrested at the Marlborough House on Feb. 5, charged with having embezzled £1900 from the African Merchants' Company, was held for extradition at Liverpool to-day. His wife accompanied him.

Toronto Markets.

Flour — There is a quiet trade, with values generally unchanged. Straight rollers are quoted at $2.55 to $2.80, according to quality.

Bran—The market is unchanged. Sales outside, west at equal to $17.50 here. Shorts sell at $18 to $19.

Wheat—The market is quiet, with feeling irregular. White offers on Northern at 60c, with 59c bid. Spring nominal at 64c on Midland. Cars of Manitoba hard sold at 79c west, at 81 1-2c to 82c, grinding in transit, and at 80 1-2c to 81c, North Bay.

Peas—The demand is good and prices unchanged, there being sales at 58c both east and west.

Rye—There is little or nothing offering and prices are quoted at about 45c east.

A Firebug at Woodville.

Woodville, March 9.—The Attorney-General's department has been requested to send a detective here to unearth a firebug operating in this vicinity. Some time ago the Presbyterian Church was fired, later the Eldon Hotel was burned, and yesterday an outbuilding of the Northern Hotel was found ablaze, the fire having been started with coal oil. All three fires were undoubtedly of incendiary origin.

Electricity From Wind Power.

In an installation at the residence of a gentleman at St. Lunaire, France, a windmill is arranged on a masonary tower at a height of 83 feet from the ground, and the power is transmitted by gearing and belt to a dynamo, which charges a number of storage batteries. In this way a current is provided for the lighting of the whole house and for other domestic purposes.

They Were Willing.

In a western court not long ago a tiresome lawyer had been trying for more than two hours to impress upon the jury the facts of the case as they appeared to him. At last he glanced at his watch, and turning to the judge asked, "Had we better adjourn for dinner, or shall I keep right on?"

"Oh, you keep on," answered the judge, "keep right on and we will go to dinner."—Argonaut.

ONLY ONE LIST NOT IN

And That From One of the Ontario Constituencies.

A CABINET COUNCIL TO-DAY.

The Long Discussed Question of Session or Election May Then Be Settled—The Manitoba School Appeal Will Not Come Up—Standing of the City Infantry Corps—Notes From The Gazette.

Ottawa, March 9.—Summonses were sent out yesterday for a special council meeting to-day, but it is not expected that the Manitoba school case will then be disposed of. It was thought yesterday that possibly the question would be taken up, but as the record of the last day's proceedings before the Privy Council was distributed only late in the afternoon and the ministers desire two or three days to consider all the evidence, and, further, as Sir Charles H. Tupper requires time to prepare his report to the Council on the subject, a decision is not expected before the end of the week. During the past two or three days there have been rumors in circulation about the possibility of a session of Parliament before a general election, but with those circulating these reports the wish has been father to the thought. The question has not been settled.

The demonstration and banquet to the Premier at Belleville on Tuesday promises to be a great affair, Sir Mackenzie will be accompanied by seven of his colleagues, viz.: Sir A. P. Caron, Hon. Messrs. Ouimet, Daly, Angers, Dickey, Curran and Wood. At the station the party will be welcomed by the Mayor and corporation and a procession formed, and in the afternoon there will be a public reception at the Drill Hall. The banquet in the evening is under the auspices of the Board of Trade.

The militia general orders to be issued Saturday will contain the return of comparative efficiency of city battalions of infantry. So far as Ontario is concerned these are the results: 13th Batt., Hamilton, winners of the Gzowski Cup, with 125.25 points. A close second on the list are the Queen's Own Rifles, with 125 points. The 48th Highlanders score 102.13 points, 10th Royal Grenadiers 96.21, 14th, Kingston, 88; 43rd, Ottawa, 84.88; 38th Batt. 69.88; 25th, Elgin, 68.14; Governor-General's Foot Guards, Ottawa, 62.20; 57th, Peterboro, 51.5; 7th, London, 43.66. Of city corps in other portions of the Dominion the returns are: 3rd Royal Victorias 129.88 points; 62nd Batt., St. John, 125.50; 63rd, Halifax, 143.73; 66th, Halifax, 142.75. It may seem strange that two Halifax corps should have such a higher percentage than the Ontario regiments. This may be due to the fact that different inspecting officers were employed in each district. It does not, therefore, follow that because a Montreal, St. John or Halifax battalion has a higher percentage than any Ontario corps that the Ontario battalions are less efficient. To ascertain the correct order of efficiency of all city corps it would be necessary that they should all be inspected by the same officer.

Philatelists will be interested to learn that the Inland Revenue Department has just approved a new revenue stamp, to be used in receipts for payment of electric light inspection fees. They will be red in color and in size two inches by three-quarters. The stamps will be of seven different denominations, viz., 25c, 50c, $1, $2, $3, $5 and $10.

J. B. Spence, one of the engineers of the Railways and Canals Department, returned from the Sault to-day. During the past few days he has thoroughly inspected the new canal and its approaches. The ice is four feet thick in the canal at present. As soon as it has gone and before navigation sets in the approaches to the canal will be carefully swept to see that no boulders or snags shall impede navigation.

Rev. Father Lacombe has seen several members of the Government in reference to aid which he desires should be granted the half-breeds of the Northwest. He wants the Government to set aside a number of townships where these people could be located all together, given schools and a number of other advantages. He thinks that if they are congregated together in this way they will be more amenable to educational influences.

Hon. Mr. Costigan, speaking to your correspondent to-day, said that he was strongly in favor of the Government asserting the sovereignty of Canada to the Hudson Bay district, and, personally, he would like to have an expedition sent up there this summer. It was a mistake to allow people to go up there and squat upon lands or acquire valuable rights and the Government exercise no control over them. It is thought possibly a joint expedition under the auspices of Fisheries, Interior and Customs Departments, all of which are interested in the district, may be arranged.

The Canada Gazette contains the following announcements: Dr. Richard Stephen of Manitowaning to be medical attendant of the Indians of Manitoulin Island and north shores of Lakes Huron and Superior, Ontario, the appointment to date from May 23, 1882. Dr Stephen has been acting as medical attendant on these Indians for some years, and it has been thought advisable to confirm him by order in council in his appointment.

Prof. McEachren, Dominion Veterinary Inspector, has arrived in the city for consultation with the Minister of Agriculture on the Belgian embargo on Canadian cattle. The matter was intrusted to Dr. McEachren who, with Prof. Adams of McGill, will make a pathological examination of it in order to establish the exact nature of the disease which the Belgian experts have pronounced pleuro-pneumonia.

Hon. Mr. Foster left for St. John today. He will address a public meeting there on Monday. Mr. Costigan leaves for New Brunswick, to-morrow, and he and Foster will address a joint meeting in King's County on Tuesday in the interest of Hon. Mr. Pugsley, the Conservative candidate.

The revised Voters' Lists for Bonaventure, Champlain, Chateauguay and Compton, Cape Breton, Albert, the city and county of St. John and Brandon, were revised this week. Only one list, that for an Ontario constituency, has now to be received.

The militia general orders will contain the announcement of the appointment by the Governor-General of the honorary A.D.C.'s mentioned a week or two ago who are members of the active militia.

Narcisse M. Cantin, Olivier Bissonnette, Xenophile Bissonnette, Georgina Bissonnette, Josephine Cantin, all of Toronto, are seeking incorporation as the Dominion Specialty Manufacturing Co., with a capital of $25,000.

Weston, Ont., March 8.—The inquest into the railway accident which took place here on Feb. 8 was concluded late to-night. The jury returned a verdict to the effect that the accident was caused by the rules and regulations of the Grand Trunk Railway not definitely enforcing the block system, the present rules leaving too much discretion to despatchers, agents and operators, and that the danger signals now in force are not sufficient, especially when snow scrapers are being used.

DISCORD AMONG PATRONS

HAYCOCK SAYS IT WAS RIGHT.

Abolition of Government House Will Come Up on Tuesday Next on Mr Haycock's Motion—Yesterday's Session Characterized Only by Brevity—Two New Government Bills Introduced.

Toronto, March 9.—The Liberals held a caucus at the Parliament buildings yesterday, at which it was decided to push on the work of the session, in order that they might be free to help Mr. Laurier in the coming Dominion campaign.

The Patrons are not an altogether happy party just now, although Leader Haycock denies there has been any dissension in the ranks. The votes which they cast last night against the Opposition amendment in regard to the fees question has placed them in a hole. Several of the party disapproved of the course, and many of them are objecting to Mr. Haycock's having, as they think, gone out of his way to criticize the Opposition for its effort to gain what the Patrons are asking. Mr. Haycock believes that his speech will clearly show his attitude on the question; but at the same time the fact remains that the party at the first division voted against one of the principal planks of its platform, and the Opposition are delighted.

The session of the House yesterday was very short and no important business came up.

Asked by Mr. Howland whether it was the intention of the Government to provide for the temporary renewal of licenses in townships under the Local Option Act, pending the final decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the validity of that act, the Provincial Treasurer replied that the question was now under the consideration of the Government.

Mr. Harcourt returned the same reply to Mr. Bennett, who asked whether it was the intention of the Government to unite the license districts of Cornwall and Stormont and dispense with the service of one of the license inspectors.

In reply to Mr. Cleland, the Attorney-General stated that the Government had concluded arrangements with the Dominion for the settlement of the question of jurisdiction between the province and Dominion in the matter of the fisheries in the border and inland lakes, and it had been agreed to submit a case to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Hardy introduced a bill to amend the election law, making the provisions respecting corrupt practices more stringent.

The Attorney-General introduced two bills, one an act relating to leases, sales and mortgages of settled estates and the other respecting dowers, mortgages and other property.

As an amendment to the Cemetery Companies Act, Mr. Stratton introduced a bill providing that a person may leave an annuity on his death for the purpose of having his grave kept in proper condition. The bill also prevents heirs from selling the land or tombstones of their deceased relatives.

Mr. Wood introduced a bill to amend the act respecting the spread of noxious weeds, preventing traders from selling mixed turnip seeds.

The same member also brought in a bill to enable statute labor commissioners to collect taxes.

Mr. Hardy's bill respecting road allowances in the Rainy River survey was read a second time. The bill reduces the width of the highways along the banks of the Rainy River from 90 feet to 66 feet, and assigns the margin of land to the lots.

The question of the maintenance of Government House will come up on Tuesday next, when Mr. Haycock will move: "That in the opinion of this House the maintenance of Government House and the establishment connected therewith at the expense of the province should, upon the expiration of five years from the appointment, or the earlier termination of the term of office of His Honor the present Lieutenant-Governor, be discontinued."

Mr. Kerns will move for a return showing the names, evidence and occupation of all parties who gave evidence before the Fees Commission.

Notes.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Public Works shows that previous to Confederation there were but 1447 miles of railway in Ontario, whereas to-day there are nearly 5000 miles and 139 miles in course of construction. The total expenditure on capital account for 1894 was $427,607. Following are the amounts expended in 1894 on the different public institutions: Government House, $2593; new Parliament buildings, equipments, etc., $12,754; asylum for insane, Toronto, $9511; asylum for insane, Mimico, $17,174; asylum for insane, Brockville, $204,772; asylum for insane, London, $11,213; asylum for insane, Hamilton, $15,435; asylum for insane, Kingston, $29,177; asylum for idiots, Orillia, $7057; deaf and dumb institute, Belleville, $10,244; blind institution, Brantford, $3224; reformatory for boys, Penetang, $4347; agricultural college, Guelph, $12,189; Central Prison, Toronto, $25,330; school of practical science, Toronto (new building), $11,436; Mercer Reformatory, Toronto, $3402; normal and model schools, Ottawa, $9675.

At the first meeting of the Public Accounts' Committee, Mr. Awrey presiding, Mr. Matheson gave notice that he will move that the committee report to the House a recommendation that in the public accounts of the province, the details of all expenditures shall be published in as full a manner as shown in the Auditor General's report of the Dominion. The next meeting of the committee will be held on Tuesday morning.

Mr. Crawford will enquire of the ministry whether municipalities in this province have the power to regulate the hours for the retail sale of liquors by the license holders therein, and if not, what body has such powers?

EXPRESS COMPANY MULCT IN $2000.

Manitoba Orange Lodges and the Schools—Murderer Speight Caught.

Winnipeg, March 9.—Martin, Mitchell & Co., grain dealers of Winnipeg, two months ago sent their agent at Wawanesa, by Northern Pacific express, $2000. The agent signed the receipt book, but left the express office without the parcel. The expressman swore that he delivered it. To-day a jury gave a verdict against the express company for the full amount, with interest.

William Speight, who shot Otto Hedin yesterday, was captured by the police on the prairie 20 miles from Winnipeg in a blinding snowstorm. Speight was armed, but was too much exhausted to resist.

A VICTIM OF MAN'S GREED

Osler's Arraignment of Welter and Hendershott.

CASE FOR THE CROWN OUTLINED

Mr. Osler Will Bring Evidence to Prove That Welter Killed W. H. Hendershott With an Ax at the Instance of John Hendershott—The Accident Theory Absolutely Untenable.

St. Thomas, Ont., March 9.—There is little doubt in the minds of any person here that W. D. Welter will be convicted of the murder of W. H. Hendershott. People are not so confident, however, with regard to John Hendershott, the sole beneficiary of the murder and the man who is generally believed to have plotted the crime and used the younger man as a tool. The Crown claims to have some startling evidence behind and is confident of convicting both men.

Little progress was made with the case yesterday. The whole session was occupied with the presentation of the case for the crown to the jury by Mr. Osler, and the hearing of the testimony of half a dozen farmers residing in the vicinity of the tragedy who visited the woods. The demeanor of the prisoners has not altered in the slightest. The nerve of young Welter was manifested when witnesses entered the box and told how he had accompanied the doctors summoned by the Crown to the woods after the tragedy and gave an illustration of the position in which the body of Hendershott was found under the tree.

It will be remembered that the prisoners when examined by the coroner gave contradictory statements as to the number of axes in the woods where the tragedy occurred. Welter swore there was but one, while Hendershott claimed there were two. Subsequently the latter handed over a second ax, which he averred was the missing one. The ax was an old rusty weapon and not one likely to be used for felling trees, but his explanation would have had to be accepted had it not been for the fact that another ax covered with blood was found concealed in the woods a couple of days subsequently. This ax was produced in court to-day, and Richard Curtis positively identified it as the property of the elder prisoner. Hendershott's statements with reference to this ax are regarded as important. When he handed it over to Wardell he stated that he had visited the scene of the tragedy. As a matter of fact, he never entered the woods, and his action in this respect caused comment at the time.

The evidence of Edwin Wardell, Richard Saunders, Robert Stevens, John Lyle and Dan Crocker was important only in that it showed that the woods within a considerable distance of the fallen tree had been converted into a shambles. The defence will set up the claim that the deceased was killed by the tree, and a number of lumbermen have been summoned to show that the condition of things was quite consistent with the accident theory.

All the Crown witness swore, however, that as soon as they arrived in the woods they concluded that murder had been done. The patches of blood which were visible on leaves some distance away, and the imprints of bloody fingers on a small sapling gave rise to these suspicions. Besides, there was considerable more blood at the crotch of the tree than under the knot where the head of Hendershott lay. They furthermore swore that if deceased had been struck by the knot on the tree under which his head was found, the head would have been crushed into the earth. Several photographs of the tree were produced for the benefit of the jury. The case in all respects resembles that of the Hyams Twins in Toronto, and the verdict will have considerable bearing on the outcome of the trial of the alleged murderers of young Wells.

One witness swore to-day that he saw evidences of a struggle for life, but under cross-examination he failed to explain what these evidences were. William Jones, who disappeared a few days after the tragedy, was produced by the Crown, having been brought from New York by Chief Government Detective Murray, but nothing startling developed from his testimony. With others he carried the body of deceased from the woods. His evidence proved that the patches of blood found by the other witnesses could not have been caused by the carrying of the body, as the course traversed was in a contrary direction altogether.

What the Crown expects to prove was fully set forth in Mr. Osler's address this morning. After explaining the locality and the history of the case to the jury, Mr. Osler said: "The reasons of the Crown for saying the killing was not an accident are these: The body was found with the head under a newly cut beech tree, estimated to weigh 7000 pounds, about 3 1-2 tons. The body was found lying at an acute angle to the tree. The feet was nearer the stump and the head under a point in the tree where there was a large knot something like a cocoanut. The tree had fallen on the ground free from snow or ice. The tree as it fell left a mark in the ground and rebounded. The knot made a deep indentation. The head was in such a position that if the body had been there the knot must have struck the head and in that case the head would have been borne down in the indentation, but there was no evidence of anything of the sort taking place. There was no evidence that the tree struck the head of the man and then bounded up.

The first point of the Crown is this: The body must have been placed in the position where it was found after the tree had fallen, and was not struck by the tree as it fell. Next to be considered is the account which is given of the accident, which Welter claimed it was. He said the tree fell as it was expected it would; that they were sawing the tree, and that the deceased had forgotten his watch, which he had left at the head of the tree; that deceased ran for the watch as the tree was falling, and that he tripped on a knoll and fell. The Crown will show that Welter's accounts were not always the same. One witness will say Welter told him the tree struck deceased, but his general account was that deceased tripped on the knoll. The Crown will first point out the improbability of a man putting himself in peril to save a watch. The Crown say that is entirely an improbable story.

They say also that it would be impossible for the deceased to have run in the direction he is said to have run and fallen as he did. The Crown say this is an entirely improbable occurrence.

But supposing such things to be possible, then all the evidence of it would be confined to the place where the tree struck the man, and the Crown point out as entirely refuting the story of Welter the fact that in no less than six places in that woods, more or less distant from where the body lay, fresh blood was found on the ground. We find blood at 87 feet northeasterly from the stump. We have blood at a point 20 feet from this towards the northwest. Blood is found again at a point 66 feet towards the west. Nearly south from that, at a point 40 feet from the last, approaching the tree, blood is found. Blood is found also by the side of the trunk of the tree, and in another place at the crotch of the tree. The Crown believe the body was first placed under this crotch, and it not being considered a satisfactory place the body was changed to the point where it was found by the neighbors.

It was said that there were two axes in the woods. Only one could be found, concealed between the bark and a log of a fallen tree. There will be evidence to show that was the ax used in chopping the tree. There was a gap in the blade of the ax, and this gap shows in the butt of the tree, and it will be shown this ax was used by one of the men in cutting the tree down. More, when that ax was found fresh blood stains were discovered upon it.

It would be shown, further, that there was very little blood at the point where the body was found, and that there were splashes of blood on Welter's face on the afternoon he came home with the alarm. There are other circumstances which he would not refer to at any length at present, such as the finding of the watch of the deceased in the pocket of Welter.

A very important feature is the nature of the wounds on the head of the deceased. The Crown will show that these wounds could not have been made by a falling tree, but by the blow of an ax. Apparently deceased had been struck with the back of an ax on the back of his head two or three blows, also in another part of the head, and cut with the edge of the ax in the back of the neck. There were other sharp wounds on either side of the neck and head, one of which cut sharply the lobe of the ear. These blows caused death.

There was no depression of the skull apparent on the outside, but inside it was apparent there was a depression. The deceased had lived for some little time after the blows had been given, that fact being apparent from the clotting of the blood within the head.

Now another branch of the case is reached. All that has been said may appear excellent reasons why prisoner Welter is in the dock. But it will be asked why Hendershott? The Crown cannot say that Hendershott was present at the killing. It may be able to show that there was a missing hour when he may have been present, nevertheless he is charged with the crime of murder. The law is that if he suggested, counselled or procured that death he is just as responsible as if he wielded that ax and buried it deep in the dead man's skull. He who counsels or advises the taking off of a fellow-creature is just as guilty as the man who does the deed. It is hard to say which is the most dangerous man to the community—the knave who has not the courage to execute, or the man who has the courage to carry out and commit the deed. Bear in mind, that while the Crown charges both, it will leave for the jury to say whether both are guilty. You may think both are guilty, but you must weigh the evidence against each individual prisoner. Avoid discharging any one because you think another is more guilty with less evidence.

Why should Hendershott kill his own nephew? Why should this young fellow, full of life and vigor, be cut off? There was no malice. The Crown charges it was the horrible greed of the prisoner Hendershott, that he had procured large life insurance on the young man's life, and that the killing of the young man was the preliminary step to his coming into $11,000, which he never earned. The Crown charges that the prisoner Hendershott procured this insurance, and that there was a scheme between the prisoners by which the killing was to be done, in order to get the insurance. There was an insurance in the Mutual Reserve Fund Company, taken out on Nov. 23, for $6000, payable to John Hendershott. There was also a policy in the Covenant Mutual for $5000, taken out on Sept. 7, 1894. There had been paid on the Mutual policy $48, nearly the whole of which was paid by Hendershott, the prisoner. There had been paid also by Hendershott $23.40 to the Covenant Mutual Company. There fell due to be paid in 60 days, or on Jan. 21, 1895, $18 in the Mutual and the annual charges.

The total cost for the first year from the beginning, on the two policies, would amount to $240. It would be heavier the first year, owing to a double payment in the Mutual Reserve. The annual cost of the two policies per year, after the first year, would be $143. The Crown will show that the earning power of the deceased would be that of a young farm hand. You will know about what that will be. His total earnings, clear of board, would be about $12 a month. If that is so, the young man had insured his life so that it would cost him $9 a year more than his total earning power to keep up his insurance. The Crown will point out that it was an insurance impossible to keep up in any legitimate way; an insurance taken to be realised upon. It will be shown that Hendershott was not a man who himself could keep up the policies on this insurance. It will be shown he was a man in debt, borrowing money. But there is evidence to add to that to bring this crime home, the evidence of respectable witnesses that he was bold enough to say, when told it would keep him poor to keep up these policies, that when one kept up three or four policies it was easy enough to get rid of the life of one and pay the rest of the premiums.

The Crown will show the intimacy existing between the two prisoners. They slept together, lived together. There are suspicious circumstances concerning that journey by Hendershott. He took those policies with him.

"Can you," asked Mr. Osler, "imagine for a moment his taking that policy with him in his pocket, unless he knew that young man who had an expectation of life of from 40 to 50 years was soon to die?"

Then there came a telegram to Eden: "William Hendershott is dead, come home quickly." There were two William Hendershotts, a nephew and a brother of the prisoner Hendershott. His parents at Eden did not know who it was. Before Hendershott heard the details of the killing he knew and said who it was.

New men and new women—renewed and re-created beings—every day bless the memory of the great medical genius who gave to the world the wonderful health-restorer, Paine's Celery Compound.

To-day, thousands of nervous, dyspeptic, rheumatic, neuralgic and broken-down men and women are using Paine's Celery Compound in preference to all other medicines. Why is this? Simply because it possesses virtues and health-giving properties that are unknown to ordinary remedies. Hundreds of thousands in our fair Dominion are ready to affirm that Paine's Celery Compound "makes people well."

Mr. A. McGruer, of Dixon's Corners, Ont., says, "Paine's Celery Compound made me a new man." His letter reads as follows:

"About six months ago my condition of health was alarming and I suffered very much. I was laid up three days out of every week, and I often said to my friends that it would be better, if it was the Lord's will, that I should be called away. Three of the best doctors attended me, but could not relieve me in any way. It was then I was advised to use Paine's Celery Compound, which brought relief at once. After using this great remedy I find myself a new man, and feel just as bright as a boy of eighteen years. I think it is the greatest medicine in the world, and would strongly recommend it to all who suffer."

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

To the esteemed Globe: Will you, with reference to your inquiry, "Has the N. P. made you rich?" state the amount of business transacted by the Globe newspaper in 1878 and four preceding ante-N.P. years, and in 1894 and four preceding N.P. years?

Says the Montreal Trade Review: Mr. Laurier would have as much success in an attempt to dam up the waters of the St. Lawrence with bulrushes, as in his present one to persuade the Canadian electors that England is at present prospering under free trade. According to one authority, three million people are reduced to the verge of starvation in the mother country, and according to another, more than three and a half million of her arable acres have been turned down to grass during the last thirty years.

Speaking of the expressions of various Grit authorities on the Manitoba School question, the Mail and Empire remarks:—"It is interesting to note the gradation of opinion according to localities. The attitude commences in Manitoba with a blank refusal to do anything, and after a circuitous course in Toronto and Montreal, terminates in Quebec with the distinct pledge that Mr. Laurier will go far beyond the Privy Council suggestion, and will fix upon Manitoba a complete Separate School system, against the will of the province. But, out of it all, the true solution is observable. Mr. Laurier has only to appeal to Mr. Greenway, in accordance with his promise, and the case is settled."

> If Canada buys more of England's goods England will buy more of her wheat; that is the commercial law known to all bankers. The less Canada buys from England the less England will buy from her.—Montreal Witness.

This is another of the false assumptions of free traders. English dealers will buy Canadian wheat and other products simply because they are better or cheaper than others offered in the same open market; not because Canadian merchants purchase a greater or lesser quantity of English manufactures. For instance: In 1873 Canada bought from Britain goods to the value of $68,522,776 and sold to her $38,743,848 worth. In 1893 Canada imported but $43,148,413 worth from Britain, or upwards of $25,000,000 less than in 1873; and yet in 1893 Britain bought from us to the value of $64,080,493 or nearly $26,000,000 more than in 1873. In view of these facts, of what worth is the free traders' assumption?

Our old friend Sir Richard Cartwright is once more doing yeoman service for the Conservative cause by delivering stump speeches and getting them reported in the Globe. Sir Richard's wealth of political billingsgate is so great that its effect is to drive decent people to the support of a party who are so foully abused.

Just to show that Sir Richard's powers of abuse have not waned during his retirement, it may be noted that in the speech which he delivered at Sarnia he compared the Government to "priests of Baal;" spoke of "the shallow clap-trap of the National Policy;" of the Conservative leaders as "wolves," a "minstrel troupe and Jamaica cow combination," a "menagerie," "tools and agents of the manufacturers," whom he described as "the skilled and drilled cohorts of sinister interests," "dangerous to true freedom," "a standing menace to good government and a far worse set of bandits than the very robber barons of the Rhine." There is much more of this same edifying and elevating matter in Sir Richard's speech. But if the extracts which are given herewith are not sufficient to convince the reader that Sir Richard is a gentleman and a great statesman, we will have to abandon the task in despair.

"Has the National Policy made you rich?" asks the Globe. Well, answers the Montreal Gazette, as the deposits of the Canadian people in the chartered banks has grown under the N. P. from $63,635,000 in 1879 to $182,000,000 in 1894, it looks as if it had helped.

"Has the National Policy made you rich?" queries the Globe. At last the long desired answer to the query "who struck Billy Paterson?" has been found. It is The Globe.

Albert College News.

One of the most spirited sessions held in our Parliament this term took place on Friday evening in the College Chapel. The programme was rather long, but yet the interest which it excited made up for that defect. The piano solo by Miss Pettit and the vocal solo by Mr. Noice were both well rendered. Mr. Higgs rendered a reading to very good effect, although he was called on rather unexpectedly. The debate, "Resolved, that women are usurping to too great an extent, the positions generally held by men," was, as is generally the case, a very important factor in the meeting. The speakers on the affirmative were Messrs. E. V. Smith, D. R. Clare, W. H. Crosby and D. Graham. Those supporting the negative were Messrs. J. M. Walters, R. Finlay, J. M. Whyte and W. G. Hancock. The vote was taken at the close of the discussion, after which the Speaker announced that the bill was defeated. Lawyer Mikel, of the city, a former Albert student, was present and said a few words, which were very fitting and helpful indeed. We are sorry a larger number of the members of our Society could not have heard his words. The last item on the programme, except the report of the critic, was a recitation by Prof. Shephard. We need offer no comment on this, as the name of Prof. Shephard need only be mentioned in connection with any of our meetings to assure them of success.

This evening the Polymnian Society (Ladies' Society) will give a programme, "La Soiree des Debutantes," Prof. Shephard will recite at the close of this programme. If you wish to spend a pleasant and profitable time come to the College this evening. The meeting opens at eight o'clock.

On Sunday afternoon, March 10th, the Mission Band will hold its regular monthly meeting in the College chapel. These meetings are always profitable, and we trust the Chapel will be crowded to-morrow afternoon at four o'clock. Rev. Mr. Trotter, a returned missionary, now one of the ministers in the city, will address the meeting. Report of these meetings will appear next week.

An Ameliasburg Wedding.

A very interesting event took place at the residence of Geo. Carley, Esq., 3rd concession of Ameliasburg, on Wednesday, March 6th, it being the marriage of his only daughter, Gertie Mabel, and Walter Clayton, eldest son of Henry Pulver, Esq., of Ameliasburg. The ceremony, which took place shortly after 6 o'clock, was performed by Rev. A. J. H. Strike, of Carrying Place circuit, in the presence of about fifty guests, mostly relatives of the bride and groom. The bride was becomingly attired and looked charming. Miss Emma Smith acted as bridesmaid, her attire harmonizing beautifully with that of the bride. The groom was ably assisted by Mr. Morley Carrington, who is a cousin of the bride. After the ceremony and the usual congratulations offered, all repaired to the dining room, where a most sumptuous wedding dinner was served, to which all did ample justice. The presents to the bride were a handsome display of useful articles, consisting of glass, china, silverware, etc. Mr. and Mrs. Carley spared no pains to make the evening enjoyable. The newly wedded couple have the best wishes of a large circle of friends for their future happiness and prosperity. They will visit among thier relatives for some time, after which they will reside on the Pulver homestead.

EMILE ZOLA.

The Prince of Realistic Fiction.

Thus looks the master of realism. This is the man who has produced more work, excited more comment, probed more moral anatomies, than any living author. Needing a strengthening stimulant, Zola drinks "Vin Mariani," of which he says that "it is the elixir of life, combating human debility, and giving vigor, health and energy." This is high praise, but it is consonant with what has been said about this great tonic-stimulant, by all the celebrities of the day. "Vin Mariani" is the great nourisher. It strengthens the enfeebled constitution, makes the convalescent strong and well; is very palatable, never produces constipation, but rather aids digestion and assimilation. If you send your name to Lawrence A. Wilson & Co., Montreal, you will receive a little album of portraits of celebrated people, and you will thus learn something, not merely of the celebrated coca stimulant, but of the great people who drink it.

BRANDOLATRY AND LOVERS OF LABELS A THING OF THE PAST.

Judges, lawyers, bankers and merchants of Montreal have visited the Bordeaux Claret Company's cellars, and have pronounced their $3.00 and $4.00 wines, excellent and wonderful value. The cellars contain over twenty thousand dozens of Claret, Burgundy, Sauterne, Ports and Sherries all guaranteed pure and direct from the vineyards of France. Address for price list to the Bordeaux Claret Company, 30 Hospital Street, Montreal.

A Social Gathering.

The Mutual Improvement meeting of the Young Men's Bible class of Bridge st. was held last evening at the residence of Mr. F. E. O'Flynn. A number of the members of the class were present and all enjoyed themselves thoroughly. The class orchestra furnished music, and acquitted themselves admirably. The object of the meeting was to discuss three leading questions (in Parliamentary form.) Only one of the questions was dealt with, as the interest and enthusiasm was so unanimous that the whole time was occupied in discussing it, viz. Prohibition.

Each member was supposed to be a delegate or M.P. There were two nominations for President: the Hon. Peter Moon and Sir W. T. Watts, K. C. B. of Galway. The Hon. Mr. Moon was elected and filled his position with grace. W. Reeves was elected Secretary. Several took part in the discussion of the bill and it was finally voted "that prohibition is necessary for the salvation of the country and should be adopted as a plank in our platform."

The meeting broke up by offering a vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. O'Flynn for their kindness, and by singing "Auld Lang Syne."

How Tom King Was Translated.

A Tale of Simple Faith.

BY ERNEST JARROLD.

Ernest Renan, the great French philosopher, once said that the good man heads the procession of humanity, and that next comes the scientist, and third the philosopher. This remark reminds one of Tom King, the best man I ever knew. Tom was an old negro who lived in my native village. He had tasted the bitterness of slavery. There were scars on his wrists and welts on his broad back. When I first saw Tom he was in his prime, a man of magnificent proportions, a Hercules in stature and in strength. He could stand on the bottom of a canal-boat moored to the village pier and toss a barrel of flour out upon the wharf. The muscles under his black skin were then supple and sinewy, his giantlike form was as erect as the pine, and the men turned to look as he passed them in the street.

In his early manhood Tom was not a good man. One winter a noted revivalist came to the village and opened services in the little Methodist church under the hill. He compared the quiet little hamlet to Sodom and Gomorrah, and thundered his denunciations which struck terror to the hearts of his listeners. Tom's only surviving relative was his daughter Dinah, who became greatly exercised over the spiritual welfare of her father, and after weeks of pleading persuaded him to go to meeting. This proved to be a turning-point in Tom's career. The horrors of the fate awaiting the sinner in the future world filled Tom with remorse, and he resolved to go to the altar. It was only after a week of brooding that he made up his mind to take this step. To make the effort as easy as possible, he went to the church early and secured a seat near to the altar-rail. Tom's great heart was beating like a trip-hammer when the preacher invited the sinners to flee from the wrath to come, and he was the first to prostrate himself at the altar-rail, and to bend his gigantic frame in an attitude of prayer.

His mind was in a chaos. He felt as if he wanted something, but he could not tell what it was. For the following week he was a miserable man. He began to examine those great problems which have vexed the human soul ever since the birth of Adam. His feeble reason attacked such problems as free-will and foreordination. He went to the preacher, but obtained no relief. Tom remained in this mental condition for several weeks, when suddenly his mind was relieved. A sense of rest and happiness filled his breast. The preacher told him that he had been converted, and Tom believed him. He did not know what conversion meant, but he told his daughter, "Once I was dark inside like a coal-cellar, but now I's got a candle in mah soul."

Tom shook off the vices which cling to weaker men as a lion might shake autumn leaves from his mane. It was the blossoming of a human soul into an exquisite goodness. Very simple, childlike, and beautiful Tom's life became. He believed in the Bible literally. With the sensuous imagination of the negro, and the occult divination of a mind which dwelt continually on high planes of thought, he even aspired to translate the mysteries of the book of Revelation. Tom never troubled himself about current events, but after supper he would open the well-worn Bible and pore over the wonderful book with constant delight. And as the years went by, his spiritual horizon widened, and all malice and uncharitableness departed from him, leaving a gracious kindliness and sweetness which irradiated his rugged features. The portion of the Bible which fascinated Tom more than any other was the story of the translation of the prophet Elijah. In these iconoclastic days, when the hammers of materialism have been coming down with crushing force, there are many who laugh at the story of the fiery chariot and the flaming horses, but doubt of its truth never crept into the roomy chambers of Tom's faith. His Oriental fancy saw the chariot descend and rise again with its living freight. With beatific vision Tom would close the holy book after reading the story over again, look up with eyes of faith through the ceiling until the meteoric vehicle was swallowed by the sky; then clasping his callous hands in religious ecstasy he would sing:

"Whar, oh, whar is de good Elijah?
Whar, oh, whar is de good Elijah,
Who went up in de chariot o' flah?

By a process of reasoning peculiarly his own the idea took possession of Tom's mind that "when the summons came to join the innumerable caravan" he would be translated just as the prophet had been. This was not egotism on his part, it was simply an outgrowth of his faith. He had read the words of the Christ about faith like the mustard seed, and its application to the removal of a mountain, and he applied this literally regarding the fiery chariot. Then old age, with its concomitance of partial blindness and rheumatism, came upon him. His once stalwart form was bent, and his great arms began to wither like the limbs of a tree smitten by lightning. But his faith, clarified by years of self-communion and humility, supported him in his adversity. The little oasis of refreshing in the desert of his physical weariness Tom found at the weekly prayer-meeting. He always sat in a high-backed wooden pew near the door, remembering sadly that he was of an alien and contemned race. One hot August evening, when the brethren and sisters were paying more attention to the moths fluttering around the gas-jets than to the iteration of time-worn supplication and exhortation, the preacher awoke from a half-doze, and without rising from his seat, said: "There still remain a few minutes before the close of the meeting. If any one wishes to say a few words or to lead in prayer he now has the chance."

From far away on the drowsy evening air came the notes of the whippoorwill. Then the silence was broken by a blundering June-bug, which flew into Sister Jones' ear, provoking a shriek and a snicker. Then silence again. The preacher was about to close the meeting, when old Tom King pulled himself, by the help of the seat in front, to an erect position. He looked like a gigantic oak which was fast decaying, and there was a trembling cadence in his voice as he said, "Let us pray."

Tom paused for a few seconds, as if trying to gather all the powers of his finite intelligence in the effort properly to fix his feeble utterance to the task of addressing the Infinite. Then, with profound pathos and humility, he began:

"Our Father who art in heaven, we, Thy leetle chillun, look 'way tru' de night shadders into de ca'm lan' beyon' de sea. To-night, our Father, de fogs ob unbelief an' de mists of doubt am bein' swep' away by de strong wind ob faith, an' we can see de crystal ribber an' de bloomin' fiel's ob Paradise. De road has been tol'ble long an' dusty, Father. Sometimes de water has been sca'ce on de road, an' de sun has burned hotter dan de fu'nace; but, bress de Lord! de promis' lan' am only a leetle ways yander. Our eyes am a-gittin' dim, but we can see de sun a-shinin' on de jasper gates an' de glory floodin' de walls ob de holy city. De steeples an' de winders am a-blazin' wiv de light. We's only a settin' on de steps ob heaven to res' befo' de hosses ob flah an' de chariots ob crimson come down to take us into de green fiel's whar de flow'rs is eber bloomin'. In de sweet fiel's ob Eden we can see de Solomon-lily an' de roses ob Sharon, an' de bleedin'-heart honeysuckle, all sweeter dan de honey in de comb. De leetle bees, wiv gol'en wings are a-hummin'. Oh Lord, send quick de horses an' de chariots to carry us home, 'cause de misery am got us in de legs, an' de as'my am a-chokin'—ah—"

Here Tom halted in his prayer, swayed back and forth, and fell heavily back upon the bench. A scene of excitement ensued. With tender, reverent hands, the brethren laid him upon some cushions taken from some of the front pews. Already the pallor of dissolution was spreading over his face.

The radiance of an electric light was shining in at the window from the street. The gleam caught Tom's fading gaze, and a glad smile overspread his face as he murmured: "See de light ob de hosses! See de shine ob de fiery w'eels! Keerful, keerful, Gabr'el; keerful, chile! Drive dem flah hosses slow! I's comin'—comin'—comin'—"

And so Tom King was translated.

AN AUSTRALIAN DARWIN.

He Shows That Man's Ancestors Were Mere Kangaroos.

A new Darwin has arisen, who has proved, to his own satisfaction at least, that man is a development of the age. And he has chosen the humble and innocent babe as the base for his deductions. He sees the monkey in the man, or rather in the baby, at every turn. "Monkeys are snub-nosed; so are babies." Therefore, babies are monkeys. Could anything be clearer than that? That is S. S. Buckman's theory of evolution. Carrying the same idea a little further, I may say with truth that dugongs are snub-nosed; so are babies. Ergo, babies are dugongs. The one reasoning is as senseless as the other.

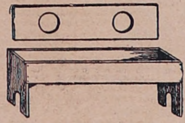
This Mr. Buckman carries the resemblance between babies and monkeys through a whole catalogue of "points." "Babies and monkeys both have pouch-like cheeks." He is not a family man, or he would know that the baby's pouch-like cheeks are developed after birth by the natural action of drawing the vital fluid from the mother. There are many other comparisons which are no wiser than those quoted, but I shall deal only with the last—No. 12 on Mr. Buckman's list of points of resemblance. "Children are very fond of rolling. This points to the time when our ancestors had hairy bodies tenanted by parasites, and allayed the irritation by rolling."

Shades of Darwin defend us! Has this genius ever seen a dog rolling, or a cat, or a horse, or any other of the familiar animals? If his reasoning be followed to the bitter end it can be proved that we are descended from the horse, the ass, the goat, the dog, or even the whale. We show points of resemblance to all of them at times, particularly the second, and especially when we get hold of pen and ink and commit to paper our opinion of things in general. You cannot persuade me, Mr. Buckman, that my ancestors were ever anything but men, savages, perhaps, but still men, and not goats, nor monkeys, nor kangaroos.

Having studied the Buckman theory thoroughly and grasped all its possibilities, I consider myself now capable of demonstrating to my readers that they are kangaroos or descendants from the kangaroo. 1. The kangaroo stands on its hind legs; so does man. 2. The kangaroo eats vegetable matter; so does man—when he can get it. 3. The kangaroo hops; ditto man, especially when he has trodden on the penetrating end of a tack. 4. The kangaroo's arms are shorter than its legs; so are man's. 5. The kangaroo runs away when it is scared; man does the same. 6. The kangaroo sometimes passes food to its mouth with its paws; ditto man when he does not possess a fork or does not know the use of it. 7. The kangaroo looks behind him as he is moving off; so does man—to wit, Lot's wife. And so on. I might find resemblances all the way from the tip of the kangaroo's nose to the end of his massive tail, but further comparison is quite unnecessary. There is enough food for reflection in these seven points to keep our nursery philosopher from sleeping for half a century.

Keeping the Reins Dry.

Drivers are sometimes annoyed by the plunging and splashing the horses make with their noses when driven to the watering trough, wetting the reins and splashing water over everything in their reach. How this may be prevented is shown in the accompanying illustration, after a sketch by Mr. D. R. Gleason. Make a float of any ordinary board, of just the size and shape to cover the surface of the water in the trough. Into this cut as many holes as you have horses to water at once, of just sufficient size for the horses to drink through. Through these they will drink, and if the reins are loose, or a halter strap is hanging down, they will not become wetted in the least. The water is kept cleaner by the shield, much of the dust and dirt which would otherwise be dropped in the water being caught on the board.



DEVICE FOR PROTECTING REINS.

Sheltered Stock.

Trials with steers, sheep and pigs were made during an average winter at the Utah station. There were three lots of three steers each, one lot being fed in the open air, clear of the barn, another lot fed in the barn in box stalls 6 by 9 feet and a third lot fed in the barn, tied by chains.

The trials with sheep included two lots of three animals each, one lot being fed in the barn and the other in the open air. The pigs, two lots of three each, were fed either in a hoghouse or in a pen outside the hoghouse. The following is the author's summary of his conclusions:

Cattle, sheep and swine on the whole required more food to maintain existence when fed in the open air than when housed.

Cattle and hogs made a more economic gain in the air than when housed.

Sheep in the barn did better in every respect than in the open air, although confined in very small pens.

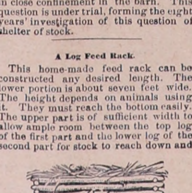
Cattle in box stalls did better than those tied up.

The greater the freedom of motion up to the freedom of a yard some 10 rods square, the more food eaten and the less required for a pound of gain for cattle.

The trial indicates that free access to shelter and yards is more economical than compulsory life in the storms or in close confinement in the barn. This question is under trial, forming the eight years' investigation of this question of shelter of stock.

A Log Feed Rack.

This home-made feed rack can be constructed any desired length. The lower portion is about seven feet wide. The height depends on animals using it. They must reach the bottom easily. The upper part is of sufficient width to allow ample room between the top log of the first part and the lower log of the second part for stock to reach down and get the feed. This method is much more desirable than throwing hay and other roughness upon the ground. Nothing is wasted by being pulled out and trampled under foot. Put a large load of hay into this rack. The stock eat it from the bottom as needed and the upper portion settles down as the feed is taken from beneath.



LOG FEED RACK.

To Put Flesh on Cows.

Prof. Sheldon in an address to dairymen said that "it is no doubt true that a deep milking cow, will as a rule, not carry much superfluous flesh during the lacteal period, and, indeed, there is no special demand that she should do so. All the same, however, I have had cows, capital milkers, that always were in good condition as to flesh; and indeed, I had others that almost milked themselves down into bags of bones. There are all sorts of cows—good, bad and indifferent; and in this there is hope for the power of selection is included within the limits of the species. I am not aware that we badly want to breed cows that will always be fat—fit, as it were, for the butcher—during the lacteal period. This is not what we are aiming at in reference to practical dairy cows, though it is done commonly enough even now and still more commonly in years gone by, in respect to blue-blooded Shorthorns; greatly to their disparagement was this done, for it involved in many cases the deliberate and intentional abandonment of all desire to cultivate a deep-milking capacity in these cattle and so they became discounted in the eyes of practical dairy farmers. No; what we are aiming at is to develop the capacity to give quantity and quality of milk, and to lay on flesh quickly with good food when not in milk. It is the aptitude to milk well when in milk, and to fatten well when barren, that we ought to cultivate and develop in all or almost all our breeds of dairy cows, and not necessarily to do these well, both of them, at the same time. This line of breeding involves, however, as a prominent feature, the ability of cows not only to get into good condition whilst dry for calving, but also to keep up their condition fairly well during the milking season. Our cattle, in order to yield plenary profit to practical dairy farmers should be master of two trades, so to speak; should, in fact, have two strings to their bow,—viz., milking and beef-making. We want them to yield a maximum quantity of rich milk for three or four seasons—it is seldom worth while to milk a cow beyond her sixth year—and then to round themselves off into good carcasses of beef in as short a time as may suit their own and our convenience."

A Fakir's Ingenuity.

Enormous business has been done lately at French fairs by a man who professed to sell a rat powder that was perfectly harmless and that struck rats dead on the spot. In order to convince the skeptical the man, first of all, powdered a slice of bread with the stuff, and ate a piece of it himself. Then he put the remainder under a glass case, in which a rat was kept in captivity. The rat went to eat the bread and instantly fell dead. At five pence a box the powder went off like hot rolls, and the lucky proprietor of the specific was in a fair way to make a fortune. But the police, who in France are very active in protecting the people from fraud, looked into the matter and found that the powder was nothing but ordinary sugar. They also discovered that the case was connected with a powerful electric battery, and the moment the rat touched the bread the current was turned on, and it was thus his death was brought about. The man was arrested at the fair of Albi, and he has been sentenced to 15 days' imprisonment.

PEOPLE MAKE MONEY BY USING DIAMOND DYES.

In every section of Canada, Diamond Dyes are blessings and enable people to save money and make money. One user of Diamond Dyes says:—

"I have been using your dyes for seven years. I can only say they are the best on the market. I have made as high as $24 a week in dyeing, and could not give satisfaction unless I used Dymond Dyes. I would not be without them, for when I am without Diamond Dyes I consider I am without money."

Another user says:—"My wife has thoroughly tested the Diamond Dyes, and they are better than any we have ever used. She used them according to directions, and we have washed the goods in strong soapsuds, exposed them to the piercing winds of our cold winter, and afterward to bright sunlight, and they retain their beautiful fresh color."

INDISPENSABLE.—There are some simple remedies indispensable in every family. Among these, the experience of years assures us, should be recorded Perry Davis' PAIN-KILLER. Level-headed lawyers, who generally know on which side to butter their bread; shrewd business men, who know that a dollar saved is as good as a dollar made; pushing clerks, who work hard for every dollar they get and should try to spend it wisely; gentlemen, who have no visible means of support (not tramps), mechanics and farmers all seem to have waked up to the fact that ready-made boots fit better, are cheaper and wear just as well as when ordered, and that Haines & Lockett's new spring stock is simply immense and they will buy there for 1895.

FIRE IN MADOC.

Lynde & Co's. Tannery Damaged to the Extent of About $2,000.

MADOC, March 9th.—Fire caused from hot box, broke out in F. G. Lynde & Co's. tannery last night about 7 o'clock. The main body of the building was totally destroyed, together with about $400 worth of of stock. Insured for $1,000 in the London Mutual, which will only cover about half the loss.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

MADOC, March 9th.—Last evening the fire alarm was given. Mr. F. G. Lynde's tannery was the scene of the fire. As the tannery was in an out of the way place it took some time to get the engine there. The main building was in flames before the water commenced to play, but was soon under control. The wing in which were the vats and the engine and boiler room were saved. The loss will be a heavy one, as there was a large stock of leather in the different stages of manufacture in the building at the time of the fire. The fire started in the curing room.

We were unable to learn the amount of the insurance, but were given to understand the loss over and above the insurance will be a heavy one for Mr. Lynde. The firemen worked with a will, and it is greatly to their credit that they got the flames under control in so short a time. The ladies at every fire render great assistance in helping to remove goods, in carrying water and even helping on the brakes.

Another $10,000 Gone.

NEWBURGH, March 8th.—About eleven o'clock last night the machine shop belonging to E. W. Stickney's agricultural works, together with contents, including 100 reapers and mowers and other valuable machinery under construction, were totally destroyed by fire. The loss will reach ten thousand dollars. No insurance. Robert Paul's planing mill and sash, door and blind factory, adjoining, narrowly escaped.

Barn Burned.

TRENTON, March 9th.—Fire started last evening in a barn owned by Mr. Pelkier and rapidly spread to a large wood pile. Had it not been for the prompt work of the fire company and their splendid stream there would have been a large fire loss. Building fully insured.

A Big Crowd Heard Him.

The announcement that Rev. W. W. Weeks, of Moncton, N.B., would preach at the prayer meeting in the Baptist church last night drew such an immense crowd of people that it was found necessary to adjourn from the basement to the body of the church. Even then the seating capacity was insufficient with chairs in the aisles. The reverend gentleman was in splendid voice and preached one of his characteristic plain gospel sermons, which was a source of inspiration to more than one heart. Mr. Weeks has lost none of his old love for Brockville, neither have the Brockville people ceased to look upon him with that high esteem in which he was always held.—Brockville Times.

Rev. Mr. Weeks will address meetings every night in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, commencing Monday evening next at 8 o'clock.

Committee Work.

The Special Sewerage Committee was to have met the Executive last evening for the consideration of Ald. Clarke's sewerage scheme, but owing to the large amount of business already on hand to be transacted on Monday night, they decided to adjourn for a week.

The Executive Committee passed the accounts recommended by the other committees. A deputation from the West Hastings Agricultural Society waited upon the committee and asked for a grant. The committee promised the matter their careful consideration. A deputation from the Board of Education was also heard in reference to that body presenting the Premier with an address on the occasion of his visit to the city on Tuesday next. Their request was acceded to.

SPORTING TALK.

The Picton hockey team will play the Quintes on the skating rink at 8 o'clock this evening.

The Trenton hockey team came down yesterday afternoon to play the Bellevilles, but referee T. W. McRae decided that the ice was not in condition for play. The Trenton team went to the rink after tea, but could not get in. They claim the game by default, as they claim they were notified yesterday if they did not show up last evening the Bellevilles would claim the cup. There is now a muddle in the affair, and we hope to see it straightened out.

How Business Men Regard O. B. C.

The high estimation in which the training given at the Ontario Business College is held by business men has an excellent illustration in the following abstract from a letter received by Messrs. Robinson & Johnson this week:—"I am book-keeper here (Muskoka) for the branch office of a lumber firm and draw a salary of $550 a year. The firm has offered me the position of head book-keeper with a salary of $900 if I take a diploma at the Ontario Business College, and I shall be down with two other young men shortly."

Died in Thurlow.

Edward Braddon, a farmer of the 6th concession of Thurlow, a short distance east of Thrasher's Corners, died at 3 o'clock this morning, after a short illness, from pneumonia. Deceased was about thirty-five years of age and married. He was a well-to-do farmer and made a specialty of hog raising. He was the picture of health a few days ago and his many friends could hardly believe him dead when they heard the sad news this morning.

Died From His Injuries.

Anson Dafoe, who was so severely injured by being caught on the shaft of a portable saw mill at Stirling on Thursday, died last night. Morden Bird, who was an eye witness of the accident, said it was one of the most revolting sights he ever saw and had the victim been caught a few inches lower in the body he would have been killed instantly. Deceased was a brother of J. W. Dafoe, of Octavia st. school.

It alone is the best, Dr. Price's Baking Powder, so take no substitute for it.

Successful Operations.

The Wellman's Corners winter dairy has had a very successful season. Last Monday morning they took in over 6,000 lbs. of milk and the total amount received this week will exceed 30,000 lbs. The dairy will turn out this season about ten tons of butter, which is shipped weekly to England. The Government guarantee the patrons 20c per lb., which will make their operations quite profitable.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

THE SPRING SITTINGS WITH JURY BEFORE CHANCELLOR BOYD.

Trenton's Sensational Case Settled—J. D. Ronald Acquitted of Attempting to Bribe Tweed Councillors—Mr. Gillen Falls in his Case.

FRIDAY, March 8.

TRENTON'S CELEBRATED CASE SETTLED.

This now celebrated case was yesterday settled. The plff. having secured possession of his wife, which was the real object of the action, and not desiring to drag through the court the sensational matters involved in the trial in which his wife and father-in-law were involved, agreed to withdraw the action, providing Dr. Stevenson would give his written undertaking not to again interfere with the plff. and his wife, which the doctor gave, and all the other cases between the parties being withdrawn, the case was dropped. The Chancellor, in disposing of the case, said he hoped those instrumental in causing this litigation had learned a lesson that would prevent them in the future from interfering between husband and wife. E. Guss Porter for plff. Clute & Williams for deft.

AN ALLEGED BRIBER ACQUITTED.

QUEEN VS. RONALD.—John D. Ronald, manufacturer of steam fire engines, at Brussels, Ontario, was arraigned, charged with offering a bribe to Robert F. Houston, Reeve of the village of Tweed, to induce him to vote in the Council for the purchase of a Ronald fire engine. He was also charged with offering a similar bribe to Frank Campbell, another member of the Council of the village.

Much interest was manifested during the trial, the court room being crowded, and a large number were denied admittance to the room.

Mr. W. Kerr, Q.C., conducted the prosecution and Messrs. P. J. M. Anderson, E. G. Porter and C. Craig were present in the interest of parties concerned. Clute & Williams defended the accused.

Robert Finley Houston was the first witness. He said he resided in the village of Tweed; his business was that of a sash and blind maker; he was Reeve of the village; the residents of the village desired to purchase a fire engine after a fire in that place in August last; the deft. came to the village in reference to the purchase of an engine; this was in August 1894; the Council was called together and the deft. was present and gave the price of his engines; deft. went away and returned on the 15th of Aug., calling upon witness at his factory; they had quite a lengthy conversation in reference to his engines and the work which they could perform; deft. then said to witness, "You are the Reeve of the village, if you will use your influence towards getting my engine sold to the village of Tweed I will give you $100;" witness' son was present at the time the offer was made; this ended the conversation the factory. In October the deft. came to the village again, and witness and he had a conversation; during interval the Council had purchased a Watrous engine; this conversation took place in the Council chamber; witness asked deft. his business, and he said he would burst the contract which the Council had made; he also stated that he had done this at other places; Mr. Ronald called a public meeting of the ratepayers, and asked them to impress upon the Council the advisability of reconsidering their determination of purchasing a Watrous engine; at the meeting the deft. moved a resolution hearing upon the matter, but he could get no seconder; the contract with the Watrous Co. was closed about four weeks later.

John Houston, who was sworn, said he was a son of Robert F. Houston; saw the deft. in his father's office on Aug. 15th last; he was there an hour or two; heard the deft. say he would give $100; this was all the conversation witness heard.

Frank Campbell testified that he was a Councillor of the village of Tweed last year and also this year. Saw the deft. in Tweed on several occasions; had a conversation with deft. on August 15th; the deft. offered him $100 if he would assist him (the deft.) in placing his fire engine in the village; he subsequently saw Mr. Ronald at Toronto and asked him if the offer which he had made to witness and Mr. Houston in Tweed would hold good; deft. said yes.

This ended the case for the crown.

Robt. Weddell testified that he was acquainted with Mr. Ronald and considered his character first-class.

Mr. Carleton said that he resided in Tweed until recently; heard Mr. Campbell say that he was sorry that Mr. Ronald was arrested; also heard him say that Mr. Ronald would not have been proceeded against had he left the village and not held a public meeting.

Albert Teal swore he was present at the meeting at Tweed on October 4th; heard Mr. Houston say he had been offered boodle by Mr. Ronald; deft. was arrested the same night of the meeting.

Thos. McCann said he was a magistrate; heard Mr. Campbell remark something about boodle, but did not understand what he meant.

John D. Donald, sworn, said he was the deft. in the case; he was an engine builder; he remembered going to Tweed in June last and on August 14th; saw Mr. Houston in his factory, which was in operation at the time; had a conversation with him in reference to the purchase of a fire engine; made no offer to Mr. Houston to bribe him; he emphatically denied offering $100 to Mr. Houston; he also denied offering any money to Mr. Campbell to assist in procuring one of his engines; he said it was a conspiracy to injure him; the conversation in Toronto with Campbell was in reference to a reduction in the price of the engine, and not for money in the sense Mr. Campbell stated.

In cross examination by Mr. Kerr, Q.C., he denied making any offer to Mr. Houston or Mr. Campbell or any person.

Wm. Garrett swore that he was present in Houston's factory when Ronald was there; they were talking about the purchase of a fire engine; did not hear Ronald offer any money consideration to Houston.

This concluded the case and Mr. Clute, Q.C., addressed the jury on behalf of the accused, Mr. Wm. Kerr, Q.C., on behalf of the crown and His Lordship summed up. The jury retired at 8:40 and at 9:15 returned into court with a verdict of NOT GUILTY. His Lordship, in discharging the accused, said he was in accord with the verdict, as the evidence was of a conflicting nature. He was now a free man again.

THE HOTEL QUINTE CASE.

GILLEN VS. CORBY ET AL.—Action brought by Mr. F. Gillen, architect of Kingston, to recover $800 which he claims is due him for work done in connection with the erection of the Hotel Quinte. The defendants are the Hotel Quinte Co., of which Mr. Corby, M.P. is the president.

Mr. Gillen was sworn and said he was an architect, had practiced his profession about 12 years; was engaged by the defendants in December, 1892 to furnish plan for the new hotel, known as the Hotel Quinte. The first meeting with the directors was held in Mr. Corby's office. He showed a rough plan of a building, which he stated would cost about $25,000. They spoke about additions which would be needed. He was to receive 5 per cent. of the cost of the building. He went on and prepared more elaborate plans. The building was commenced in April, 1893, and was completed in April, 1894. The whole of his time was taken up during the erection of the building, as they wished him to act as clerk of the works. He had been paid $1,000 for all the work which he did. He claimed $812 was still due him.

Cross Examined by Mr. W. B. Northrup.—Geo. Wilson, contractor, built the hotel and witness was present during its erection. He sued the promoters individually and not as a company. He never made a demand on any one of the directors personally for money. The contract price was $28,700. On account of an addition to the south-east wing, and other extra work, the building cost over $30,000. At the meeting of the directors in Mr. Corby's office in December, 1893, he had the impression that he was to receive 5 per cent. of the cost of the building.

Mr. Newland testified that he was an architect in Kingston, having had large experience in buildings. The usual commission of an architect in erecting such buildings is 5 per cent. This is the lowest rate. The usual charge of a clerk of the works is $3 per day. He would consider the charge in this case very moderate. In his opinion there was no necessity of placing a steel girder over the main entrance.

In cross examination he admitted that if green wood was used for a girder over the entrance it would not be suitable. He had also examined the place referred to and found a slight crack in the brick work.

At this stage of the proceedings the court was adjourned until 9 o'clock Saturday morning.

A great pressure of news has crowded out to-day's court report, which will appear on Monday. Court closed at 1:30 p.m. Judgment was given for deft. in Corby vs Gillen. Mrs. McCormick, of Murray, got a verdict of $75 against J. W. Garbutt, of the same township, for slander. Hester Lindsay, of Trenton, recovered $75 damages against Milford Bellyou, of Murray, for having had both of her arms broken through a runaway caused by the carelessness of a boy in Bellyou's employ.

GRAND JURY'S PRESENTMENT.

They Recommended the Establishment of an Industrial Home—D. & D. Institute, Hospital and Gaol Visited.

To the Honorable Mr. Justice Boyd, Chancellor of the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division.

As members of the Grand Jury of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, we beg to present the following report:

1. We have visited the County Gaol and found every department clean, orderly and comfortable with a small number of inmates, but among this number we find several who have been sent there as to a house of refuge, among them one who is very old, infirm and blind, and we were strongly impressed with the necessity of carrying out the view Your Lordship presented in your opening address to our Grand Jury, that some provision more consistent with the christian civilization of the nineteenth century should be made for all such persons, and we would suggest to the city and county authorities the advisibility of providing an Industrial Home, where those who are able to work might be employed, not only for their own support, but to aid in the support of the infirm, who are not able to work.

2. We visited the Deaf and Dumb Institute and beg to express our high appreciation of the careful and efficient management of that most excellent institution under its present Principal, Mr. Mathison. We visited the classes from the lowest to the highest (as the classes are all carefully graded) each affording the most practical evidence of the thoroughness of their training. The rapid and easy manner in which many of the younger pupils constructed and wrote sentences on the blackboard was not only a matter of pleasure but of great surprise, and we were especially pleased with the industrial department of the institution, consisting of boot and shoe department, printing, and laundry, and general sewing, thus fitting its pupils to fill the various pursuits of life.

3. We have pleasure in stating that we also visited the Hospital and Home for the Friendless and found every department comfortable, orderly and clean. We were particularly pleased with the surgical department, which, through the generosity of Mr. Daniel Stoddart, deceased, has been thoroughly equipped with all the latest improved appliances, and the hospital can now compare with the best in the province.

This very excellent institution is worthy of the heartiest sympathy and support of the entire community.

We thank Your Lordship for the able and instructive address you presented to us, pointing out to us our duties, and sincerely hope that you may long be spared to fill the important position you now occupy.

On behalf of the Grand Jury,
(Signed) W. C. FARLEY,
Foreman.

It is of uniform goodness and perfect strength from the first spoonful to the last—a can of Dr. Price's Baking Powder.

George Tudhope's Death.

The many friends of George Tudhope were shocked to-day to hear that he had died at the hospital at 1:30 this morning. He had been unwell for some days, and Dr. Walker was called yesterday to see him at the Queen's Hotel. He found him suffering from a severe attack of pneumonia and at once ordered his removal to the hospital. The disease had a fatal grip on the man and despite every effort on the part of the physicians he died as above stated.

Deceased, who was forty-six years of age, was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and received a liberal education. He came to Canada about twelve years ago and was for some time located in Chatham, where he was employed by the Chatham Waggon Company. He came to this city about seven years ago and has for about four years done collecting for business and professional men. He also acted as hop salesman for several growers in this district. George Tudhope always took a deep interest field sports and was Secretary of the cricket club last season.

Deceased was geniality personified and a friend was never turned away from him in need. He was a member of Camp Rob Roy Sons of Scotland and St. Andrew's Society. In the former society he carried a policy for $1,000 on his life, and this he bequeathed to a young lady in this city. He has a sister living at Leshmagow, Lanarkshire, Scotland, and to her he left his personal property and bank account.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon from the hospital under the auspices of the Sons of Scotland and St. Andrew's Society. Service at 2:30 and funeral leaves for cemetery at 3 p.m.

It is just as good as it looks, Dr. Price's Baking Powder, the most perfect made.

"The Hall."

When you speak of "The Hall" in Montreal, there is not a man, woman or child who does not know that you mean the famous old hotel, the St. Lawrence Hall, whose doors have swung open to the incoming guest for over half a century. Although larger and more luxurious hotels have been the fruit of time, the old Hall retains all its attractiveness to the traveler; for not least of its attractiveness is centered in the proprietor, now the oldest hotel man in Canada, who, at the age of 77, is as punctual in his attention to his guests as he was when, in the full flush of early manhood, he first engaged in the business. And certainly no man in Canada can be found who has so often welcomed the coming guest and wished him God speed at his departure.

Mr. Hogan, the proprietor, was born at La Prairie, and went to Montreal in 1829 and opened the present St. Lawrence Hall in 1844, when property on that street was worth from 75c to $1 per foot and it is now worth from $25 to $35 per foot. Nothing delights him better than to recount incidents of early days in Montreal, when the railroads of Canada consisted of a line to Lachine, 9 miles, and one from La Prairie to St. Johns, 24 miles, and when he used to shoot woodcock where the Grand Trunk station now stands. In 1842 the morgue occupied the ground now covered by the Bank of Montreal, and where the Barrons block now stands was the Tattersall's of those early days. The Canadian Pacific Railway's offices occupy the ground which was then covered by a Methodist church, and Beaver Hall hill was then a commons.

Such reminiscences of the march of improvement in little over a half a century is inspiring, leading the imagination into the unknown future, and into speculations as to what the next half century will bring forth.

How to live well at a moderate cost is a perplexing problem to millions. Use of Dr. Price's Baking Powder helps to solve it.

To-morrow's Eclipse.

There will be a total eclipse of the moon to-morrow night. Owing to the proximity of the moon to our planet at present the portion of the shadow of Terra through which Luna must pass will be wide—nearly once and three-quarters the width of the moon's disc—the magnitude of the eclipse having been calculated as 1.627, counting the moon as one. By eastern standard time Luna will enter the penumbra, or foreshadow, at 7:57 p.m.; she will move into the shadow proper at 8:54 p.m.; the middle of the eclipse will occur at 10:39 p.m. This will be the totality, or darkest period; the moon will resemble a ball of dark brown. Gradually she will move out of the shadow until, at 12:25 a.m. of the 11th, she will leave the shadow, finally departing from the penumbra at 1:21 a.m. Preparations have been made by the Astronomical and Physical Society of Toronto to photograph the different phases of the eclipse, which it is expected will be an interesting one if the weather prove clear on Sunday night. This eclipse will be visible throughout North and South America; its beginning will be seen in Asia, Europe and Africa, and its ending in the Pacific ocean. Smoked glass or similar paraphernalia, which is requisite to observe successfully a solar eclipse, is not needful to watch fully the apparent passage of the dark body of our planet between Old Sol, the central engine of the vast solar system, and our satellite—Luna.

A SPLENDID CONCERT.

Miss Alida V. Jackson, of Kingston, the Star of the Evening.

Some time since Mrs. W. H. Gordon's class of young men, or more generally known as No. 8 of the Tabernacle Sabbath School, undertook the task of furnishing the pastor's vestry of that church, and there being an indebtedness which they wished to clear off they procured the services of Miss Jackson, of Kingston, to aid them in their effort, beside other local talent.

Having procured the Belleville Business College in which to hold their concert and a first-class programme, all they needed was a good audience and they were not disappointed for the auditorium was well filled. Although the season is getting advanced for concerts, the fact was fully demonstrated last evening that the people of Belleville are ever willing to be entertained.

Mr. W. H. Gordon occupied the chair. Misses Canfield and Ostrom opened the programme by an instrumental selection, Miss Jackson followed with a recitation entitled "That old sweet heart of mine;" Mr. Stafford, of Albert College, gave a vocal solo "The Skipper;" Miss Jackson recited "Naughty Zell," and had to respond to an encore; song by Miss Price with violin obligato by Miss Lazier; "Biddy's Trials among the Yankees" by Jackson was a very ludicrous selection; Mr. Burrows rendered a solo and was compelled to answer to an encore; "The Famine," as given by Miss Jackson, was very pathetic, during the recital of which there was a suspicious moisture about the eyes of many; Prof. Canfield and Mr. Jones rendered a vocal duet, Miss Jackson following with her closing piece "A literary night-mare," to which there was an encore.

Miss Jackson is an elocutionist of the first degree, her clear voice penetrating to all parts of the building, whilst her postures at times were imposing, holding her audience as if in a trance. She has found the secret of working on the feelings of her hearers; at times she has them almost weeping and then bringing them back to the mirth-provoking scene. She would be gladly welcomed to this city again.

The young men of this class have spent over $75 in decorating and furnishing their own room and after having done this they did not stop, but, as we have seen, they have taken as their motto "We must be up and doing" and they deserve great credit for their push and energy in the line of work which they have taken up.

Don't Put it Off.

The necessity of a spring medicine is universally admitted. This is the best time of year in which to purify the blood, to restore appetite, and to build up the entire system, as the body is now peculiarly susceptible to benefit from medicine. The great popularity attained by Hood's Sarsaparilla, owing to its real merit and its remarkable success, has established it as the very best medicine to take in the spring. It cures scrofula, salt rheum, and all humors, biliousness, dyspepsia, headache, kidney and liver complaints, catarrh, and all affections caused or promoted by low state of the system or impure blood. Don't put it off, but take Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will do you good.

Snow By-Law Case.

Robinson appeared in police court this morning on a charge of neglecting to clean the snow from his walk on Commercial St. According to evidence there is two feet of snow on the walk and but a single path through it. He says he is being prosecuted through spite, but Officer Hayes swore that he had twice notified him to remove the snow. Robinson was given till Wednesday to clear the walk or he will be fined.

HEALTH AND HAPPINESS.

HOW IT WAS FOUND BY A LANARK COUNTY LADY.

She Had Suffered for Years From Weakness and Pains in the Back—Sciatica Complicated the Trouble and Added to Her Misery—Her Health Almost Miraculously Restored.

From the Brockville Recorder.

On a prosperous farm in the township of Montague, Lanark County, live Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wood, esteemed by all who know them. Mrs. Wood was born in the village of Merrickville, and spent her whole life there until her marriage, and her many friends are congratulating her on her recovery to health and strength after years of pain and suffering. When the correspondent of the Recorder called at the Wood homestead, Mrs. Wood, althought now not looking the least like an invalid, said that since girlhood and until recently she was troubled with a weak back, which gave her great pain at times. As she grew older the weakness and pain increased, and for nearly twenty years she was never free from it. About a year ago her misery was increased by an attack of sciatica, and this with her back trouble forced her to take to bed, where she remained a helpless invalid for over four months. Different doctors attended her and she tried numerous remedies said to be a cure for her trouble, but despite all she continued to grow worse. She was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, but she had dosed herself with so many medicines that her faith in the healing virtues of anything was about gone. At last a friend urged her so strongly that she consented to give the Pink Pills a trial. Before the first box was all used she felt a slight improvement, which determined her to continue this treatment. From that out she steadily improved, and was soon able to be up and about the house. A further use of the Pink Pills drove away every vestige of the pains which had so long afflicted her, and she found herself again enjoying the blessings of perfect health. Eight months have passed since she ceased using the Pink Pills, and in that time she has been entirely free from pain or weakness, and says she is confident no other medicine could have performed the wonder Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for her. She says "I feel happy not only because I am now free from pain or ache, but because if my trouble should return at an time I know to what remedy to look for a release."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are especially valuable to women. They build up the blood, restore the nerves and eradicate those troubles which make the lives of so many women, old and young, a burden. Dizziness, palpitation of the heart, nervous headache and nervous prostration speedily yield to this wonderful medicine. They are sold only in boxes, the trade mark and wrapper printed in red ink, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medecine Company, Brockville, Ont.

A PALE FACE comes from poor blood. Your blood needs to be enriched and vitalized. For this there's nothing in the world so thoroughly effective as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Children who are weak, thin, pale, and puny are made strong, plump, rosy, and robust by the "Discovery." It's especially adapted to them, too, from its pleasant taste. It's an appetizing, restorative tonic which builds up needed flesh and strength. In every blood taint or disorder, if it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir — I will say that I used the "Medical Discovery" for my little girl, and she is entirely well. I cannot praise your medicines too highly. You may rest assured that you will always have my support.

AN ANCIENT ATHLETE.

BENAIAH, THE MAN WITH IRON IN HIS BLOOD.

"He Went Down and Slew a Lion in a Pit on a Snowy Day"—All Great Men Have Their Trials—Everyone Engaged in a Big Fight of Some Kind.

NEW YORK, March 3—Continued winterstorms seems to have no effect in diminishing the great audiences that gather every Sunday in and around the Academy of Music. To-day the crowds were as large as ever and the spacious Academy was packed from pit to dome long before the services began. Dr. Talmage took for his subject, "A Snowy Day," the text selected being I Chronicles 11: 22. "He went down and slew a lion in a pit in a snowy day.

Have you ever heard of him? His name was Benaiah. He was a man of stout muscle and of great avoirdupois. His father was a hero, and he inherited prowess. He was athletic and there was iron in his blood and the strongest bone in his body was backbone. He is known for other wonders beside that of the text, An Egyptian five cubits in stature, or about seven feet nine inches high, was moving around in braggadocia and flourishing a great spear, careless as to whom he killed and Benaiah of my text, with nothing but a walking stick came upon him, snatched the spear from the Egyptian and with one thrust of the sharp edge, put an end to the blatant bully, which makes us think of the story in our Greek lesson too hard for us if the smarter boy on the same bench had not helped us out with it, in which Horatius, the Macedonian, and Dioxippus, the Athenian, fought in the presence of Alexander; the Macedonian armed with shield and sword and javelin, and the Athenian with nothing but a club. The Macedonian hurled the javelin, but the Athenian successfully dodged it, and the Macedonian lifted the spear, but the Athenian with the club broke it, and the Macedonian drew the sword, but the Athenian tripped him up before he could strike with it, and then the Athenian with his club would have beaten the life out of the Macedonian, fallen among his useless weapons, if Alexander had not commanded, "Stop! Stop!" But Benaiah of the text is about to do something that will eclipse even that. Their is trouble in all the neighborhood. Lambs are carried off in the night, and children venturing only a little way from their father's house are found mangled and dead. The fact is, the land was infested with lions, and few people dared meet one of these grizzly beasts, much less corner or attack it. As a good Providence would have it, one morning a footstep of a lion was tracked in the snow. It had been out on its devouring errand through the darkness, but at last it is found by the impression of the four paws on the white surface of the ground, which way the wild beast came, and which way it had gone. Perilous undertaking; but Benaiah, the hero of the text, arms himself with such weapons as those early days afforded, gunpowder having been invented in a far subsequent century by the German monk, Bertholdus Schwartz. Therefore, without gun or any kind of firearms, Benaiah of the text no doubt depended on the sharp steel edge for his own defence and the slaughter of the lion as he followed the track through the snow. It may have been a javelin, it may have been only a knife; but what Benaiah lacks in weapon he will make up in strength of arm and skill of stroke. But where is the lion? We must not get off his track in the snow. The land has many cisterns, or pits, for catching rain, the rainfall being very scarce at certain seasons, and hence these cisterns, or reservoirs, are digged here, and there, and yonder. Lions have an instinct which seems to tell them when they are pursued, and this dreaded monster of which I speak retreats into one of these cisterns which happened to be free of water, and is there panting from the long run, and licking its jaws after a repast of human flesh, and after quaffing the red vintage of human blood.

Benaiah is all alert, and comes cautiously on toward the hiding place of this terror of the fields. Coming to the verge of the pit, he looks down at the lion, and the lion looks up at him. What a moment it was when their eyes clashed! But while a modern Du Chaillu, Gordon Cumming or Sir Samuel Baker or David Livingston would have just brought the gun to the shoulder, and held the eye against the barrel, and blazed away into the depths and finished the beast, Benaiah, with only the old-time weapon, can do nothing until he gets on a level with the beast, and so he jumps into the pit, and the lion, with shining teeth of rage and claws lifted to tear to shreds the last vestige of human life, springs for the man, while Beniah springs for the beast. But the quick stroke of the steel edge flashed again, and again, and again, until the snow was no longer white, and the right foot of triumphant Benaiah is half covered with the tawny mane of the slain horror of Palestine.

Now you see how emphatic, and tragic, and tremendous are the words of my text: "He went down and slew a lion in a pit in a snowy day." Why put that in the Bible? Why put it twice in the Bible, once in the book of Samuel, and here in the book of Chronicles? Oh, the practical lessons are so many for you and for me. What a cheer in this subject for all those of you who are in conjunction of hostile circumstances. Three things were against Benaiah of my text in the moment of combat, the snow that impeded his movements, the pit that environed him in a small space, and the lion, with open jaws and uplifted paw. And yet I hear the shout of Benaiah's victory. Oh, men and women of three troubles. You say, "I could stand one, and I think I could stand two; but three are at least one too many."

There is a man in business perplexity and who has sickness in his family, and old age is coming on. Three troubles—a lion, a pit and a snowy day. There is a good woman with failing health, and a dissipated husband, and a wayward boy—three troubles! There is a yonng man, salary cut down, bad cough, frowning future—three troubles! There is a maiden with difficult school lessons she cannot get, a face that is not as attractive as some of her schoolmates, a prospect that through hard times she must quit school before she graduates—three troubles! There is an author, his manuscript rejected his power of origination in decadence, a numbness in forefinger and thumb, which threatens paralysis—three troubles! There is a reporter of fine taste sent to report a pugilism instead of an oratorio, the copy he hands is rejected because the paper is full, a mother to support on small income—three troubles! I could march right off these seats, and across this platform, if they would come at my call, five hundred people with three troubles. This is the opportunity to play the hero or the heroine, not on a small stage with a few hundred people to clap their approval, but with all the galleries of heaven filled with sympathetic and applauding spectators, for we are "surrounded by a great cloud of witnesses." My brother, my sister, my father, my mother, what a chance you have! While you are in the struggle, if you only have the grace of Christ to listen, a voice parts the heavens, saying, "My grace is sufficient for thee;" "Whom the Lord loveth, He chasteneth;" "You shall be more than conquerors." And that reminds me of a letter on my table written by some one whom I suppose to be at this moment present, saying: "My dear, dear Doctor: You will please pardon the writer for asking that at some time when you feel like it, you kindly preach from the 30th Psalm, 5th verse, 'Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning!' and much oblige a downtown business man." So to all downtown business men, and to all uptown business men, I say, if you have on hand goods that you cannot sell, and debtors who will not, or cannot, pay, and you are also suffering from uncertainty as to what the imbecile American Congress will do about the tariff, you have three troubles, and enough to bring you with in the range of the consolation of my text, where you find the triumph of Benaiah over a lion, and a pit, and a snowy day. If you have only one trouble, I cannot spend my time with you to-day. You must have at least three, and then remember how many have triumphed over such a train of misfortune. Paul had three troubles; Sanhedrin denouncing him—that was one great trouble; physical infirmity, which he called "a thorn in the flesh," and although we know not what the thorn was, we do know from the figure he used that it must have been something that stuck him—that was the second trouble; approaching martyrdom—that made the three troubles. Yet hear what he says: "If I had only one misfortune, I could stand that; but three are two too many?" No; I misinterpret. He says: "Sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; poor, yet making many rich; having nothing, yet possessing all things." "Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

David had three troubles; a bad boy, a temptation to dissoluteness, and dethronement. What does he say? "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of trouble. Therefore, will not we fear, though the earth be removed and though the mountains be cast into the midst of the sea."

John Wesley had three troubles—Defamation by mobs, domestic infelicity, fatigue from more sermons preached and more miles traveled than almost any man of his time. What does he say? "The best of all is, God is with us?" And when his poet brother, Charles Wesley, said to him, "Brother John, if the Lord were to give me wings, I'd fly." John's reply was, "Brother Charles, if the Lord told me to fly, I'd do it, and leave Him to find the wings."

George Whitefield had three troubles: Rejection from the pulpits of England because he was too dramatic—that was one trouble; strabismus, or the crossing of his eyes, that subjected him to the caricature of all the small wits of the day; vermin and dead animals thrown at him while he preached on the commons—that made three troubles. Nevertheless, his sermons were so buoyant that a little child dying soon after hearing him preach said in the intervals of pain, "Let me go to Mr. Whitefield's God." Oh, I am so glad that Benaiah of my text was not the only one who triumphed over a lion in a pit on a snowy day.

Notice in my text a victory over bad weather. It was a snowy day, when one's vitality is at a low ebb, and the spirits are natually depressed, and one does not feel like undertaking a great enterprise, when Benaiah rubs his hands together to warm them by extra friction, or threshes his arms around him to revive circulation of the blood, and then goes at the lion, which was all the more fierce and ravenous because of the sharp weather. Inspiration here admits atmospheric hindrance. The snowy day at Valley Forge well nigh put an end to the struggle for American independence. The snowy day demolished Napoleon's army on the way from Moscow. The inclemency of January and February weather has some years bankrupted thousands of merchants. Long succession of stormy Sabbaths has crippled innumerable churches. Lighthouses veiled by the snow on many a coast have failed to warn off from the rocks the doomed frigate. Tens of thousands of Christians of nervous temperament by the depression of a snowy day almost despair of reaching heaven. Yet, in that style of weather Benaiah of the text achieved his most celebrated victory; and let us by the grace of God become victor over influences atmospheric. If we are happy only when the wind blows from the clear northwest, and the thermometer is above freezing point and the sky is an inverted blue cup of sunshine poured all over us, it is religion ninety-five per cent. off. Thank God there are Christians, who, though their whole life through sickness has been a snowy day, have killed every lion of despondency that dared to put its cruel paw against their suffering pillow. It was a snowy day when the pilgrim fathers set foot, not on a bank of flowers, but on the cold New England rock, and from a ship that might have been more appropriately called after a December hurricane than after a "Mayflower," they took possession of this continent. And amid more chilly worldly circumstances many a good man or a good woman has taken possession of a whole continent of spiritual satisfaction, valleys of peace, and rivers of gladness, and mountains of joy. Christ landed in our world not in the month of May, but in the stormy month of December, to show us that we might have Christ in winter weather, and on a snowy day.

Notice everything down in the pit that snowy day depended upon Benaiah's weapon. There was as much strength in one muscle of that lion as in all the muscles of both arms of Benaiah. It is the strongest of beasts, and has been known to carry off an ox. Its tongue is so rough that it acts as a rasp tearing off the flesh it licks. The two great canines at each side of the mouth make escape impossible for anything it has once seized. Yet Benaiah puts his heel on the neck of this "king of beasts." Was it a dagger? Was it a javelin? Was it a knife? I cannot tell, but everything depended on it. But for that, Benaiah's body under one craunch of the monster would have been left limp and tumbled in the snow. And when you and I go into the fight with temptation, if we have not the right kind of weapon, instead of our slaying the lion, the lion will slay us. The sword of the Spirit! Nothing in earth or hell can stand before that. Victory with that, or no victory at all. By that I mean prayer to God, confidence in his rescuing power, saving grace, Almighty deliverance. I do not care what you call it; I call it "Sword of the Spirit." And if the lions of all the jungles of perdition should at once spring upon your soul, by that weapon of heavenly metal you can thrust them back, and cut them down and stab them through, and leave them powerless at your feet. Your good resolution wielded against the powers which assault you in a toy pistol against an Armstrong gun; is a pen knife held out against the brandished sabres of a Heintzelman's cavalry charge. Go into the fight against sin on your own strength and the result will be the hot breath of the lion in your blanched face and his front paws, one on each lung. Alas! for the man not fully armed, down in the pit, on a snowy day and before him a lion.

All my hearers and readers have a big fight of some sort on hand, but the biggest and the wrathiest lion which you have to fight is what the Bible calls, "The roaring lion, who walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." Now, you have never seen a real lion unless you have seen him in India or Africa, just after capture. Long caging breaks his spirit, and the presence of human beings tames him. But you ought to see him spring against the iron bars in the Zoological Gardens of Calcutta, and hear him roar for the prey. It makes one's blood curdle, and you shrink back, although you know there is no peril. Plenty of lions in olden times. Six hundred of them were slaughtered on one occasion in the presence of Pompey in the Roman Amphitheatre. Lions came out and destroyed the camels which carried the baggage of Xerxes' army. In Bible times there were so many times there were so many lions that they are frequently alluded to in the Scripture. Joel, the prophet, describes the "cheek teeth" of a great lion; and Isaiah mentions among the attractions of heaven that "no lion shall be there;" and Amos speaks of a shepherd taking a lamb's ear out of the mouth of a lion; and Solomon describes the righteous as "bold as a lion;" and Daniel was a great lion tamer; and David and Jeremiah and St. John often speak of this creature.

But most am I impressed by what I have quoted from the Apostle Peter, when he calls the devil a lion. That means strength. That means bloodthirstiness. That means cruelty. That means destruction. Some of you have felt the strength of his paw, and the sharpness of his tooth, and the horror of his rage. Yes, he is a savage devil. He roared at everything good when Lord Claverhouse assailed the Covenanters, and at Bartholomew against the Huguenots, one August night when the bell tolled for butchery to begin, and the ghastly joke in the street was, "Blood letting is good in August," and 50,000 assassin knives were plunged into the victims, and this monster has had under his paw many of the grandest souls of all time, and fattened with the spoils of centuries, he comes for you. But I am glad to say to all of you who have got the worst in such a struggle, that there is a Lion on our side, if you want Him: Revelation, 5: 5, "The Lion of Judah's tribe." A Lamb to us, but a Lion to meet that other lion, and you can easily guess who will beat in that fight, and who will be beaten. When two opposing lions meet in a jungle in India, you cannot tell which will overcome and which will be overcome. They glare at each other for a moment, and then with full strength of muscle they dash against each other like two thunderbolts of colliding storm clouds and with jaws like the crush of avalanches, and with a resounding voice that makes the Himalayas tremble, and with a pull, and tear, and clutch, and trample, and shaking of the head from side to side, until it is too much for human endurance to witness, and though one lion may be left dead, the one which has conquered crawls away lacerated and gashed and lame and eyeless, to bleed to death in an adjoining jungle. But if you and I feel enough our weakness in this battle of temptation and ask for the Divine help, against that old lion of hell, described in St. Peter, will go that stronger Lion described in Revelation and it will be no uncertain grapple, but under one Omnipotent stroke the devouring monster that would slay our soul, shall go reeling back into a pit ten thousand times deeper than that in which Benaiah slew the lion one a snowy day,

NO FREE TRADE FOR HIM.

The following dispatch appeared in the daily press, dated Windsor, Feb. 25, 1895: "Victor Meron, who left Essex County with his wife and family and settled on a farm in Michigan, returned this morning and, according to his own statement, is a poorer but a much wiser man. He stated to the reporter that he lost while away fully $5,000 and advises anyone who thinks he can better his condition by leaving this country to take a trip across the river before selling out his interest here. "It is impossible for me to tell you what we have suffered," he said, while his household goods were being examined at the ferry dock; "but I can truthfully say that I have come to stay, and have concluded that Canada is good enough for me. At one time I had the annexation craze; at another time I believed in free trade, but after the bitter experience I have had I am of the opinion that this country is just about right as it is and it is a good thing to leave well enough alone. Those who voted for the Democratic party and free trade on the other side have learned that lesson and are anxiously waiting for the time when they can get a chance to vote the other way." Mr. Meron is not by any means the only farmer who is returning, as not a day goes by but one or more families can be seen coming across the river with their household goods. There was a time when the stream was going the other way, and the people here were crying for annexation or free trade, but that time has past, and those who are in a position to know say that not more than a dozen in this city would favor annexation or political union if a vote were to be taken on the question."

Mr. Laurier ought to write a kindly letter to this man telling him of all the beauties of English free trade and unrestricted reciprocity.

If the men of Canada should by any chance adopt Mr. Laurier's fads they will be sicker even as a result than this Victor Meron.

ALL ONE-SIDED.

Four hundred and thirty millions of people of those most advanced in Science, Education and the Industrial Arts of the world stand nationally ranged and committed to the principle of protection for their industries by tariff legislation. Thirty-eight millions of British are all that are left, who nationally support the free-trade tariff system.

These 430 millions include Canada, the United States, Mexico, South America, Germany, France, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Australia, (excepting New South Wales.) Switzerland, Austro-Hungary, Russia, Sweden and Norway, and other countries of minor importance.

Calf Love.

The oddest thing of all, as I look back upon this "unhappy love," is that it was not particularly unhappy. In the first place, it ministered most potently to my self-respect. Neither before nor since have I been half so interesting to myself. I reveled in tragic emotions; I apostrophized myself in sublimely gloomy language; I wrote despairing sonnets, full of youthful mawkishness, and I extracted conscientiously the last drop of bitterness which the situation was capable of yielding.

Truth to tell, I kept meeting my predestined maiden off and on, in one guise or another, for the next five or six years and at last, becoming skeptical, ceased to look for her. If I found her the matrimonial problem, so far as I am concerned, would have been solved once and forever. She and I, I fondly believed, would have struck a divine harmony which would have rung richly and clearly through our united lives. But how many of us are there who find this complementary chord to our being? And how many more are there who, prematrimonially, fancy that they have found it, and are waked up post matrimonially by a jarring and perpetual discord?—H. H Boyesen, in March Lippincott's.

CHAPTER IV.

An hour after sunset Meryon, mounted on a thoroughbred Arab and followed by two camels bearing his luggage, passed out of the gate of the city and set his course towards the west. A good many things had happened since we saw him last.

Ebal, on hearing the result of the interview, had declared that it meant mischief, and begged to be taken along to share his master's fate. Meryon had a half-formed scheme to profit by the confusion in the harem caused by the disgrace of Hatipha, to carry off the princess; but the only way to effect it was to have her join him that night beyond the boundary of the principality, which was not more than twenty miles distant. By the connivance of Senuah and the help of Ebal, this might be accomplished; and the latter eagerly agreed to attempt it. There had not been much time to arrange the details of the plot, but a trysting place was fixed upon—a tall, isolated rock near the caravan road, in the enemy's country. Here Meryon was to wait six hours; if Ebal and the princess did not appear within that time, he was to presume that the plan had miscarried, and keep on alone.

Meanwhile it transpired that Hatipha had escaped; when the prince's guards went to get him, he had vanished. It was not surprising; the war scare threw everything into a hubbub. Had the American not been rendered so conspicuous by his mission, he might easily have spirited away the princess himself. Late in the afternoon a report that the princess' mother had been taken violently ill added to the confusion. When Meryon went to the prince for his farewell interview, he was half minded to proclaim and put himself at the head of a revolution, depose his highness, and assume his throne. The odds were in favor of such a move being successful. Meryon finally resolved against it, from reluctance to be left with a kingdom on his hands so far from New York, and with the home policy still so strong against annexations. He afterwards was sorry he had been so fastidious.

He found the prince entirely alone—divested for the moment even of his Nubians. He produced a writing done in minute characters on very thin tissue, setting forth that the bearer was the trusted friend of the undersigned, and going on to describe the situation and demand help. When Meryon had finished reading this his highness drew from the folds of his robe a small gold box richly ornamented, and opened it. There lay a huge ruby, about two inches in length, and shaped like a much elongated egg. Meryon could not repress an exclamation of surprise; such a stone was never before seen; it could not be bought for a room full of rupees.

The prince twisted it between his fingers, and it came apart; it had been cut in two and hollowed out, and the parts made to screw together. The letter was now rolled up and inserted into this precious box; so there was a vast fortune and a message of life and death all done up in a parcel the size of a man's little finger. The prince handed it to Meryon.

"Do you expect me to take the responsibility of lugging a bomb-shell like that about the country?" demanded the latter recoiling.

"Death is powerless against him who carries it," replied the other. "It is a talisman, the greatest treasure of my dynasty; till now no unbeliever has ever seen it; judge then of the confidence I repose in you! When you arrive here with the army of my ally and give me back the hollow ruby, I will in return give you my other greatest treasure—my daughter, the Princess Terah—to be the bride of your heart and the queen of your harem."

THE BOY WAS NOT TO BE FOUND.

"This old pouter-pigeon," said Meryon to himself, "has been smart enough to see that by putting me upon honor he can get the best of me. He has me on toast. I must countermand the orders for the elopement, and play straight ball! These orientals are too much for us after all. Kismet! Hand it over, then," he added aloud, as if the precious object were a chocolate caramel.

"How will you carry it?" asked his highness.

"In my waistcoat pocket, of course," replied the American, nonchalantly stuffing it into that receptacle.

"Perhaps it is as well so," said his highness, thoughtfully. "If danger threatens you can readily swallow it," he added. "Remember, Meryon Pacha, it is worth the ransom of a kingdom."

"What? this thing!" exclaimed Meryon, slapping his pocket with a contemptuous smile. "Bless you, the boys where I come from use things like this for sinkers when they go fishing! Good-by!"

On returning to his apartments he sent for Ebal to tell him of his changed purposes. The boy was not to be found. The hour for starting came, and still no Ebal. After waiting for the last possible moment he was forced to set out with this important detail left at loose ends. He was ill at ease and rather cross He cared more for Ebal than for anyone in the country except Terah, and feared lest some mishap had overtaken him.

The party consisted of two camels with their drivers—one of whom was the guide—loaded with Meryon's luggage, and he himself on his horse, a thorough bred Arab.

The twenty miles to the border was traversed without incident. As they crossed the line the moon rose, in its third quarter, throwing their long black shadows before them on the sandy plain. Its light also dimly revealed the apex of the great rock appointed as the trysting place, and where it was still Meryon's intention to camp for the night.

Meanwhile, he anticipated being stopped by the officers of customs, for his passport, which was in readiness; but none appeared, and they kept on. An hour's further travel brought them to the great rock. The picturesqueness of the scene pleased Meryon's artist eye.

The rock was of a roughly conical shape, about a hundred feet high. It stood in the midst of a barren plain; but around it, their roots nourished by the waters of a spring which bubbled from the ground and filled a wide stone basin, was a grove of tall palms and great hemispherical mangos. All was silent and deserted in silent moonlight. In the base of the rock was a narrow opening leading to a small cave or cell, formerly, according to tradition, occupied by a saint and hermit of supernatural powers. Meryon looked into it, and saw a space about eight feet in diameter, hewn out of the solid rock. By heaping a few loose bowlders at the entrance it might be made a dungeon more secure than a chamber in a New York safe-deposit company's vaults.

The animals were watered and fed. The camels squatted down in their usual absurd fashion, with their legs curled under them and their noses on a parallel with the horizon. The drivers curled up beside them and promptly went to sleep. Meryon did not feel sleepy. He wandered about, thinking over what had happened, and speculating as to might be to come.

It was like a mixture of the Arabian Nights and a comic opera at the Casino—this predicament into which his artistic and susceptible temperament and devil-may-care habit had brought him. No doubt his mother-wit and audacity had that day saved his neck, but only to put it in yet graver jeopardy. Again, supposing all to turn out well, what sort of a figure would his oriental bride cut in the drawing-rooms of the Four Hundred, and at Newport, Lenox and Bar Harbor?

"She'll cut a swathe—that's what she'll do!" said he to himself, with a chuckle. But the chuckle died away. How about his being hanged for a spy?

Would Ebal succeed in bringing her tonight? The lover hoped ardently that he would; then the man of the world took a hand, and hoped he would not. The adventure was as near being desperate as it could be, already; with her to take care of, it would lap over about ninety per cent. on the wrong side. No; the princess was safest in her own harem for the present.

The moon mounted to the apex of the dome of heaven. In another hour or two dawn would begin. It became chilly. The stillness was broken only by the low gurgling of the spring, a sigh from the camels, or the sound of the horse cropping the herbage. The artist thought he would turn in for an hour's nap. Hark!

A noise like a faint pulsation, far off. It grew stronger, but he could not yet fix its direction. It came nearer. It was approaching from the city. A horse—a single horse; Ebal, alone; he had not brought Terah. "Confound him!" mutterad the lover. "A good thing, too!" retorted the same person.

The horseman, whoever he was, now came up rapidly, yet, in that strange light, it was difficult to distinguish him. At times he utterly vanished, like a phantom; then he reappeared, shadow-like; but each time nearer. All at once, as it were, up he rode in flesh and blood. Yes, it was Ebal.

"Well, my boy, so you didn't get her?" said Meryon, stepping up. Ebal was evidently much exhausted; he reeled in the saddle, and would have tumbled off if Meryon had not caught him. "Why you poor little kid?" muttered he, compassionately.

Then he gave a sudden start, and stared in the youth's face. Ebal's soot black hair, his eyes and features; but this supple young body which his arms held was the body, not of a boy, but of a girl! He almost dropped her in astonishment.

"Terah! what, Terah? Well, by the great horn spoon! Why, you cunning little sweetness!" Here he kissed her. "Tuckered out, eh? I should think she might! And all sole alone! What became of Ebal?"

The princess was nearly at the end of her tether. Being an oriental, she did not faint; that art is little understood in the east. But she rested in her lover's arms like a little sack of soft peaches, and did not in the least resent his demonstration of affection.

"Light of my soul," she murmured, "am I safe? Oh, I am so thirsty—and hungry! Oh, such a ride! That hard saddle—I can hardly move my legs! Are we alone? It's so strange being without a veil! These men's clothes—how I must look!"

Meryon set her down on a pile of rugs beside the spring. He got a bottle of wine and some food, and made her as comfortable as he could. "You look like an angel," he said; "though not like a male one, in spite of that rig. You're feminine, my dear, inside and out. Luckily that Arab streak in you—wherever you got it—Ebal has it, too—keeps you from being so plump as most of 'em; and that burnous doesn't tell much; still, the sex is written all over you and whoever takes you for a boy is an ass. But what about Ebal? what's the matter that he didn't escort you?"

The princess, whom the wine was beginning to restore, laughed faintly, as a schoolgirl over some bit of roguery.

"We exchanged dresses and places, lord of my heart," said she. "Ah, I often wished, before I got here, that I was safe back among the soft cushions again. But now I am glad; and when I have smoked some cigarettes and had a good long sleep, I shall be all right."

"This is going to be the devil," thought Meryon (referring to the situation.) "Here she is dressed like my footboy and acting like the princess! We ought to be off in an hour, and she's booked herself for a nine hours' nap Hannibal getting his army over the Alps was nothing to my getting this girl over fifty miles of flat plain. I must try fixing her a bed on camel back, and letting the beast rock her to sleep. And Ebal—by the way, Terah," he said aloud, "how is it about Ebal? Do you mean he has taken your place as princess in the harem? But he'll be found out, won't he? and what'll they do with him then?"

"Where are the cigarettes?" demanded the princess. "Ebal? Oh, the prince will impale him, I suppose. Or perhaps, since he's so young, he will only bastinado him and cut off his head. I don't know, but Ebal won't mind; it was he that proposed the exchange; and he's only a slave you know. Where am I to sleep?"

"WE EXCHANGED DRESSES AND PLACES."

"You won't sleep at present," returned the American, with sudden sternness. "Listen to me! Do you mean to say, seriously, that Ebal will be killed for getting you off?"

She stared at him with eyes of lazy wonder and laughed.

"Light of my soul, if he had deceived you like that, would not you kill him? Bismillah! My father is a man."

Meryon jumped to his feet.

"I'll show you and your father the sort of a man I am!" said he. "That boy is not going to be killed. We are going back to prevent it. Ebal impaled—I guess not! This elopement is indefinitely postponed. Why, what a cold-blooded little thing you are! The embassy may go to the devil! Hey, you fellows! Wake up and pack, do you hear? We're going home. Hallo! What's all this?"

They were surrounded by a score of armed horsemen, among the foremost of whom Meryon recognized the fat figure and malignant grimace of his enemy, Hatipha, with a huge pistol in his hand.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of to-day, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

DRESSMAKING IN CHINA

THE SEAMSTER HOLDS THE FORT OF THE SEAMSTRESS.

And Your Dressmaker Is a Man—Mr. Ah Ho, of Ah Ho & Co., Makes Life Tolerable by His Art—He Has Several Beautiful Wives.

Climbing volcanic peaks in the Sandwich Islands does not usually improve a woman's wearing apparel; neither does chasing around Japanese highways in a rickshaw pushed and pulled by the brown-eyed little men of that pugnacious land. So when I reached China and had sorrowfully examined and contemplated my wardrobe, I sent for a dressmaker. I wanted to go as a matter of fact, myself, but I was informed by an old-time resident that such action violated all the principles of oriental etiquette, and that the dressmaker would come to me. This startled me with its novelty. I had vague recollections of distinguished ladies on Fifth avenue who received their patrons from 10 until 3, and of other less distinguished modistes who occasionally vouchsafed to take an order for a gown, and I thought for a second that there were some people at home in the United States who could study Chinese etiquette with considerable advantage.

THIS IS MY NO. 1 WIFE.

I had no more than finished these recollections when my "boy" who was a full-grown man of some 50 years, who had been sent off upon the errand, gently opened the door and entered with a fellow-countryman. The stranger was presenetd as Mr. Ah Ho, of Ah Ho & Co., ladies' dressmaking. He was an oldish man, and as I afterwards learned, a grandfather or great-grandfather. He was dignified, polite and the quietest human being in his movements that I ever saw. He could cross a room as silently as a tomcat after the family canary. He asked me what I wanted and I told him. He inquired after the kinds of goods I desired and I gave him the needful information.

ONE OF THE WIVES.

He took no notes, but listened courteously and then said "My go catchee sample." In an hour he was back again and with him were samples of just exactly what I had described. I was so astonished that I began to regard Ah Ho as a clairvoyant. I told him how I wanted the clothes cut, trimmed and decorated, to which he listened as before and then, suddenly displaying a tape measure, he took my dimensions so quickly and gently that I hardly knew what he was about. He bowed and said: "My come to-mollow and tly on dress makee fit," and vanished.

MY MONGOLIAN TAILOR.

The next day Ah Ho called and expressed himself as greatly pleased with my praise. I asked for his bill and received a paper half in Chinese and half in English. It was the most curious bill I ever saw. It read about as follows: "To Ah Ho debtor, so many yards of goods at a certain price, naming the figure at which he had bought the stuff; buttons, lining and thread so much; then followed the entry twenty-four days' labor at 20 cents a day, $4.80; port r, 20 cents; for Ah Ho, $2.20. The total was anywhere from one-third to one tenth of what it would have cost in any of our great cities. One of the four suits was a tennis suit of white flannel, with cap and jacket similar to one that I had had in the United States, the latter had cost me $40.

Ah Ho's manufacture, equally good in every respect, came to $9.50. A few days afterward, while taking a constitutional, one of my chair coolies said: "That house belong Ah Ho shop." I looked at the place denoted and saw a large sign confirming the boy's statement. It read: "Ah Ho Undertakes to Make Ladies a Dress. Woman Coats Make Over. Fine Rain Coats Gauranteed. Materials Catchee and Fixee."

The sign was too much for me, and I had hardly entered when a bright-eyed little urchin appeared at a side door and said: "Old man, come pretty quick," and vanished. The next moment Ah Ho himself was in the doorway smiling and urbane as ever. I told him I wanted to see his workroom, and although he looked somewhat surprised at the request, he bowed in acquiescence and escorted me to the side door into an adjoining apartment. It was a large, well ventilated and neat looking room, twenty-five feet wide, thirty feet long and about fifteen feet high. In it were six good American sewing machines, some small hand sewing machines, and all the paraphernalia of the trade. I noticed, too, that not only were the machines up to date, but that each one was supplied with the latest attachments. At each machine sat a plainly but neatly dressed Chinese woman working away for dear life, and around the room were scattered women, boys and girls, either sitting upon benches or squatting on the floor busily engaged upon some fabric.

Ah Ho drew himself up and told me in his mysterious dialect that this was his workshop, and these the members of his family. He pointed out the lady at the first machine, and said: "This is my number 1 wife. She velly muchee lazy and too muchee slow pidgin. She no good!"

The next lady whom he encouraged with a benevolent grin was his No. 2 wife. She possessed all the Christian virtues, apparently, because, after praising her very highly in his limited vocabulary, he completed his remarks by a number of Chinese sentences, which made No. 2 grin with delight and No. 1 frown and the rest of the people chuckle all over.

There were two other wives, three slave girls, three sons, five or six daughters-in-law and an assorted lot which I couldn't exactly make out, but they included grandchildren and apprentices and possibly mothers-in-law of the respective sons. The room was exquisitely clean, the floor and furniture gleaming as if made of burnished metal. The air was fresh and sweet and in one corner a table was being set for the six o'clock dinner. I admired the order and discipline and also the economy in having the family to do all the work and not being obliged to rely upon hirelings. Ah Ho listened pondered a moment, and then said: "Yes, he be pretty good, especially when my be here to watchee them. When my not around these piecey wives belong my, get fightee and neglect their pidgin terribly. I allow each one twenty cents one day for work, but I do not pay it to her.

As I turned to go Ah Ho informed me that in addition to dressmaking, he also made hosiery and underwear to order. I went away with the conviction that if he did as well in such matters as in dress-making proper, he would be a godsend to one of our modern dress reformers.—MARGHERITA ARLINA HAMM.

A Canadian Samson.

Mr. S. C. Glashan, inspector of public schools, can recount some interesting feats performed by Joseph Berryhill, whose marvelous strength remained unknown to the world for years, although renowned among the inhabitants in London township where he lived. In Saturday's Citizen several of Berryhill's feats were described, but Mr. Glashan remembers in 1857 seeing him do still more marvelous ones than any of those mentioned,

For instance, one day Berryhill drove on horseback from his farm in Siddlesville, a village in the County of Middlesex, where Mr. Glashan lived. After he arrived there, had dismounted and tied his horse in a hotel yard, a number of villagers gathered around and asked him to give them some exhibition of his strength. He willingly consented by catching up his horse by all fours, as a butcher's boy might lift a lamb, and carrying it clear into the stable. The spectators were astounded and gave vent to round after round of applause.

Berryhill's great strength was a misfortune to him in a way, for it shut him out from taking part in any sports held in the vicinity. Once at a picnic Mr. Glashan remembers having seen a number of big muscular men throwing the hammer. The winner of the contest managed to throw it to within about six feet of the end of a barn. When they were all done, Berryhill picked up the implement, and to the amazement of everybody landed it on the top ridge of the barn, where it stuck. The building would be at least 30 feet high, so it will be seen how very much farther in point of distance Berryhill could have thrown the hammer than the best of the country athletes at the picnic.—Ottawa Citizen.

ENGLISH JUSTICE.

A Dog-Fancier Imprisoned For Chopping a Bull-Terrier's Ears—The Magistrate's Pertinent Remarks.

At Worship-street Police Court recently, the magistrate, Mr. Bushby, gave his decision in the case against Henry Cooper, toy-terrier fancier of Gloucester street, Hackney Road, and Robert and Mary Carling, husband and wife, of Pritchard Road, Hackney, who were charged with torturing and ill treating a dog by cutting its ears. The prosecution, which is at the instance of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Aninals, asked for a decision on the question of illegality, as an undoubted form of cruelty of cropping the ears of dogs. The facts in connection with the case of the dog in question have not been disputed, Cooper being the owner of the dog and having paid Carling to "operate" upon it, Carling, it was proved, having been assisted by his wife, who held the animal.

Mr. Lynch, barrister for the defence, shifted the ground of defence, and contested the description of the dog operated on. In the summons it was described as an Irish terrier, and Mr. Colam, for the prosecution, produced a rule of the Kennel Club, the governing authority at dog shows, importing that no Irish terrier which had been cropped was eligible for a prize at shows.

Mr. Bushby having pointed out that the cropping of dogs' ears, if done to fulfill the requirements of showing, might be held to be palliated by Kennel Club rules, the defence produced the dog in question, and called witnesses to show that it was not an Irish terrier, but chiefly of the bull breed, and that the cropping of the latter kind was not merely an essential for show purposes—an uncropped animal being at once discarded by the judges—but an absolute necessity for the benefit, protection and avoidance of subsequent suffering for the animals themselves because of their combative qualities.

Mr. Bushby said that, apart from the general question as to whether the common practice of cropping bull-terriers was lawful, it could hardly be disputed that the defendants were liable for the special barbarity of mutilating the burrs of the ears of the dog in question. The evidence of Mr. Vero Shaw, an authority on dogs, went to show that uncropped bull-terriers could not safely be brought up together. That, if true, seemed only to furnish a reason for the bringing them up apart. On the whole he (Mr. Bushby) had come to the conclusion that the defendants had failed to justify the common practice—presumably originating in the exigencies of organized dog fighting, though encouraged by a notion, in some quarters, that cropping improved the look of the animals. The prevalence of the practice might have blunted any moral sensibility the defendants would perhaps otherwise have possessed. He took that into consideration, and allowed them the option of a fine, this being the first case of the kind tried here. Such fine, however, must be the full penalty of £5 on each defendant, with £2 2s. costs.

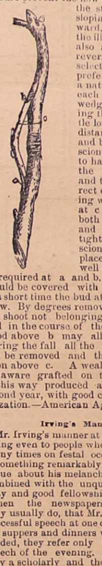
The fines not being paid, each defendant was sent to Holloway jail for one month's hard labor.—St. James' Gazette.

SEEDLING GRAPES.

Grafting Them on Old Vines Fruit is Obtained the Third Year After Seed.

E. L. Rautenberg described his experiments in crossing grapes, in his admirable paper to the Illinois horticultural society at its late meeting. For several years he has worked in these lines and thinks by proper crossing varieties may be developed which will stand our climate and resist diseases better than any of the existing kinds. The first important quality to be considered is hardiness; second, productiveness; and third, vigor in the plant. He stated that he has already produced several new kinds, but that as a variety was not valuable until it had been tested under all conditions, he could not as yet recommend them. He hoped, however, in the near future, to be able to report a few desirable new varieties. In crossing Mr. Rautenberg concludes that he would employ natives in preference to foreign grapes.

In all of his experiments in order to save time he grafts seedlings onto old vines, thus getting fruit the third year after seed. In this manner new varieties can be tested in a few years. He employs the herbaceous mode of grafting and describes it as follows: After the first four or five leaves are formed and the sap is flowing; choose a place where the graft is to be inserted and at that time wrap a twine tightly several times around the vine. This will, in a measure prevent the flow of sap. Below the string make a sloping cut downward, as shown in the illustration at a, also a similar one reversed at b. In selecting a scion, prefer one that has a natural bend. At each end cut it wedge shaped making the scion a little longer than the distance between a and b. Insert the scion, taking care to have the bark of the original vine and the scion in direct contact, securing with the string at c bound around both scion and vine and sufficiently tight to force the scion's ends into place. If this is well done no tie will be required at a and b, but the joints should be covered with grafting wax. In a short time the bud at d will begin to grow. By degrees remove all the growing shoot not belonging to the scion, and in the course of the summer the wood above b may all be taken off. During the fall all the stock above a can be removed and that part of the scion above c. A weak grower like Delaware grafted on the wild grape in this way produced a large crop the second year, with good culture and fertilization.—American Agriculturist.



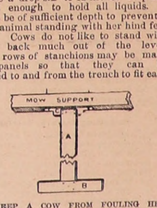
Irving's Manner

Mr. Irving's manner at supper is interesting even to people who have seen him many times on festal occasions. There is something remarkably odd and picturesque about his melancholy appearance combined with the unquestionable joviality and good fellowship of the man. When the newspapers announce, as they usually do, that Mr. Irving made a successful speech at one of the innumerable suppers and dinners which he has attended, they refer only to the first set speech of the evening. This is invariably a scholarly and thoughtful essay. delivered with marked expressiveness of style and with great theatric effect but it never terminates Mr. Irving's speechmaking for that particular evening. It is after the four or five formal speeches, which seem to be a painful necessity of every big banquet, that Mr. Irving really bristles up and begins to do his talking. Sometimes he speaks three times in an evening and sometimes six. He gets up and answers the people who make speeches about him. He smiles and chuckles to himself at the funny stories that are told, and if a point comes up after any man's speaking or story telling which strikes Mr. Irving as a good one, the tall, lank form rises again into view, the sallow face takes on a retrospective smile, and the actor shakes his forefinger warningly at his hearers, then he tells a story—it is always a good one—and drops back into his chair again. No one has ever known him to be in a hurry to depart from a dinner, and his tenacity of memory in recalling points about speeches that have been made during the evening is unrivalled. During all the festivities the English actor's countenance is that of a remorseful and dyspeptic cardinal, but the impression is a mask, which is easily disproved by the enjoying glitter of the tragedian's eyes, and the evident enthusiasm with which he enters into the fun.—New York Sun.

PREPARING FOR WINTER.

Doors Should Fit Closely, Cracks Should be Stopped up and the Place Should be Kept Clean.

Every careful farmer will at this time see that his stable doors fit properly, and that all cracks are stopped. If not attended to animal heat will be lost and feed consequently wasted. Pieces of old horse blankets or strips of carpet sewed together in one great curtain with a broad hem on the upper edge and strung on a wire at the top of the door frame, will make an effectual storm door. This is pushed aside in the morning and drawn in place the last thing at night before shutting the outside door. Where stanchions are used for cows, make a drop six to 12 inches deep and tight enough to hold all liquids. It must be of sufficient depth to prevent a lazy animal standing with her hind feet in it. Cows do not like to stand with their back much out of the level. The rows of stanchions may be made in panels so that they can be moved to and from the trench to fit each set of cows. Build a manger in front of the stranchions 18 inches wide at the bottom, 2½ ft at top and 2½ ft deep. This will prevent scattering the feed. Otherwise in the endeavor to reach it, the hind feet get into the drop and when the cow recovers herself the bedding is soiled. The cow which has a habit of humping herself, causing the droppings to fall on the floor and not into the drop, may be treated thus: To one end of a 6-inch board (a) long enough to reach from the ceiling nearly to the cow's back, nail a similiar board (b) 18 inches long and at right angles to it. On the opposite end fasten a 2x4 (c) 12 inches long with rounded ends so that staples can be drawn over them into the ceiling directly over the cow's back. This may be swung out of the way when the cattle are not in the barn.



TO KEEP A COW FROM FOULING HER STALL.

She nestled coyly on his manly bosom after the blissful question had been asked.

"And am I the only woman you ever loved?" she asked softly.

"Well, yes—successfully," he whispered in her enchanted ear.

WALL STREET SUPERSTITIONS.

Brokers Who Have Their Mascots—The Number Thirteen Feared and Respected.

Luck does not rule Wall street so completely as the uninitiated suppose. Nevertheless, it exercises considerable influence, and, consequently, many brokers and speculators have all the superstitions that mark the gambler. It would be difficult to find among them a man who has not something unpleasant to say about Fridays. Even financiers who are pillars of the church hesitate about beginning big operations on that day, and they will frequently suffer inconvenience, if not actual loss, rather than do so. Men who can look at the tape as it runs out of the ticker and see fortunes slipping out of their grasp without a change of expression will turn pale when they remember that they forgot to tip a beggar before entering the Exchange. There are others who will not sit down to luncheon without first walking around their chair.

There is a hatter in New York who has a block that was made for a certain Wall street man many years ago. It is still in use. Styles have changed a hundred times since it was made, but the man who ordered it has paid no attention to them. In other respects he carefully follows the mandates of fashion, but this antique headgear he wears through winters and summers. He is a wealthy banker and broker, a man of practical mind, unhampered by theories on any other subject but this; yet not for a thousand dollars could he be induced to walk upon the floor of the Exchange wearing a hat of any other style or make.

Nearly every dabbler in stocks has a mascot of some kind which is priceless. I remember meeting a well-known speculator up town during one of the exciting days of the panic. "Why, what are you doing here?" I asked. "Why are you not in the street?"

"I am on my way home," he replied. "I forgot my mascot, and I wouldn't touch anything in the street until I get it. I'm going for it now, and am in a great hurry. Good-bye."

I have met another operator, a man of very practical and unromantic mind, who sets great store by a peculiar scarf pin. He admits that it is merely a superstition, but he would not dare to enter into speculation on a day when he did not wear it.

The fear of Friday is, however, the most universal superstition of the street. The great panic of 1869, when scores of wealthy men were ruined in a day, has been known in Wall street ever since as Black Friday. The other day a broker who is a partner in one of the biggest houses in the street, declared: "There are two things that I am superstitious about. One is Friday and the other is the number thirteen. Some months ago I came down to my office on Friday and tore the leaf off my calendar. To my horror the figure 13 stared me in the face. It was Friday and the 13th of the month. 'Great heavens!' I thought to myself, 'now I'll catch it sure.' Within two hours I received word that a Brooklyn elevator had burned, and that 50,000 bushels of grain, which we had stored there, had gone up in smoke. Then some stocks in which we were heavily interested went down three points."—Munsey's Magazine.

The Scotch Novel.

When Folk of Peace dance in the glen,
And bogles skirl and warlocks worry,
And guidwives fear to louk ahint,
And hame to bed the guidmen hurry,
When people gang instead of going,
And ken instead of simply knowing;

When gossips dinna talk, but crack,
When cows are kye and mankind brithers
And blood is spilt where bluid is spelt,
And ilka clan dislikes the ithers;
When sick folks dee by way of dying;
And mourners greet in lieu of crying;

When childless mithers hae nae bairns,
And like a ballad every sang goes,
The woe is wae, and west is wast,
And sixpence saxpence when it bang goes,
When folk get fou but never drunk, O!
And almost everything is unco;

When lovers speir but never ask,
And lasses aye are braw and bonny,
And callants whistle from the wood,
And clipping calls for matrimony—
For even they whose souls are weel
Do of the Devil made a deil;

When ears are lugs, suggesting pulls,
And hearts are sair and ladies leddies,
And breezes blaw and shoon are sina,
And ilka page the brain unsteadies
With specious phrases joined so oddly
That gey old men may yet be godly:

When gutturals are heard at nicht,
And final l's and g's are dumber:
When wut replaces native wit,
And simmer comes instead of summer—
In short, when "Readers" pass it by,
Though I be U and U be I;

When muckle oxters hotch forbye'
And skilly birkies snash and swither,
And cantrips glunsh the gomerals
And no one knoweth why or whither—
Then throw your cap up with your betters,
And shout Hurrah for English letters!

Heart Disease and Longevity.

Let those who are haunted with suspicions of heart disease, and even those who have good reason to know that they are suffering, take courage from a story told by the late Sir Andrew Clark in the cource of his clinical lecture at the London Hospital. After reminding the young students of the necessity for caution in the "prognosis," or forecast, of the progress of this disease, Sir Andrew went on to relate an anecdote of a house governor of that very hospital—a clergyman who was about to be married:

His intended father-in-law came to him and said: "You see, you have no money, sir; you must go and get your life insured." At the end of the medical examination the physicians said to him, "We cannot accept you." "Why?" said the astonished house governor. "Oh, we would rather not say." "But," he said, "I have never been ill in my life" (and indeed he was a sturdy fellow). "Well," said the physicians, "if you will have it, you have got heart disease." "Heart disease? How long shall I live? Shall I live six months?" "Oh," replied the medical men, "you may do that."

He went home, and the match was broken off. He wrote to the committee saying that, as he had a mortal disease of the heart and could not live for six months, he withdrew his application for rooms wherein to dwell with his wife. On the receipt of this letter the committee deliberated and said, "We must superannuate him, poor fellow; and as he has but six months to live we will let him have his full pay." Accordingly he was superannuated upon his full pay, and upon this superannuity (said Sir Andrew) he lived for more than fifty years.—London Daily News.

Repairing an Ocean Cable.

It is said that one submarine cable is laid at a depth of 18,000 feet. But there are at least three cables working at a depth of nearly 17,000 feet, and four in about 16,000. The vast majority lie in water about 12,000 feet deep or less. Repairing a cable is hard work. The apparatus has also to be at once sensitive and strong. As is generally known the repairing steamer proceeds to the point where calculation shows the break or damage to have happened, and then lowers a grapnel, which it slowly drags across the route of the cable at right angles. As soon as a tension on the grapnel rope is noted, due to catching the cable it has hooked, great pains have to be taken lest the precious treasure-trove slip off at any stage of its journey up to daylight. Special grapnels have been devised for this important work. In one of the latest the prongs project from a hood like the claws of a crab or turtle. Should any of them come in contact with rock on the bottom of the sea they recede within the shield sufficiently to let the grapnel glide over the obstruction. The writer has seen chunks of prehistoric granite as big as one's fist brought up by a clogged grapnel from more than 1,000 fathoms of water. In this new grapnel the prong if it has hooked a bight of cable will still hold on when it retracts into the shell.—New York Advertiser.

Stub Ends of Thought.

Economy may be as unwise as extravagance.

A man may win a woman on "moonshine;" but he can't maintain her on it.

Truth is mighty and will prevail unless superior inducements are offered the other way.

Because a woman trusts a man is no sign that he should be trusted.

No promise is as certain as the thing promised.

Time is but a freckle on the face of eternity.

Some people are not satisfied with the horn of plenty, but they want the hide, hoofs and tallow, also.

Cupid isn't any more like the pictures we see of him than courtship is like marriage.

THE EARTH'S MILLIONS

A Statisticians Study of the World's Population.

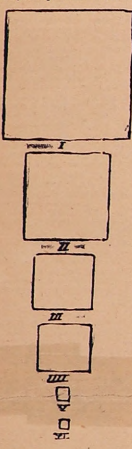
BIG FIGURES HARD TO GRASP.

Some Diagrams That Help Out the Imagination in Its Efforts to Comprehend the Magnitude of Earth and Its Multitudes.

The population of the world, writes Statistician J. Holt Schooling in The Strand Magazine, has been given by various statisticians as follows:

	Millions.
In 1874, according to Behm and Wagner	1391
In 1878, according to Levasseur	1439
In 1883, according to Behm and Wagner	1434
In 1886, according to Levasseur	1483
In 1891, according to Wagner and Supan	1480

The last estimate may be regarded as sufficiently trustworthy as a working basis: Messrs. Wagner and Supan have earned a just reputation for painstaking and thorough work and moreover, this estimate of the German savants has been established to more than one-half its bulk (i.e., to 57 per cent. of the 1480 millions) upon the actual results of recent censuses.

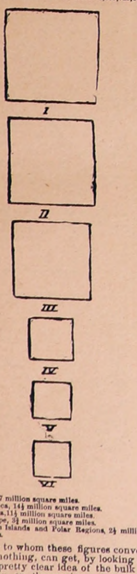


I.—Asia, 825 million persons.
II.—Europe, 357¼ million persons.
III.—Africa, 164 million persons.
IV.—America, 121¾ million persons.
V.—Oceanic Islands and Polar Regions, 7½ million persons.
VI.—Australia, 3¼ million persons.

In dealing with this large population we have to deal with big figures and a good many of them. As masses of figures do not convey to the mind so clear an impression of the real facts they stand for as may be conveyed by simple diagrammatic representations, I shall, therefore, show my figures as much as possible in the form of black and white illustrations.

For example, in No. 1 we have a graphic illustration of the following figures:

	Population.
Asia	825,954,000
Europe	357,379,000
Africa	163,953,000
America	121,713,000
Oceanic Islands and Polar Regions	7,500,400
Australia	3,230,000
The world	1,479,729,400



I—Asia, 17 million square miles.
II—America, 14¼ million square miles.
III—Africa, 11½ million square miles.
IV—Europe, 3¾ million square miles.
VI—Ocean Islands and Polar Regions, 2¼ million square miles.

People to whom these figures convey little or nothing, can get, by looking at No. 1, a pretty clear idea of the bulk of population on the various continents, etc.

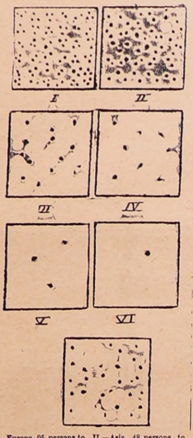
Here is another way to obtain a clear idea of how the world's population is split up. Thus, for every one thousand persons in the world there are:

In Asia	555 persons
In Europe	242 persons
In Africa	111 persons
In America	82 persons
In Oceanic Islands and Polar Regions	5 persons
In Australia	2 persons
The world	1000 persons

Each of the squares in No 3, represents one square mile, and the little dots in the squares represent the number of persons to each square mile of the continents named. At last Europe leads—and easily. The mighty Asia, which has held first place in Nos. 1 and 2, has now to make way for Europe with her 85 person to the square mile.

We may with advantage look at these facts in another way. The space for each person:

In Europe is	7 acres
In Asia is	13 acres
In Africa is	74 acres
In America is	78 acres
In Oceanic Islands and Polar Regions is	210 acres
In Australia is	589 acres
In the world is	23 acres



I.—Europe, 95 persons to the square mile.
II.—Asia, 48 persons to the square mile.
III.—Africa, 15 persons to the square mile.
IV.—America, 8 persons to the square mile.
V.—Oceanic Islands and Polar Regions, 3 persons to the square mile.
VI.—Australia, 1 person to the square mile.

And now may come in the results of some calculations I have very carefully made as regards the future growth of the population of the world, and as to the year A.D. when our descendants will have so increased in number that there will then be only one acre for each person in the world, instead of the 23 acres mentioned above.

As a preliminary, I went into all the available facts upon which to compute the annual rate of increase in the world's population, and finally I determined that the rate of increase might be taken at 5 per 1,000 persons per annum; this means that for every one million persons living in 1891, there were:

In 1892	1,005,000 persons
In 1893	1,010,025 persons
In 1894	1,015,075 persons
In 1895	1,020,150 persons

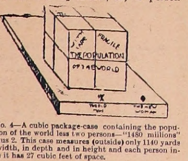
etc., etc.

And the results for the future population of the world work out this:

In 1891	1,480 million persons
In 1900 there will be	1,548 million persons
In 1950 there will be	1,986 million persons
In 2000 there will be	2,548 million persons
In 2030 there will be	2,960 million persons
In 2100 there will be	4,197 million persons
In 2200 there will be	6,910 million persons
In 2300 there will be	11,379 million persons
In 2400 there will be	18,738 million persons
In 2516 there will be	33,418 million persons
In 2517 there will be	33,586 million persons

These figures show us, for example, that in A. D. 2030, the 1891 population will have doubled itself, and will have taken 139 years to do it in.

Our present fighting, struggling, white, black and tan, good and bad, very much mixed population of 1,480 millions could be packed in a cubic box measuring only 1,140 yards in width, 1,140 yards in depth, and 1,140 yards in height—see No. 4. Each person could be allowed 27 cubic feet of room inside such a box, and the box itself could be deposited when full in Battersea Park with a squeeze, in Victoria Park with ample room to spare, or in Hyde Park and not occupy much more than one-third of the ground-space of that park—and Mr. Chase, the cyclist, again, could, if left outside, run round the box containing the world's population in about six minutes for the 2½ miles; or, a person accidentally left unpacked—one of the two shown in No. 4. for example—could stroll round the box and inspect it in one hour easily. This is a literal and solid fact, which can be readily proved—starting as it may seem to show in No. 4 a packing-case simply large enough to hold everbody in the world—packing-case which, although a large one would not occupy nearly one-half the ground-space of Hyde Park, London.



No. 4—A cubic package-case containing the population of the world less two persons—"1480 millions" minus 2. This case measures (outside) only 1140 yards in width, in depth and in height and each person inside it has 27 cubic feet of space.

A fact like this serves to illustrate the really trifling importance of the world's population en masse and incidentally, the utter insignificance of the individuals who compose it.

Extracting Teeth by Electricity.

Trials have been made at London with a new apparatus for the extraction of teeth by electricity. It consists of an induction cell of extremely fine wire, having an interrupter that can vibrate at the rate of 450 times a second. The patient sits in the traditional armchair, and takes the negative electrode in his left hand and the positive in the right. At this moment the operator turns on a current whose intensity is gradually increased till it has attained the utmost limit the patient can support. The extractor is then put in circuit and fastened on the tooth, which, under the action of the vibration, is loosened at once. The operation is performed very quickly, and the patient feels no other sensation than the pricking produced in the hands and forearms by the current.

The World's Fair in Miniature

One of the most attractive features of the Cotton States and International Exposition will be the reproduction of the World's Columbian Exposition in miniature by G. W. Harris, the builder of the Ferris wheel. The fair will be reproduced in its entirety, complete in every detail on a scale of 1-140th. This makes the Manufacturers and Liberal Arts Building about 10 feet along. The material is white holly and the workmanship exquisite. The electrical effects will be perfectly reproduced and the smallest lights ever seen will be used in decorating the various buildings.

TO CONSERVATIVE PATRONS.

A Word of Warning as to the Tactics of the Grit Members of the Organization.

The following letter appeared the other day in The Toronto Daily Mail and Empire (See Mail and Empire, Feb. 28):

To the Editor of The Mail and Empire:

SIR,—I would like your Conservative Patron of Industry readers to glance over the three little matters which I note below. They are only samples of hundreds more that can be produced of the same kind. I just send these along to sound a note of warning to my fellow Conservative Patrons. Our Grit members, and especially some of our prominent leaders, are worth very complete watching just now.

How do Conservative Patrons of Industry like it?

Up in South Oxford the Patrons of Industry nominated a man named Schell as their candidate against Sir Richard Cartwright; Schell accepted the nomination, but afterwards attended a Grit convention, which nominated Sir Richard, and spoke as follows:

"Mr. Schell, who has been given the nomination of the Patrons of Industry, said that he never had any intention of opposing Sir Richard, who had always been the champion of the farmer's interests. As a Patron Mr. Schell felt that he was perfectly consistent in taking the position he did in regard to Sir Richard, for the Patron and Liberal platforms were identical."—See Toronto Globe, Feb. 23, 1895.

This is surely plain enough evidence of a deal. If the representative of South Oxford had been a Conservative, we should have seen Mr. Schell staying in the field and protesting his political independence. As his remaining, however, would have hurt a Grit, Mr. Schell retires. Exactly! But where is the comfort to Conservative Patrons?

NOW, HERE IS NO. 2.

The Galt Reformer talks thus of the Patrons who attended the Reform Convention in the riding of South Waterloo in large numbers:

"A pleasing feature of the South Waterloo Convention was the presence of such a large number of prominent Patrons as delegates, and we feel sure that those who were there never felt themselves more at home than on this occasion. Mr. John N. Sipes, in his speech, evidently voiced the sentiments of the Patrons of this riding, and it is now pretty clear that the Patrons will cast in their lot with the Reformers, and assist in bringing about tariff reform, which is the main object of their organization. Among the other prominent Patrons present were Wm. Slater, Jacob S. Hallman, and Menno Hallman, the last two of whom moved and seconded the resolution pledging the delegates to support the nominee of the convention. The gathering was one of which the Reformers have every reason to feel proud."

Well! well! how do Conservative Patrons like all this happy unanimity? Never more at home in their life! That is good for independent men.

AND NOW HERE IS NO. 3.

The Patrons with the Grits.

The following report appears in the Toronto daily press as to the recent meeting for nominating purposes of the East Peterborough Liberals. It looks decidedly queer to see the president of a so-called independent society attending a Grit nominating convention, sitting cheek by jowl with the most violent partizan Liberals in the county.

NORWOOD, Ont., Feb. 26.—A large gathering of Liberals of East Peterborough assembled in the Town Hall here this afternoon and unanimously selected Mr. John Lang, ex-M.P., of Otonabee township, as their candidate for the approaching elections for the Commons. Mr. Lang represented this riding during the term previous to this, having been elected in the general elections of 1887, in which elections he defeated the present member, Mr. John Burnham, by more than 200 majority. Mr. Lang was not a candidate at the last general election. Mr. Lang is a prominent Patron, being county president of that body. Addresses were delivered by the candidate, and Mr. J. R. Stratton, M.P.P."

I have already taken up too much space this time, but I would like to have a chance again, if you will permit. In the meantime the three things I mention, are worth thinking over.

Yours, etc.,
A PATRON CONSERVATIVE.

THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

The last year Mr. Mackenzie was in power the Intercolonial Railway was managed at a loss of about $800,000. Since Mr. Haggart has had charge of that road the revenue has just about balanced the expenditure. What the Liberal Party ask is to be put in power again to manage the public works of Canada. Now the Intercolonial is a part of the public works of Canada and so far as we can judge, by the figures which were given above, it would pay the people of Canada to just leave the man, who is at the job at present, managing that railway.

The English System for Which Mr. Laurier Sighs.

"Whatever may be the case in specially favored areas, it cannot be seriously questioned that, as far as the overwhelming bulk of the cultivable land in this country is concerned, it cannot be profitably devoted to any purpose except the production of corn and meat. Having regard to these conditions it is obvious that the main grievance under which the agricultural interest labors is to be found in the introduction into this country of foreign produce free from any contribution whatever towards the imperial or local taxation, while at the same time the food of the people produced at home is, under the guise of rates and taxes upon the land which produces it, subject to ruinous taxation."—Speech of Rt. Hon. James Lowther, M.P., Liberal.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOLS.

The Resolutions Moved in the Matter by a Manitoba Protestant.

In the Manitoba Legislature on the 27th of February, Mr. James Fisher, Member for Russell, and a Presbyterian, moved the following resolutions as regards the Manitoba Schools. The despatch from Winnipeg says that many Protestant members of the House supported him.

"1. While this House is determined at all times to maintain to the fullest extent that the constitution warrants its exclusive power to make laws with respect to education, yet it recognizes that the highest judicial tribunal in the realm has recently decided that "such exclusive power is not absolute but limited," and that the limitation was embodied in the constitution as a "parliamentary compact" between the Dominion and the people resident in the province at the union for the protection, amongst other things, of the rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic minority in relation to education, including rights and privileges that were acquired by them since the union.

2. It has been adjudged by the same tribunal that the "rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic minority in relation to education which existed prior to 1890 have been affected" by the Public Schools Act of that year.

3. The same tribunal has further decided that in the event which is now foreshadowed of this Legislature being called upon to remove the grievance in the judgment referred to, and in the further event of the Legislature declining so to do, a case will have arisen where "the Parliament of Canada is authorized to legislate on the same subject."

4. That this House is always prepared to abide by the constitution, which is the safeguard of our provincial rights, and will not be a party to its violation, nor will it seek to impair the efficiency of its provisions for protecting the rights and privileges of Her Majesty's subjects. At the same time, the House would deplore the occurrence of anything calling for the exercise by the Parliament of Canada of its authority to legislate on the subject of education, the ultimate effect of which it is impossible to foresee.

5. Having regard to the suggestions of the tribunal referred to that "all legitimate ground of complaint would be removed if the present system were supplemented by the provisions which would remove the grievance upon which the appeal is founded and were modified so far as might be necessary to give effect to these provisions, without a repeal of the present law, this House is ready to consider the grievances referred to, with a view to providing reasonable relief, while maintaining, as far as possible consistent with that object, the principles of the present Act in their general application."

These resolutions are valuable as showing how the matter is viewed by many prominent men in the Province of Manitoba.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOLS.

A Baptist Paper on the Ground Discusses Them Under the Heading of "This Horrible School Question."

The organ of the Baptists in Manitoba and the Territories is The Northwest Baptist, published in Winnipeg, and that paper in its issue of Feb. 15th, says as follows:

"The position of The Northwest Baptist on the school question, all along, has been that our legislation is not on such an adamant basis of righteousness and ungainsayable principle that it can turn its teeth to the storms until they blow their cheeks empty. When rights or supposed rights of a legal sort have been peaceably enjoyed for a term of years, sufficient generally in civic affairs to quiet titles and give undisturbable possession, it is impossible to allay feeling and heal wounds, when such rights are confiscated, by a pretence at reverting to fundamental principles. Had the clean straight thing been done in 1890, eliminating from our public school system every vestige of so-called religious instruction the unnecessary presence of which has confirmed Roman Catholics in the opinion that it was not common schools we were after but Protestant schools, no doubt our legislation would have outridden the storm, although it is to be doubted that there would have been anything like the storm that has been experienced, during these last three years. But now where are we? Politics aside, what should be done? He is no friend of Canada or Manitoba who says, "Oh! it is not our funeral; let the Dominion Government settle it?" In all soberness we ask, can politics ever settle this question? We believe not. Neither Courts nor Cabinets are the right place to adjudge this matter. The Privy Council, without determining what rights of the Roman Catholics have been invaded, clearly indicates that there is a case for intervention on the part of the Dominion. Let Manitoba recognize this decision. We are a part of the Empire. We cannot antagonize Great Britain or even the Dominion, when the Dominion's authority in such a matter is established by the highest court in Great Britain. There ought to be a readiness on the part of Manitoba—we mean the Provincial Government—to be a party in discovering where our legislation has wronged our Roman Catholic fellow citizens, and upon discovering, willingly make every endeavor to do them justice."

Home-Made Powder.

The Naval Ordnance Bureau is greatly gratified with the excellent results it is obtaining from the 6-inch samples of smokeless powder, manufactured at the Government manufactory, Newport. This powder was fired in a 6 inch gun, 40 calibres in length, with the ordinary charges and ordinary weight of projectiles. It gave a velocity of 2,344 foot in a second, with 12.6 tons pressure in one round; 2,407 with 13.8 tons pressure in a second, and 2,495 with 15.1 tons pressure in the third. Altogether this is very gratifying, and the experts are proud of it.

PASTEUR AT HOME.

Interesting Incidents in the Career of the Great French Savant.

M. Pasteur is no ordinary man: he is one of the rare individuals who must be described by the term genius. Having commenced his scientific career, and attained great distinction as a chemist, M. Pasteur was led by his study of the chemical process of fermentation to give his attention to the phenomena of disease in living bodies resembling fermentation. Owing to a singular and fortunate mental characteristic, he has been able not merely to pursue a rigid path of investigation dictated by the logical or natural connection of the phenomena investigated, but deliberately to select for inquiry matter of the most profound importance to the community, and to bring his inquiries to a successful practical issue in a large number of instances. Thus he saved the silkworm industry of France and Italy from destruction; he has taught the French wine-makers to quickly mature their wine; he has effected an enormous improvement and economy in the manufacture of beer; he has rescued the sheep and cattle of Europe from the fatal disease anthrax and it is probable—he would not himself assert that it is at present more than probable—that he has rendered hydrophobia a thing of the past. The discoveries made by this remarkable man would have rendered him, had he patented there application and disposed of them according to commercial principles, the richest man in the world. They represent a gain of some millions sterling annually to the community.

Most interesting is a description of Pasteur's personality: The 'dome of thought, the palace of the soul,' shown by the removal of his cap, is solidly constructed, spacious and high, without being arched. A man with such a head could not help making his mark in life.

The mind is at ease in a dwelling so spacious. All the lineaments bespeak self-will, and the habit of hard, patient, persevering work. A nose that would be lumpy if shorter, is wrinkled in all directions at the bridge. It is the sort of low nose with a thick, advancing, downward end, semi-retrousse and semi-dipping, which one sees in the effigies of antique French warriors, and which Mercie has given to his equestrian statue in the Salon of the Constable de Montmorency. A short, scant beard does not hide the massive, fleshy, and yet not heavy outline of the under part of the face. An air of thoughtful gravity pervades the countenance. But there is something of the African feline in the topaz-yellow eyes, which, when the smoking-cap is taken off and the head thrown back, stare right before them at vacancy as if to rest the optic nerves. I have never seen a human being with eyes like Pasteur's; they are sometimes lighted up by flashes of scientific inspiration.

Pasteur has always preserved a great reverence for his father, formerly a sergeant major, whom Napoleon decorated on the field of battle. Later he was a tanner. Pasteur dedicated one of his books to the memory of his father, and wrote: "The older I become, the better I understand thy goodness and mental superiority. The efforts I have bestowed upon the etude and those that preceded it, are the fruits of thy example and thy advice."

LOUIS PALTEUR.

While Professor in Strasbourg, he married the daughter of the rector of the University, M. Laurent, and Mme. Pasteur has always been a devoted collaborator to him. At Pont-Gisguet, she and her daughter became veritable silkworm breeders and untiresome helpers to Pasteur; they even continued this work after the return to Paris, where they had a small menagerie in an antechamber of l'Ecole Normale. In December last M. Pasteur reached his 72 year.

Reward of Persistence.

The following letter from Wilkie Collins, in reply to a request for his autograph, was recently published in London. It shows the value of persistence in the autograph hunter, and is written in the author's best vein:

"MY DEAR SIR—Once upon a time, while I was on my way to a grand breakfast in the city of New York, I was stopped in one of the squares by a well-bred young gentleman, who said he recognized me by photographic portraits and asked if I would give him an autograph, I said 'Yes, but where am I to send it?' He said: 'Quite unnecessary, sir. If you don't mind, you can give it to me now.' With that he pulled an autograph book out of one pocket, a pen out of another, and an ancient 'ink horn' out of a third. 'How am I to write it?' I asked. He answered: 'You can write it on my back.' He turned around and 'gave me a back,' as if we were playing at leapfrog. I wrote him his autograph (greatly to the amusement of the public in the square), and we shook hands and parted. I quote this young gentleman's example as giving you a useful hint in the pursuit of autographs. If he had not stuck to me while he had me I might have forgotten him—just as inexcusably as I forgot you. And now here is my autograph at last,

"Very truly yours,
"WILKIE COLLINS.

Daily Intelligencer.

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

Reasons for Success.

The success of Norway Pine Syrup as a cure for coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles is due to the fact that it is the best and pleasantest remedy ever discovered, and because its action is prompt and certain.

Chronic Derangements of the Stomach, Liver and Blood, are speedily removed by the active principle of the ingredients entering into the composition of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. These pills act specifically on the deranged organs, stimulating to action the dormant energies of the system, thereby removing disease and renewing life and vitality to the afflicted. In this lies the great secret of the popularity of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills.

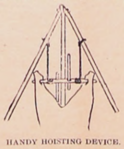
FOR DRESSING BEEF.

Improved Windlass on Which to Hoist the Carcass to Skin and Dress It.

When cattle are killed on the farm it is usually a difficult matter to hoist the carcass in order to skin and dress it properly. Block and tackle are often not at hand, and even when readily obtainable, the place where the beef must be killed frequently does not have a support high enough or strong enough to hold the heavy animal clear of the ground. The hoisting device shown in the accompanying illustration from a sketch by J. W. McLaren, Kansas, is unexcelled for simplicity, cheapness and adaptation to farm butchering. Where other devices use complicated windlasses or long levers for hoisting, this differs from all of them in simply using the gambrel stick for a windlass, and the hock joints for the bearings in which it revolves. As the supporting ropes may be fastened to any strong, high object, the plan may be used with any gambrel stick by boring holes and inserting short lever arms. The illustration shows it used with an ordinary derrick of three legs bolted together at the top. The supporting ropes are fastened to the outer legs, thus suspending the carcass, and are wound around the gambrel stick windlass which is made of tough wood having two oblong, transverse mortises near the center, through which pass two removable levers, one of which is allowed to fall back against the hindquarters of the beef to hold the windlass from turning. The supporting ropes pass through holes, or are held on by friction hitches. By tying the ropes to the derrick when low down, and alternately hoisting with the middle legs and with the windlass, it is possible for one man working alone to hoist and dress a carcass of beef.



HANDY HOISTING DEVICE.

Wide Tires for Wagons.

At the December meeting of a Delaware farmers' institute, a committee on good roads made a report in favor of wide tires and non-tracking wheels on farm and freight wagons. In the discussion which followed, nearly everyone present could bear witness to the beneficial effect of the wide tire on our roads. Such wagons have the effect of very heavy rollers, smoothing, firming and filling in the ruts instead of cutting them deeper, as is the case with common, narrow wheels. Wide tires are a necessity to the maintenance of any good road. Stone will longer resist the bad effects of narrow wheels, but even on stone, the constant cutting and grinding of narrow wheels always in the same track, will wear ruts and no road can remain long in good order with ruts or holes to hold the water. But it was argued that on our Delaware earth roads, the beneficial effects of such wide tires would be especially apparent. The manufacturers of the Kemp manure spreader have given many of our farmers an object lesson on road making, of the greatest importance. Their spreader is built with tires six inches wide behind and four inches before with the gange so arranged that the front wheels track inside of the main hind wheels. Only those who have observed the effect of hauling loads with this spreader can at all appreciate its wonfully beneficial effect on the road over which it passes, Ruts and holes soon disappear, loose earth is packed firm, and sand and dust become a part of a good hard roadbed. Another illustration open to all is foot paths which traverse all farm neighborhoods. The footman travels on a good wide track, In proportion, a wagon should have a tire not less than 10 inches in width (front and back) to compare in pressure per inch with that of the foot. There is very little money spent on foot paths; generally they are kept up entirely without expense. But who ever saw a foot path that was not in good shape, free from mud, sand or dust nearly all the year, and all because the great designer knew enough to make the foot of wide tread, in proportion to its load, and tracking an impossibility. There is a widespread movement for good roads all over the country just now. Money will be expended in large and increasing amounts, and if properly directed, the benefits can hardly be overestimated. But I wish that there might go along with it more correct ideas of the effect of medium tires and tracking which are together responsible for more bad roads than most persons are aware.

The following measures of capacity may be found useful to hang in the kitchen for easy reference:

Four even teaspoonfuls liquid equal one even tablespoonful.

Three even teaspoonfuls dry material equal one even tablespoonful.

Sixteen tablespoonfuls liquid equal one cupful.

Twelve tablespoonfuls dry material equal one cupful.

Two cupfuls equal one pint.

Four cupfuls equal one quart.

Four cupfuls flour equal one quart or one pound,

Two cupfuls solid butter equal one pound.

Two cupfuls granulated sugar equal one pound.

Two and one-half cupfuls powdered sugar equal one pound.

One pint of milk or water equals one pound.

Skim milk is heavier than whole milk, and cream is lighter than either, while pure milk is 3 per cent. heavier than water.

One teaspoonful soda to one cupful molasses.

One teaspoonful soda to one pint sour milk.

Three teaspoonfuls baking powder to one quart flour.

One-half cupful of yeast or one-quarter cake compressed yeast to one pint liquid.

One teaspoonful salt to two quarts flour.

One teaspoonful salt to one quart soup.

One scant cupful of liquid to two full cupfuls of flour for bread.

One scant cupful of liquid to two full cupfuls of flour for muffins.

One scant cupful of liquid to one full cupful of flour for batters.

One quart water to each pound of meat and bone for soup stock.

Four peppercorns, four cloves, one teaspoonful mixed herbs for each quart of water for soup stock.

It is often said of good cooks that "they never measure, they guess." Not so. Long experience has taught them to measure, and measure accurately, by means of that same experience and judgment. This, however, is a most risky experiment for beginners, whose pinions are still insufficiently furnished with plumage for independent aerial navigation.

FLYING BY STEAM.

Hiram S. Maxim's Machine, a Tangle of Steel Tubing, Wires and Balloon Cloth, Driven by Pine-Propeller-Screws.

There was a remarkable spectacle at Bexley, in English Kent, not long ago. For the first time within the knowledge of man, a flying machine actually flew. Its flight was short, to be sure. Its lifting power was so much beyond what had been expected that it tore itself from the wooden guides which held it, pieces of the rail got entangled in its framework and it came to a sudden stop, burying its wheels deep in the ground. It is the invention of Hiram S. Maxim, who—it is unnecessary to say—is an American.

The chief characteristic of the machine is its lightness, yet it weighed 8,000 pounds with fuel, water and a crew of three men when the experiment was tried. Its framework consists of marvelously light steel tubing and steel wires. Mr. Maxim does not think aluminum suitable to his needs. At the bottom of the machine is a deck, holding the crew, boiler and steering wheel and reservoirs of air and gas for the boilers. Ten feet above this deck are the two compound engines, each running a screw propeller 17 ft. 10 in. in diameter and of 16 ft. pitch. Up higher still is the great aeroplane, with smaller aeroplanes sticking out at the sides like wings. Altogether, from tip to tip and from prow to tail, the machine is 125 feet wide and 104 feet long. There are five pairs of wings at the sides, but the three middle pairs are often not in use. They were not on the machine at the time of the accident. Without these three pairs, there is about 4,000 feet of aeroplane surface; with them, about 5,400 square feet. Finally, fore and aft, there are two steering planes, carried on trunnions and so connected by wires to a steering drum on deck that their angle may be varied, making the machine go up, down or on a level keel.

The boiler and the engines are the most remarkable features of Mr. Maxim's machine, as in them the problem of saving weight was the hardest to solve. The boiler consists of about 2,000 bent copper tubes holding the water, the whole aggregation being covered with asbestos cloth at the sides and the thinnest of sheet steel at the top. The fuel is gasoline, stored in a copper vessel and pumped through a vaporizer and heated on its way to the furnace. It is fed through hollow firebars, which are so pierced that there are 7,650 separate flames. The boiler weighs 904 pounds, or with fuel and water 1,200 pounds. There are 800 square feet of heating surface and 30 square feet of flame surface.

The engines weigh about 700 pounds. They supply 363 horse-power to the screws, at 375 revolutions a minute. Mr. Maxim says 150 horse-power is expended in slip, 133 in actual lift on the aeroplanes, and 80 in driving the machine, with its braces and wires, through the air. The screws are of lapped American pine, covered with glued canvas. They weigh 135 pounds apiece. The width at the end of the blade is 5½ feet. The screws are carefully stayed to the shaft by wires. The aeroplane is of balloon cloth.

The thrust of the screws when the machine is running is 2,000 pounds. The total lift is 10,000 pounds, at 40 miles an hour, the aeroplane at an angle of 7.55 degrees with the horizon.

Mr. Maxim has been working at his machine for nearly five years. Until lately he has been jeered at as a man who was spending thousands of pounds in constructing a flying machine which ran on rails; but since the accident showed that the trouble was not in making it up, but in holding it down, his experiments have been viewed with more respect. On the rails on the Bexley meadows, the machine will easily make 40 miles an hour.

Lion Hunters Turned Down.

Froude's treatment of a group of lion hunters is amusingly described by Mrs. Ireland. "At a sudden turn in the winding path we came on a party of six or seven pedestrians, ladies and gentlemen, headed by a lady who, introducing her friends and her husband, expressed much disappointment at finding Mr. Froude bound for a walk, and 'not at home,' that particular afternoon.

"'You see,' said she, 'when one has friends down from town one has but two attractions to offer—the fine scenery and a call on Mr. Froude.'

"This speech was perhaps not altogether a wise one. But the company had driven some miles, and left their carriage at ——, and then walked some miles, and now found themselves within twenty minutes' walk of their avowed object. They were doubtless literary people, too, an Oxford professor or so and a recently returned Indian warrior, the names only heard by me and now forgotten. But Froude could not be 'lionized.' He was not a man to 'show his paces.' He responded with perfect courtesy to the appeals to him, and said quietly:

"It's rather unfortunate, but I wish to open this part of the country to my friend, Mrs. ——, and I must go a little further around the point, but my daughter will be delighted to go back with you to the Molt." And raising his cap, he made his adieux.

"I had stood back, and now wondered if I should say, 'Pray don't consider me in the speech would be ridiculous, and would expose me to a sharp and well-deserved 'snub.' It was not I, essentially not I, who was being considered. Mr. Froude simply did not choose to be forced to entertain his friends' friend. And he was right. So I held my peace. We walked along with very little conversation. But, on our return, the whole party were seated on the lawn and footmen were bringing out afternoon tea, fruit, etc. The visit was not a long one."—New York Tribune.

Three Rules for Life.

1. Look for good, not evil, in all things. Cultivate the habit of seeking the best in every person and every event. The bane of our life is that cynical contempt which finds in all things only weakness, only something to be criticised and despised. Seek good as Jesus sought it, everywhere, and if we seek we shall find. Faith in God is faith in goodness; and conversely, faith in goodness is faith in God and leads to Him.

2. Do always the best you can. Be not satisfied with doing as well to-day as you did yesterday, but look up to something higher and better. Look upon each new day which comes as an opening into a higher world and better life. When an opportunity of doing good comes think that God sends it. Be faithful in small things, because they also are divine duties, full of heavenly peace, and may lead to the greatest blessing.

3. Select the best influences, read the best books, see the best people. Surround your mind and heart with what is highest. We can never escape the influence of our environment. If we habitually associate with those who disbelieve in God, inhuman goodness, in the possibility of progress, we shall take that tone ourselves. If we go with those who make this life a playground, who live only for self-indulgence, we also shall drift in that direction. But if we seek the companionship of the pure and generous, the upright and honorable, their lives will send an influence into ours, and we shall find it easier as the days go on to be generous ourselves. —Ex.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING.

The Incandescent Lamp is the Generally Useful One.

The best, and, in fact, the only really efficient incandescent electric lamp of to-day is characterized by a continuous glass chamber, from which the air has been exhausted, and in which is the light-giving carbon filament, supplied with current by platinum wires, sealed in the neck of the glass bulb. This seems a simple enough contrivance, but the preparation of the materials and the putting them together involve the greatest care, and the present high state of the art has been attained only after many years of ceaseless labor and patient effort.

The carbon filament has probably caused more work and worrying than all the rest of the lamp put together. It is the essential part. Until lately the raw material for its preparation was bamboo, which was cut into thin strips and carbonized, but now some artificial compound of carbon is used, the exact nature of which is kept secret. This substance is cut into thin strips, and is carbonized by heating in a suitable furnace. These carbonized filaments are of various lengths and thicknesses, some having a diameter of only five thousandths of an inch, and are bent into different shapes, the one most favored at present being the spiral. At the largest lamp works in the United States all the sixteen candle-power high voltage lamps—the most common size there—are now made with spiral filaments, as well as all lamps above sixteen candle-power. The more familiar "horse shoe" and "hairpin" filaments however, still have a place in the art, particularly in the small-sized lamps. Sixteen, twenty, twenty-four and thirty-two candle-power fifty-volt lamps are still made in plain loops, and probably always will be.

Beauty of the Midnight Sun.

Here on the 69th degree of latitude, on the most northerly point of Hindoen, we find at last the long sought and much desired midnight sun. We see it under the most magnificent conditions that could be imagined. Our yacht, again steering southward toward the grandiose Vest fjord, the waterway between Loffoden and Bodoe. The night is cool, but by no means cold. We see at midnight the fiery gold of the sun, fortunately somewhat moderated by the intervening clouds, in dazzling beauty.

The sun and the whole northwestern sky has gradually assumed a beautiful copper-colored tone, against which the craggy and rugged islands stand out wonderfully with their steel blue coloring. As the sun reaches the deepest point at which it is visible, its glow diminishes in intensity, but the island groups maintain their indescribable hazy brilliancy, and the smaller islands have the appearance of enchanted sea monsters, changing color like mother-of-pearl. The sun, which has never disappeared from view, begins slowly to rise again. The Loffoden Islands, on which we look back as on a single group, are lit up by the citron-yellow rays of light, between which rolls a light gray, almost white mist. It looks like a wide, deep lake lying higher than the deep, green waters of the Vest fjord on which our yacht is gliding. A single sea-mew is sailing without a single beat of its wings toward the land.

Now the sun disappears from our gaze, but the sky by its golden beams of light shows its presence. The clouds in the northeast already glow in the dawn of the new day. The old day has gone down in glory, and in glory the new day is already here. If our greatest national poet, Raimund, had seen the Loffoden in midsummer he never could have said, "However brightly the sun may shine it must nevertheless set." Sunrise and sunset have become one. In the rosy mist the outlines of the island become more and more shadowy, and at 3 o'clock in the morning we wish the Loffoden Islands farewell.—New York Herald.

Frightful to Sailors on the Ram.

The sailors on the Ammen ram are very wary about going into the manholes that lead to the water-tight compartments between the outer and inner shells. The space between the two hulls is barely two feet high, and the manholes admit only a small man. "But if a fellow gets away in there and becomes scared," said a workman the other day, as he screwed on the manhole cover, "he will swell up, and he can't crawl back through the hole to save his neck. I was in that third compartment the other day, and when I thought how awful it would be to have the outer cover screwed on while I was there, I got panicky and tried to crawl back, I couldn't get through anyway, although I had gone in easily enough. The harder I tried the bigger I swelled, and the men finally had to pull me out. When they got me through the clothes were torn off my back, so tightly had I been squeezed."—Lewiston Journal.

"Jack's Alive" is an old old game that is worth reviving. You need a complete circle for this, so that a piece of stick which has been lighted and the blaze blown out, leaving a bright spark at the end, can be passed around to the right or left, each one saying as he hands the torch to his neighbor, "Jack's Alive." The player who holds the stick when the last spark dies out must consent to have a delicate mustache painted on his face with the charred end of the stick, which is then relighted, and the play goes on. Should the wearer of the mustache have Jack die a second time on his hands, an imperial, side whiskers, or exaggerated eyebrows may be added to his charms. While Jack is really alive, with his spark in a healthy condition, he is passed around carelessly, but when he shows signs of dying, it is amusing to see how rapidly he changes hands, and how frantically the players blow on him to revive him, for each player is bound to receive him just as soon as his neighbor pronounces "Jack's Alive," or pay a forfeit.—Milwaukee Journal.

There is a rumor that the handsome young Duchess of Albany, the widow of Prince Leopold, is engaged to marry the Earl of Rosebery. Queen Victoria doesn't like second marriages, but in this case, it is said, she is prepared to forget her prejudice. The Duchess of Albany has two little children, the present Duke and Princess Alice of Albany, while Lord Rosebery has several children by his first wife, who was Miss Hannah de Rothschild, and who left him a great deal of money.

"Novelties" in Potatoes—The Southern Cow Pea—Notes.

Do not pay high prices for a few pounds of tubers of some new potato that may have many claims in its favor unless you are sure of its excellence and even then it would be well to wait until it has been given a test for several years, as many varieties may be unreliable in some sections. Novelties in seeds, fruits and vegetables are brought out every year, but they sometimes happen to be old varieties with new names. They spring into existence as novelties one year and sink out of sight in two or three seasons.

The Southern cow pea is a better crop for plowing under than rye, and is nearly equal to clover in man respects: It is, like corn, a summer crop, however and the seed cannot be planted until the ground is well warmed. It seems to thrive on any soil that will produce corn.

The hogs that have not yet been slaughtered will prove expensive during this cold month, as it requires too much corn to keep them supplied with warmth.

The Michigan Experiment Station has been experimenting with rape, and reports that one acre of rape will support nine lambs and produce a gain of 191 pounds in seven weeks. It is a summer crop, being sown in drills, in July.

With clover is one of the best foods for sheep and it affords excellent pasturage for cows. It is also a honey-producing plant, and the bees can work on it, although they cannot procure honey from the red variety.

As soon as the snow clears away it will be advisable to make preparation for applying fertilizers to the strawberry beds. If the land is liable to be washed by heavy rains it will be well to delay the work until later, but it should be done before the new shoots begin to appear.

Some Unkind Satirists—Who Are Fearless in Denunciation of Fads and Fashion — From Time Immemorial Bonnets and Dresses Have Been in Inverse Proportion.

Do not think for a moment that the writer of this brief sketch will furnish a detailed description of the multitudinous varieties of feminine headgear that have been worn among all nations and in all ages from the progenitress of the human race to the fin de siecle Parisienne, or that he will attempt to trace all the modest which the various fashions have assumed in their rapid evolution. Looking over the vast field he is tempted to resort to the figure of speech which the evangelist John used after enumerating some of the deeds and sayings of his master. "If they should be written, every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.

Nor will he venture to express his opionions too positively as to what particular hats are most practical, most tasteful, and most becoming to the blonde or to the brunette, to the tall or to the petite, to the society lady, and to the grisette. He knows better than to invoke the ire of the opposite sex. He dared once to contradict the taste of only one of its members and he was unceremoniously suppressed. Not long ago (alas, it is generally not long ago) his better half bought a new hat; it was one of those outrageous indescribables which excite the blasphemous propensities of theatre-goers.

"Isn't it perfectly lovely?" was the sanguine query. Expostulations regarding the abnormal immensity of its size and the gaudiness of the colors were vigorously frowned and talked down and almost tears. "Et tu, Brute!" Were not sister-in-law and mother-in-law and lady friends called in to opinionate, and was she not sustained in her excellent judgment, taste and economy?

ARABIAN NORMADE.

Only a few rambling, objective, and perfectly neutral remarks, therefore, and fewer illustrations must here be expected on this fertile subject. It requires an Addison for fearless expression on the pyramidal monstrosities of his time. He wrote in The Spectator: "There is not so variable a thing in nature as a lady's headdress. Within my own memory I have known it to rise and fall within thirty degrees. About ten years ago it shot up to a very great height, insomuch that the female part of our species were much taller than the men. The women were of such an enormous stature that we appeared as grasshoppers before them. At present the whole sex is, in a manner, dwarfed and shrunk into a race of beauties that seem almost another species. I remember several ladies, who were once very near seven feet high, that at present want some inches of five. How they came to be thus curtailed I cannot learn; whether the whole sex be at present under any penance which we know nothing of, or whether they have cast their headdresses in order to surprise us with something in that kind which shall be entirely new, or whether some of the tallest of the sex being too cunning for the rest, have contrived this method to make themselves appear sizeable, is still a secret, though I find most are of opinion that they are at present new lopped and pruned, so that they will certainly sprout up and flourish with greater heads than before. For my own part, as I do not love to be insulted by women who are taller than I, I admire the sex much more in their present humiliation, which has reduced them to their natural dimensions, than when they had extended their persons and lengthened themselves out into formidable and gigantic figures. I am not for adding to the beautiful edifices of nature nor for raising any whimsical superstructure upon her plans. I must therefore repeat it, that I am highly pleased with the coiffure now in fashion and think it shows the good sense which at present very much reigns among the valuable part of our sex. One may observe that women in all ages have taken more pains than men to adorn the outside of their heads; and indeed I very much admire that those female architects who raise such wonderful structures out of ribands, lace, and wire have not been recorded for their respective inventions. It is certain there have been as many orders in these kinds of buildings as in those which have been made of marble. Sometimes they rise in the shape of a pyramid, sometimes like a tower, and sometimes like a steeple." Similar to this is an extract from Stubb's "Anatomie of Abuses," published in 1585, decrying the whimsicalities of the Elizabethan reign.

"Sometimes they use them sharp on the crowne, pearking up like the spire or shafte of a steeple, standing a quarter of a yard above the crowne of their heads, some more, some less, as pleased the fantasies of their inconstant minds. Othersome be flat and brocade on the crowne like the battlements of a house. Another sorte have rounde crownes, sometimes with one kind of a band, semetimes with another; now black, now white, now russed, now redde, now grene, now yellow, now this, now that, never content with one colour or fashion two daies to an end."

Common sense and taste are the two antithetical principles, which from time immemorial have determined woman's choice of headgear. Not that there have been no other factors at work, to variegate style and ornamentation. Climate, nationality and religion have, in many instances, fashioned bonnets. Common sense, which says that "anything superfluous is not necessary," calls for a light, broad head shade in the tropics, and a light poke in temperate zones, but taste comes in and adds an endless of variety finerlesa nd then tyrannical fashion steps in and burdens the poor feminine brain and the purses of the husbands. This is illustrated in the case of the veiled hat of the Jewish girl of Algiers, the summer hat of the French girl of 1800 (cheapeau a la Gaulois) that of the poor girl from Soendre Bergen which is laden with immense weights of jewelry, and in nearly all the summer hats of modern times in the same way it is very foolish to select a straw hat for winter wear—unless fashion demands—or a high hat for fall and spring storms—unless fashion demands it—and thousand other things that are foolish—unless fashion demands. What is regarded as the height of taste and neatness in Damascus would be ridiculed on the streets of Chicago. Who would want to be seen with that formidable Drusian "tontur" here reproduced, nearly a foot in length, from which heavy silver earpieces are suspended? One feels almost constrained to assert, in a comparative review, that Christian culture causes the bad evil, the constant changes in its fashions; for it is a remarkable fact that among the aborigines and in semi-civilized countries the present generation is contented to wear what their ancestors chose thousands of years ago, to wit, the palm-leaf hat of the girl of Timor, the cap of the Jamna belle, the headdresses of the Albanesian and of the nomad of Arabia.

JAPANESE STYLE (MODERN).

1. CHAPEAU A LA GAULOIS (1800).
2. SWEDISH BRIDE.

In the history of tete fads it may also be observed that whenever eccentricity and extravagance have reached their highest point, a sudden change of fashion takes place. Toward the end of the eighteenth century the ladies were designated as the feathered sex on account of the enormous length of their hat feathers. The famous Duchess of Devonshire wore an ostrich feather an ell long. The feather crisis was reached in 1775 and soon after the floral hat began to bloom. Everybody wore flowers and gaudy ribbons until finally the headgear was transformed into a miniature conservatory.

As an example of the slavery which fashion imposes on its victims it must be mentioned that at one time in Europe during the last century the ladies' hats were made so large that the wearers had to kneel in their carriages if their head-dress remained unruffled. William Hutton thus satirizes this variety:

This intrepid champion, elate with success,
Made these bold remarks on the ladies' headdress:
The pride of our females all boundary exceeds;
'Tis now quite the fashion to wear double heads.

PALMLEAF HAT IN TIMOR.

Approaching this tower to disburse heavenly treasure,
I passed by a head that would fill a strike measure;
If I'd had that measure but close by my side,
I then should have had the experiment tried.
By sins a man's said to be cover'd all o'er
With bruises and many a putrefied sore;
From the sole of his foot to his crown they aspire,
But the sins of a woman rise half a yard higher.

Another observation in conclusion. Bonnets and dresses have always been in inverse proportion. The more immense the dress, the wider the sleeves and the crinolines, the tinier the hat or the bonnet, and, vice versa, when the skirts were abbreviated and sleeves slendered, then the size of the hats grew in inverse proportion. One needs but to scan the fashion magazines of this century to be convinced of this truth. The writer only ventures to add his plea for more simplicity, both in dress and hats, both in the interests of the ladies and the much-abused pocket-books of their husbands, believing, as he does, in the ancient maxim, "Beauty when unadorned is adorned the most." CAUGHT A BIG HORN.

Said to be the Only Creature of its Kind In Captivity.

The only Rocky Mountain sheep known to be in captivity arrived yesterday from Modoc country and is temporarily quartered in a stable until the park commissionees can find a suitable habitation for the new curiosity in Golden Gate Park. The horned beauty whose future occupation in life will be to create speculation among visitors to the park as to whether he is a Fiji Island goat or the only living specimen of an otherwise extinct breed of deer, is a most interesting little animal. The only disappointing quality which he possesses is a total lack of that timidity which all Rocky Mountain sheep are reputed to possess.

The new addition to the Park Commissioners' collection of curious quadrupeds looks as if he might possess enough vigour and vitality to lead a keen sportsman a rapid chase up a perpendicular cliff were he so inclined. But he does not seem to have inherited a suspicious disposition. He is more docile and less wicked than a Telegraph hill goat. Probably that fact will make him of more value as a park specimen. He has a weakness for having his head scratched, and he will doubtless be thus able to afford amusement to many visitors to the park when he enters upon the duties of his new occupation.

The new arrival, barring his thick, curling horns, bears a strong resemblance to the deer which now roam about the deer glen in the park. His head and tapering limbs could not very well be more akin to those of a deer. He has the same tawny color, which is only relieved by a stripe of white down his back, and he has the funniest little tail that any sheep ever possessed. —San Francisco Chronicle.

LORE OF THE WOODSMAN.

What the Axeman is Taught by Experience in the Forest—Method of Chopping a Tree.

A "green" hand cuts a sorry figure when sent into the woods alone to do almost any piece of work. There is very much to be learned about even so simple a matter as working in the woods is generally considered to be by those who know nothing about it. For instance, one would think that there could be no science involved in chopping down a tree. The fact is, to do this to best advantage requires experience, combined with excellent judgment. Let a foreigner come here who knows nothing about chopping, and send him out to cut down a tree, and he would be most likely to chop all round the trunk, with no idea of which way it would fall until he saw it going; and then it would be a matter of luck if he did not lose his head and get out of the way of it instead of getting crushed. The experienced chopper first decides where it will be most convenient to have the tree fall, then stepping a few paces away, takes the end of the ax-handle between the thumb and forefinger, raises it up, poises it, uses it as a plumb and line, squints across it and views the tree from end to end. In close cases he makes this observation from several points. He has to take into account any leaning of the tree, if there is an excess of weight of branches on either side, and direction of the wind, if any.

Having decided the probable effects of all these, he proceeds to the base and chops square across on the side it is to fall, about half way through the tree, and then turns to the other side and chops across about two inches higher than the first cut. He will throw a tree nearly every time in the spot where he designed it should go. Poor choppers usually do not chop straight across the stump, but at an angle. By looking at a stump an old chopper can tell whether the tree was cut by a novice or one skilled in the business. A good chopper soon learns to chop both "right handed" and "left-handed" equally well. To saw down a tree, the first cut should be on the side the tree is to fall, as in chopping, and the second on the opposite, but a little higher. If even with the first, when sawn through, the tree is apt to "gig back" in falling and crush the saw and perhaps injure the men. I saw a large tree cut in this manner; it slid backward about a rod, broke the saw, and came very near killing one of the workmen. The most dangerous part of woodchopping is cutting off saplings just bent over by a falling tree. At the first stroke they usually split up and one portion fly back or sideways with power sufficient to knock a horse over or pierce him through. Choppers have lashed their axes to poles and cut from a safe distance.

Another dangerous operation is to cut down a tree when another chopped-off tree leans against it, for it cannot always be told what way the two will fall; and then the leading tree is likely to drop at any moment and catch the chopper as in a "dead fall." In such a case the chopper must "keep his eye peeled" and "look out for breakers."

When a tree has fallen, the chopper's first business is to look up and around among the standing timber in the vicinity and see if any branches have been broken off and lodged loosely, which would be likely to drop. Many have been killed by not taking this precaution.—George Wilson in The Country Gentleman.

ABOUT EARTH ROADS.

A Few Fundamental Principles in Their Construction and Maintenance.

Mr. D. O. Nourse, the agriculturist and farm superintendent of the Virginia experimental station, has just published a bulletin relating to the roads of that state—"if," as he says, "the tracks over which we are obliged to travel may be dignified by the name of roads"—in which he makes a strong plea for placing the building and repair of earth roads in the hands of persons who understand how to do such work in accordance with correct principles. What is wanted is an engineer overseer for each county, to be paid a regular salary, who would, if a man of honor, be jealous of his reputation and good roads would be the result. Such an officer could, in a few years, by keeping a sufficient number of teams and employing men used to the work who would be becoming better workmen year by year, built up a department that would be a credit to the community. It is no wonder that roads are poor when contracts are let to persons who hardly know a good road from a bad one—for it is just as necessary to know how to build a highway as it is to build a railroad. A few fundamental principles in the buildiing and maintenance of earth roads are given.

1. A common error is that of attempting to repair without first removing the cause of the trouble. Drainage must be first attended to, as it is simply impossible to make a road bed to stand if the drainage is bad. "We have seen on one of the most traveled roads, the water run for half a mile in the wheel and horse tracks, when perhaps the taking out of a stump or one blast of rock would remove all obstructions and allow good gutters." Water must be kept out of the road at all hazards and this must first, last and always be by the conduits at each side.

2. Water never runs up hill. Often the gutters are sufficiently good in every respect except that the slope is in the wrong direction. The eye is not always a true evidence of slope of ground as the topography of the land may be such that the fall is more apparent than real. Apply the test of the simple level.

3. A safe rule is to place bridges or culverts wherever there is a depression in the road; and unless the water may be conveyed to fields on each side, a culvert must be made in the lowest spot, carrying the water across the road.

4. Whenever a mud hole is formed in an earth road, it should never be filled with a lot of stones, as this is almost certain to make two mud holes instead of one. First remove the mud and water from the puddle, and then take earth as nearly of the same nature as the road-bed as possible and pound this into the hole firmly, so that wheels may pass over it at once without sinking into it. It should be filled somewhat higher than surrounding portions to allow for settling.

5. Give the road-bed the proper slope. Never allow it to be too flat, or lower in the middle than at the sides. A section of road should, if cut transversely, present an arc in shape, sloping from the center to each side. This, of course, is to prevent water from standing on the surface.

6. Do not make roads too wide or too narrow. If too wide, they become very expensive to keep in repair; and, if too narrow, the gutters become obstructed from wagons running into them. In general these rules apply with equal force to earth or rock roads, as if a rock road is to be made these principles must first be carried out. The ideas may appear absurdly simple, but there are thousands of instances in which they are utterly disregarded in road building and repairs, and hence are the more necessary.

THE NEWTOWN PIPPIN.

IT COMMANDS THE HIGHEST PRICE IN ALL MARKETS.

An Apple That Sells From Nine to Fifteen Dollars Per Barrel Ought to be Worth Growing—It Stands at the Head of the Procession.

The apple that commands the highest price in both home and foreign markets is the Newtown Pippin. When Baldwins and other choice varieties sell at $3 per barrel at Liverpool, the Newtown Pippin sells at $9, and the same proportion holds true in our domestic market. The fruit often retails as high as $12 or $15 per barrel.

Downing, the authority on fruits, says as follows of this variety: "It stands at the head of all apples, and is, when in perfection, acknowledged to be unrivaled in all the qualities which constitute a high-flavored dessert apple, to which it combines the quality of long-keeping without the least shriveling, retaining its high flavor to the last."

In the early apple history of this country the Newtown Pippin was prominent. It originated at Newtown, on Long Island and its merits soon spread its cultivation. It was especially successful on the hillsides along the Hudson river, and for many years large quantities were grown there and annually shipped to Europe. Later it spread all over the country, but it found few places which were congenial. To-day it is but very little grown outside of the mountainous regions of West Virginia, where it is famous to-day as the Albemarle Pippin. Scab and insects, coupled with the general decline of orchards by reason of want of proper care, fertilizing, etc., have practically driven it out of cultivation. There is probably no one apple which is more largely modified by its environment—by varying soils and climates. It flourishes best on hill or mountain sides, or in mountainous regions. These variations are so notable that old apple experts used to claim they could tell on which bank of the Hudson river the apples were grown if a large sample was shown from which to judge, and variations sufficient to be notable have been observed when the fruit of one valley in a mountain range has been placed beside fruit from another or adjoining valley in the same range. At the Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893, New South Wales exhibited some very fine apples under the name of Five-Crowned Pippin. Fruit experts were puzzled by it at first, but after a careful study became pretty well convinced that this, too, was our old friend the Newtown Pippin, modified by the soil of Australia and the breezes of the Pacific. In West Virginia it was formerly supposed that the Albemarle was a distinct variety, but the consensus of opinion among horticulturists now is that it is only the Newtown Pippin. In Rockland county, N Y, the same apple is grown, and is there generally called the Winter Pippin.

THE NEWTOWN PIPPIN.

This apple, to be at its best, must not be planted on alluvial soil. The trees will flourish and will be productive, but they will not produce fruit in all respects equal to that grown on the hillsides. The red-colored soil along the Blue Ridge mountains between Harper's Ferry and Lynchburg, Va., is believed by many to be specially adapted to the Newtown Pippin. An orchard planted in Delaware 42 years ago, on alluvial soil, the trees being set 40 feet apart, is still growing and productive. Being a rather slow grower, they have not yet interlocked their limbs, but they will undoubtedly do so in the not far distant future. The fruit from this orchard has never been of high grade. It has all the firmness and good keeping qualities, but lacks the lustre and general attractiveness of the skin which is so much desired in this fruit, and which it has when grown in a proper environment. The Albemarle Pippin has nothing like the firmness of the northern family. It is more delicate, will not stand as much abuse, nor will it keep or ship as well. It attains a much larger size than its northern kinsman, and when at its point of perfection is unquestionably a superb fruit.

As before noted, scab and insect pests have so interfered with this fruit in most sections where it was once largely grown, that its cultivation has been practically abandoned. The system of spraying has been demonstrated to be so complete a preventive of scab that, with the addition of poison equally as effective against the codlin moth, there seems to be no good reason why this apple should not be once more largely grown. But spraying alone will not make this possible. We must have with it scientific and thorough fertilization. This will call for plenty of potash as well as other plant foods, but especially must the former be largely used. In response to a query to Mr. W. D. Barns, a prominent and successful fruit grower of the Hudson river regions, as to what he thought of the probability of success under the conditions named, he writes: "So well are we convinced of the fact that we have made arrangements to set 200 or 300 trees this spring."

Edward Van Alstine, one of the most successful growers of this fruit in Columbia county, in the Hudson river region, writes us: "The Newtown Pippin requires a rather heavy but well drained soil. It should be planted where there is a good circulation of air and plenty of sunlight. No apple needs or shows the beneficial results of spraying more. I find they should be sprayed with the ammonical solution of copper before the leaves open, say early in April; then with bordeaux mixture and paris green after the blossoms have fallen; with paris green again after ten days or two weeks; and with another application of bordeaux in June, and perhaps another in July. This will depend largely on the weather. In an ordinarily dry season three applications of copper solution and bordeaux are all that is necessary. The first application of the copper solution I believe to be most important. I had trees last fall that showed plainly the bordeaux applied in June, when the apples were picked in October. I grew them this year very large, and as free from scab as an orange—bright and red-cheeked. I market them in Liverpool, London and Glasgow. This year they have gone into cold storage. My trees are about 40 years old. They do not come into bearing as young as many other varieties. They need very heavy fertilization, both with manure and potash; also thorough pruning."

What is true of this apple is equally true of the Esopus Spitzenberg, a superlatively fine apple, and which has a history much like that of the Newtown Pippin. Since the advent of spraying it has begun to improve, and we are glad to note that the New York market is this season well supplied with fairly good specimens of this delightful apple, which always commands superior prices.—American Agriculturist.

A FRIEND OF THE LITTLE ONES.

Robert B. English, Son of John English, Proprietor of the Lakefield Cooperage, a Victim of Nervousness and Fits.

A MOST AGGRAVATED CASE THAT DOCTORS COULD NOT CURE

When Hope Was Abandoned South American Nervine Effected a Complete Cure—His Parents Are Never Done Speaking of This Great Remedy.

ROBERT B. ENGLISH, LAKEFIELD, ONT.

The anxiety that comes to parents, because of the sickness of their children is one of the most severe trials of life. Here is the case of Robert B. English, son of John English, proprietor of the well known cooperage factory, at Lakefield, Ont. Five years ago this youth suffered from a seve attack of La Grippe, leaving him a perfect wreck. A result of this extreme weakness was an attack of nervous troubles, developing into some of their most trying and unpleasant ways. The youth was taken with severe twitchings, and following these would come fits that would rack the system two and three times every week. His parents did everything that a loving father and mother could possibly do. The highest medical skill was enlisted, but in the end the doctors explained to the parents that the boy's recovery was impossible. Medicine to no end had been poured into the boy's system and no relief came. Certain local circumstances influenced the parents to make a trial of South American Nervine. This medicine had only been taken a short time when the fits disappeared and the nervous twitchings gradually lessened. Encouraged by these results, the medicine was continued until six bottles were taken. Then no more was required for, as the father said, the boy was completely cured, and stands to-day an object lesson of what Nervine can do in cases of extreme Nervous troubles. It is not surprising that these parents could never cease speaking in glowing terms of this great remedy. It is a great remedy, because it is based on a scientific principle that makes a cure effective in all cases. The nerve centers are located at the base of the brain and in the vicinity of the spinal cord. The secret of Nervine is that it commences its work at these points. No time is lost giving a little temporary ease. But the life-giving center refreshened, built up and strengthened to the utmost, and the whole system is invigorated. The common sense character of this method is plain to every one—lettered or unlettered, simple or wise. It is for this reason that it is to be said of Nervine, not that it cures some cases, but that it never fails in any case.

HAS THE JURY BEEN FIXED?

Startling Rumors At the St. Thomas Murder Trial.

SENSATIONAL EVIDENCE SATURDAY

Evidence As To Blood Being On Welter's Face When He Gave the Alarm—Hendershott Talked of Insuring Some One and Then "Removing Him"—Attempt To Exclude the Prisoners' Testimony Given At the Coroner's Inquest—Hendershott Clearly Connected With the Crime.

St. Thomas, Ont., March 11.—Opinion here as to the probability of the conviction of John Hendershott and W. D. Welter has veered around, and it is now believed that when the case is given to the jury on Thursday afternoon next they will bring in a verdict of guilty against both the accused, after a short absence. Until the startling evidence of Saturday afternoon was adduced, the general opinion was favorable to a disagreement. The testimony of the two female cousins of Hendershott has changed things materially, however.

It was anticipated that Monday morning would witness a startling move on the part of the Crown. Late Saturday night word was communicated to the Crown that two of the present jurymen had been approached prior to the empanelling, and that they gave assurances that they could be depended upon if they succeeded in getting sworn. The cousin of one of the jurymen was responsible for the statement of one of them, and it was alleged that the other juryman had said that "if the worst comes to the worst you can depend on me." When the reports were conveyed to Mr. Osler he at once instituted thorough enquiries, and had arranged that if the truth of the reports could be established the entire panel would be dismissed and the sheriff instructed to bring in "tailers," and the trial of the case be re-commenced. Up to midnight the special officers sent out to verify these reports had not returned to the city.

The various physicians summoned by the prosecution met last night and compared notes, and unanimously agreed that the wounds on the head of young Hendershott were not occasioned by blows from the blunt and sharp edge of an ax, but the flat side of an ax, the jagged wounds on the side of the head being occasioned by the sharp edges of the weapon.

The defence will make no effort to prove that Hendershott was killed by the trunk of the tree, the doctor for the defence, even, holding that such a theory is untenable. They will, however, try to show that some of the branches of the tree might have caused the wounds. The Crown witnesses once more examined the head Saturday night, and will swear positively that the branches could not have caused the wounds.

It is expected that the head of deceased, which has been preserved in alcohol, will be brought into court on Monday. The effect of this on the two prisoners will be watched with interest. Hendershott, whose iron nerve has been remarked on ever since the trial opened, weakened Saturday, and evidently feels that his life is in as much jeopardy as his younger tool. Should the verdict be guilty, there is every reason to believe that a dramatic scene will result, and Welter's actions in the dock show that he has lost the loyalty that he entertained towards his alleged companion in guilt, and it is believed that he will stand up in the dock before sentence is pronounced and relate in detail the whole story of the tragedy.

Mr. Osler, shortly after the opening of the proceedings on Saturday, announced that he intended to call certain lady witnesses today for cogent and sufficient reasons. These witnesses were Mrs. M. Griffin of Gravesend, who saw blood on Welter's face when he arrived at the house of Charles Welter the day of the tragedy, and two first cousins of Hendershott—Mrs. Emily McConnell of Ingersoll and Mrs. Ann French of Putnam, to whom Hendershott made admissions with respect to insurance and the removal of some person whom he intended to insure. Their evidence was taken and proved most important.

The earlier part of the day was taken up with the production of corroborative evidence as to the fallen tree and its surroundings at the time of the tragedy. Walter Wardell spoke of the great quantity of blood at the crotch of the tree. He also had seen the imprint of a bloody finger on a beech sapling near the butt of the tree, and on an old stump 48 feet from the stump of the cut tree.

Neil Campbell, the man who found the blood-stained ax concealed under the root of a tree, identified the weapon produced.

Henry Cane, who was present when the ax was found, compared the chopping on the skid of the tree with a chopping he made with the ax, and found them exactly similar. There was a notch in the blade of the ax, which was discernible in both choppings. His testimony satisfied the jury that the ax was used in felling the tree under which Welter was lying.

Four stalwart constables carried a huge section of the tree into court. The jury examined the knot under which Hendershott's head was lying when found, and also the cutting with the marks of a notched ax blade thereon.

When Albert Chivers was called, Hendershott for the first time became interested in the case. Chivers saw the elder prisoner on the New Sarum Hill, nine miles east of the scene of the tragedy, at 12.45, noon, on the day of the killing. The Crown claims that from the time Hendershott left home, ostensibly for Eden, until he was seen at New Sarum, he had plenty of time to visit the woods and drive to where Chivers met him.

The Crown proved that the blood-stained ax belonged to Hendershott. Jeriah Fortier, a Middlemarch jobber, made the handle which fitted the ax. He identified it by a bit of bark on the end, but said he could tell his own goods by the feel.

The first female witness called was Mrs. Duncan Hendershott, sister-in-law of the prisoner. She washed the outer and undershirts of the dead man two days after the killing. There was a quantity of blood on both. The shirts were produced. Blood stains were still visible on them, and were pointed out to the jury. This is important, as indicating that deceased must have been struck while standing up. The defence will claim that the blood got on the shirt when the undertaker pulled it over the head of the dead man.

Mrs. Emily McConnell, a pleasant-faced woman, who lives at Ingersoll, and who affirmed instead of kissing the Book, was given a "little of her own way." She commenced to tell at length of a conversation between her husband and John Hendershott last May with reference to insurance, when the defence objected to the admission of the evidence, and the court rose for an hour, pending the consulting of authorities.

When the court resumed, Mrs. Martin Griffin of Gravesend, one of the witnesses, who, it is alleged, an attempt was made to tamper with, gave sensational evidence. Mrs. Griffin was attired in a brown stuff dress and brown hat, and wore an astrachan jacket. It was evident that it was with much reluctance she gave her testimony, but her truthfulness was manifest to the jury.

Mrs. Griffin was visiting at the house of Charles Welter the day of the tragedy. It was here that the prisoner Welter first ran with the alarm. Mrs. Griffin noticed blood on his face, and when she called his attention to it, Welter went to a bedroom and washed his face. To Mrs. Griffin, Welter said that Hendershott had been killed by a branch of the tree striking his head.

Mr. Macdonald secured an admission from the witness that Welter was crying and had his hands up to his face.

The defence claims that Welter's hands got blood on them while he was handling the body, and that the blood was subsequently transferred to his face.

Thomas Casey was called to prove contradictory stories by Welter with regard to the tragedy. Welter told Casey that he and Hendershott had felled a tree, and the latter had run to get his watch off a stump and been struck by the tree.

Jailer Moore identified the watch produced as one found in Welter's possession. This watch belonged to the dead man. One belonging to Welter was found in Hendershott's pocket. It is claimed that after killing Hendershott Welter robbed the body. After his arrest Welter was asked about the watch, and he said that he owned it, having traded another one for it at the Penwarden House in St. Thomas.

W. R. Jackson, jeweler, testified that he sold the watch to W. Hendershott in September last.

Frank Hobson was called, and testified that he loaned Welter $130 in January, 1894, and it was paid back in September. John Hendershott was the endorser on the note. The object of this testimony did not transpire.

Miss Edith Welter, cousin of the younger prisoner, Welter, and the affianced bride of the dead man, proved an important witness. Miss Welter was dressed entirely in mourning for her would-have-been husband. Her features were partly concealed by a black veil. Witness had several talks with Welter and Hendershott after the killing, with a view of connecting Hendershott with a knowledge of the intended crime. Miss Welter was examined as to what passed between the prisoners when they met for the first time. The day after the tragedy a telegram had been sent to John Hendershott at Eden to the effect that William was dead. Hendershott told Miss Welter that he did not know whether it was his brother or nephew who had been killed until he reached St. Thomas.

Dr. E. W. Gustin, the coroner, proved the depositions made by Hendershott and Welter at the inquest. Counsel for prisoners objected to the reading of the statements, the ground taken being that the testimony was privileged, as before giving their evidence the prisoners were not notified that anything they said might be used in evidence against them.

Mr. Osler replied. He quoted several cases in which it has been decided that depositions sworn to before a coroner could be introduced, although no warning was given the parties making them, since they were not then under arrest. The prisoners made no claim of privileges, but gave their testimony voluntarily.

His Lordship reserved his decision until Monday.

It is not likely the objection will be allowed.

Mrs. Emily McConnell, who is the wife of the assistant chief of police at Ingersoll, was again put in the box, and swore that when Hendershott was visiting at her house on May 30th, 1894, he said his father-in-law wanted him to insure his life and pay the dues. "I was a big fool I didn't," he added, "because I would have had only six months' dues to pay and I would have got all that money." Continuing the discussion, Hendershott told the woman he thought he would go into the insurance business; lots of people didn't mind who they left their money to, provided someone paid their premiums for them.

Hendershott said he would insure several persons, and surely one of them might die. "But if he doesn't," said witness. "Well, then, I can get rid of one, and that will pay for the others."

The evidence of this witness caused a pronounced sensation in court. The spectators had considerable amusement with the witness, who is a woman with a will of her own. She was cross-examined at length, and finally became excited and refused point-blank to answer any questions unless counsel ceased badgering her. Her story remained unshaken, however.

Witness said she had known John Hendershott ever since she was born. She declined to say whether or not she was a relative of the prisoner until ordered to do so by the judge; then she admitted she was a first cousin.

Mrs. Annie French, a sister of the last witness, who lives in the township of West Oxford, was called, and swore positively that Hendershott told her last May that he didn't intend to work hard, that he would put insurance on some person's life and get rid of him, and get the insurance.

Both the sisters declined to take the oath, but affirmed.

The defence endeavored to score a point from this fact. Witness stated that she had never taken an oath on the Bible, and never would. She did not think the kissing of the Bible made the story any more truthful.

George Delacey, a printer in The Times newspaper office, also gave sensational evidence against Hendershott. Last fall he had a conversation with Hendershott, who was looking for J. W. Cook, an insurance agent. He said that he had two policies on the life of W. H. Hendershott, that he wanted to break a colt for him, and if he broke the colt the colt would break his neck. Hendershott also said if anything happened he would get the money.

To show that Hendershott was in financially straitened circumstances Albert E. Futcher was called and swore that on Oct. 18, 1894, the prisoner borrowed $250 from him at 7 per cent. interest. This is the money with which the insurance premiums were paid.

Still pursuing the Hendershott branch of the case the Crown called Dawson W. Healy. That Hendershott had a guilty knowledge of what was taking place the Crown sought to prove by Healy's evidence.

When the telegram came announcing William Hendershott's death, the prisoner said he didn't think it was his brother, but his nephew, that he had sent the two young men to the woods. Mr. Atkinson, a bystander, remarked: "Do you think a tree fell upon him?" and he replied, "I don't know of any other way."

RESIGNATION OF ROSEBERY

Friend and Foe Anxious to Avert It.

THE WEEK IN BRITISH POLITICS.

The Measure Opposed Because It Favors the Tenant Too Strongly—Improvements at Dover and Gibraltar Included in the Naval Program—400,000 Boot and Shoe Men On Strike.

London, March 11.—The persistent reports that Lord Rosebery is contemplating retirement from office, together with the announcement of Mr. Arthur Wellesly Peel's intention to resign the Speakership of the House of Commons, has relieved Parliamentary circles of the dulness which has prevailed for the past week. Lord Rosebery's capacity for work is doubted by nobody, but this faculty has unquestionably been seriously affected by the recurrence of his insomnia. This is, with him, an old complaint, which on a former occasion caused him to refuse to accept office. A judicious system of living banished the complaint and restored him to his normal condition. Now overwork and an attack of influenza have reproduced the ailments which incapacitated him before, and with the addition of extreme nervousness it has become necessary for him to take a prolonged season of rest. Lord Rosebery's colleagues, even those who before his illness were intensely hostile to him, now sympathize with him, and one and all decline to accede to the taking of any step which would lead to political complications. Even his political enemies, the Tories, are disposed to await his recovery as long as public convenience will permit. His physicians cannot express an opinion with certainty as to what period will be sufficient to restore him to health, but they are hopeful that a month's abstinence from work and care will will enable him to resume his duties.

In regard to a new Speaker in the event of the resignation of Mr. Peel wild surmises are afloat, and various names are suggested for his successor. Among the most prominent ones are the Right-Hon. Campbell-Bannerman, Secretary of State for War, Robert Reid, Mr. John F. Moulton, Sir Julian Goldsmidt and the Right Hon. Leonard H. Courtney. The lobbies of the House of Commons have been filled with members to an extent very unusual, and the succession to the Speakership has been almost the sole topic of discussion. It is generally admitted that Mr. Campbell-Bannerman possesses all of the requisite advantages for the position, among them tact, an unvarying good temper, a judicially-trained mind and long experience with the rules and forms of the House, but his great wealth and the probabilities that in the near future he will come to the front as a political leader, make it seem doubtful that he would accept the place. The Speaker's salary of £5000 year with an official residence might be alluring to many evenly moderately rich men, but to him this compensation would be no inducement. Neither Sir Robert Reid nor Mr. Moulton have obtained sufficient parliamentary distinction to enable them to obtain the place and the post when it shall become vacant really lies between Sir Julian Goldsmidt and Mr. Leonard Courtney, though the latter, although a Liberal, was a deserter from Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule policy, and is intensely disliked by the Radicals. This state of affairs has been taken into consideration by The Westminster Gazette, which in a strong article in his favor recommends the Ministerial party to overlook his unionism and elevate him to the position. Of all the candidates thus far suggested, Sir Julian Goldsmidt really has the best chance of success.

This week the Government have produced their great measure of the session. No one expects the Welsh Disestablishment Bill to become a law, and the same remark applies to the Local Veto. The Conciliation Bill, for settling labor disputes, is voluntary, not compulsory, in principle. But the Irish Land Bill may turn out a measure of great importance. It is based largely on the recommendations of the committee appointed last year, and contains concessions to the Unionists, in the hope that the Irish landlords in the Upper Chamber may be conciliated. Nevertheless, the bill embodies proposals which were once repudiated by Mr. Gladstone, and which the present Lord Chancellor denounced as revolutionary. Politics, however, travel so fast nowadays that these are no drawbacks, and for the sake of peace, and to get rid of an endless subject of disputation, the Unionists display no hostility to the measure, and will possibly accept it.

The Standard, it is true, runs up an alarm signal respecting the fifth clause, which relates to improvements, and calls upon the Opposition to divide on the second reading. This is, however, of minor importance, because the real fight on the bill will arise in committee. It is, however, significant that The Standard makes these militant suggestions with a view to the future actions of the Lords, as though the Peers had already decided materially to alter the clauses of the measure dealing with improvements.

The provisions of the bill dealing with improvements are exceedingly drastic, and give the tenant more advantages than the landlord in the estate. Every improvement is virtually assumed to be the tenant's, unless the contrary is established. In truth, land legislation for Ireland has now reached the stage of the tenant's right being more valuable than the landlord's interest.

While the Opposition are as a whole not unfavorable to the bill, the Irish factions are divided in opinion respecting it. The orthodox, or anti-Parnellites, accept the measure with enthusiasm, and their newspaper organ declares it will deal a death blow to landlordism. These views are sufficient to provoke the Parnellites to adopt the opposite view. At present they content themselves by saying the measure is a mere demonstration, but it is doubtful whether or not Mr. Redmond and his friends have the courage to maintain their resistance. In the course of Mr. Morley's description of the chaotic condition of Irish land legislation, he stated that the cost of the land commission since 1881 had exceeded a million sterling, while the remissions secured under the fair rent clause but slightly exceeded that sum.

It is extremely difficult to get at the exact merits of the big strike and lock-out in the boot and shoe trade, which begins to-day, and by the end of next week will reach a climax, involving some 400,000 operatives, not including great numbers of women and apprentices. From talks with labor members of Parliament I gather, however, that there is considerably less to be said on the men's side than is usual. They all along resented the introduction of improved machinery, and finally resolved upon a demand that a limit be fixed to its output, on the economic theory that this would raise the cost of production, and their earnings as well. Of course, the theory is wild nonsense, and the men's own leaders spent a good deal of time in trying to show them so, but in vain. At the last moment they consented to arbitration, but the masters now say that there is nothing to arbitrate.

The decision of the Government to begin the active work of creating a great harbor at Dover is of more than ordinary interest. The plans for the project, now many years old, have been always talked about, and never seriously taken up. France has done such engineering and military wonders along her channel coast in the past decade that further neglect on the part of England would have been criminal, from a defensive point of view, but such a place of refuge will be even more valuable from a peaceful standpoint, by reducing to a minimum the perils and calamities which now make the winter traffic in the crowded and tempestuous channel such a terrible lottery.

The provisions respecting harbor accommodation at Gibraltar indicate that the Ministry has no intention to follow the advice of Laird, Clowes and other naval authorities and withdraw from the Mediterranean. It is clear that they mean to make Gibraltar the base for operations in that sea. The story current this week that England shortly intends to withdraw from Cyprus requires confirmation. That island is of no value and possesses no harbor capable of holding a man-of-war. Its appropriation by Mr. Disraeli was a wanton, theatrical coup, and from a military point of view it possesses no advantage. Nevertheless, national pride will hardly allow the abandonment of any position, however valueless, in the Mediterranean, especially as the withdrawal from Cyprus would throw the country back into the arms of such a depraved Government as Turkey.

THE YANKS' REFUSAL TO PAY.

British Papers Commenting on the Delay in Paying Sealers' Claims

New York, March 10.—The Sun's London cable says: Some provincial newspapers have been commenting with considerable asperity upon what they regard as American sharp practice over the Paris-Behring award. All are possessed with the idea that the British lion has been fooled, and think it is time he began growling. The Newcastle Journal, a Tory newspaper not without influence, yesterday said: "It goes against the Yankee grain either to hand over money illegally obtained, or money due by contract, or the award of arbitrators. What with being kept out of our Alabama surplus money, paying for the costly Behring Sea inquiry, and still waiting for compensation for the seizure of British sealing vessels, this country may well regard American arbitration as a kind of 'heads I win, tails you lose' game, at which we should in future refuse to play without some guarantee against being deceived by a rigmarole of phrases and legal verbiage into fresh losses and damages in addition to those which first led to the controversies in relation to the Behring Sea fisheries and the Canadian fisheries long ago."

BELLEVILLE, MONDAY, MAR. 11.

PROPERLY APPRECIATED.

The Hamilton Spectator of the 4th inst. properly appreciates the conduct of Dr. Carman, in the course he has pursued in reference to his charges against the Government. It says:

"Rev. Dr. Carman publicly accused the Dominion Government of paying for masses for the repose of the soul of the late Sir John Thompson, and wrathfully protested against the supposed expenditure. The Premier, in a courteous letter to Dr. Carman, assured him that he had been misinformed, and that his accusation was groundless. For a week or more Dr. Carman remained silent. Compelled at last by references in the press, to speak, he publishes a letter full of the gall of partizanship, in which he meanly insinuates that the Premier lies. The fiery Doctor thus repels the charge that he attacked the Government:

"Has it come to this, that a man can say nothing in defence of country or liberty without attacking the Government? In such a case the question arises, which should get out of the way, the country or the Government?"

"It will thus be seen that, in Dr. Carman's opinion, he has a moral right to circulate slanders against public men whether there is or is not any ground for such slanders. How did such a man come to be General Superintendent of the great Methodist Church in Canada?"

That is a question which has puzzled many a well-wisher of Methodism.

The Baptist Journal, published in Toronto, accepts the Premier's statement as an emphatic denial. Dr. Carman, however, says it is only a half-way denial, and again vented his splenetic feelings in his missionary sermon in this city yesterday.

The Montreal Gazette, of the 27th ult., seems to have read correctly between the lines when it says:

"Dr. Carman has written another letter in connection with the Roman Catholic mass he said the Government paid for in connection with Sir John Thompson's death, but which Sir Mackenzie Bowell says the Government did not pay for. Dr. Carman, who seems to have been deceived by the Ottawa correspondent of a local Liberal paper, is apparently quite as much annoyed that his indignation should have no real justification as he was at the supposititious incident that called it forth. He should wrestle with the old Adam within him and learn to take a correction manfully if not with grace."

The advise is useless, "the old Adam" is altogether too strong in him whenever he has a party aim in view.

Here is another evidence of the recklessness of that truly "religious" journal the Montreal Witness. If there is a lying correspondent in Canada he is to be found connected with the Witness staff. Nor is the staff of the editorial department any better. The best evidence of that is the number of times the Witness proprietors have had to make ample and abject apologies and retractions to public men for attacks upon their characters. This is a virtue we have not seen in Dr. Carman, yet it is difficult to say what he would do were he taken into court and asked to substantiate his statements or pay the penalties.

The Mail-Empire of the 16th inst. says:—

It was the Montreal Witness that invented the story that Sir Mackenzie Bowell had spent public money in masses for the late Premier. The Witness is read by Protestants, and no doubt it was regarded as good play from the party point of view to represent Sir Mackenzie as expending our taxes on a Roman Catholic ceremony, even though the statement was untrue. Now the Montreal Witness is using Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper. Sir Charles delivered a speech in Toronto to the Young Conservatives a few weeks ago. According to the Witness the Minister of Justice "blurted out before company the other day at Toronto the whole truth about Sir John and his reluctant acceptance of protection. These," the Witness says, "are Sir Charles Hibbert's words: "Sir John was timid unto death of protection, had to be bullied into it, committed to it by others. But when he thought it grown he used it as a bridge to reach the power he liked to wield. And when his hosts had followed over they cried, 'Behold the bridge Sir John has built.' But some of us know the work to be of other handicraftsmen.'" The moral drawn from the alleged statement by Sir Charles is that the Minister is full of envy and spite and that Sir John Macdonald was a first-class fraud. Now, a close examination of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's speech shows that no such statement, and nothing like it or in any way approaching it, was ever made by him. It is possible that—as in the story about Sir Mackenzie Bowell, so in this latest fabrication—some wise party purpose is to be served. But whatever may be the object of the invention, the thing is very shocking. By many of us the hope had been entertained that the press of Canada had risen to a higher plane, and that we had seen the last of misrepresentation. But the old Adam it seems cannot be suppressed; more's the pity.

The "hope entertained" is vain, so long as such journals as the Witness exists, and such correspondents as now fill its columns are allowed to slander and belie their neighbors, and there are such men as Dr. Carman to believe all they say.

Literary Notes.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

Among all the features announced for early publication in the magazines, none is awaited with a livelier curiosity than the Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc, of which the first instalment will appear in the April Number of Harper's. The only story of a noble life which comes to us under oath, the only one which comes from the witness-stand, Jeanne's biography—although it deals with a flawless character worn (like the jewel in the toad's head) as an incomparable adornment by the wicked est of centuries—is not to be regarded of fiction. It is history in the main; and as for the piquant details that have been added by one who is feigned to have been "her page and secretary," these particulars are from the hand of "the most popular of living American magazine writers"—whoever he or she may be.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

During March a series of articles, dealing with subjects that principally concern the people of California, but that are destined to arouse interest throughout the country at large, will be published in Harper's Weekly. The first of these articles is entitled California's Great Grievance; the second is devoted to the subject of reform in San Francisco, and a third to the production of gold. Their author is Julian Ralph, the famous correspondent, whose investigations have been conducted at the request of the Weekly. Another series of the first importance, the publication of which has just commenced, will contain the instructive results of a tour of the world, undertaken by the Transportation Commission of the Field Columbian Museum, for the purpose of collecting information, and, as far as possible, exhibits. This Commission will not confine its attention to railways, but will embrace within the scope of its investigation the appliances both by sea and land by which men in all countries, and on all the waterways of the world, have attempted to solve the question of transportation.

HARPER'S BAZAR.

In the immediate future Harper's Bazar will publish elegant dinner gowns from Paris, drawn by Sandoz, and beautiful wraps will be given to suit the opening of the spring season. Also papers on house-furnishing, from standpoints both artistic and economical; a short series on charities in general, and the favorite charities of certain well-known society women. A few very practical talks on laundry-work may be expected, and one or two articles on gardening.

The Premier and Kingston.

(Kingston News.)

We have no means of knowing how much truth there may be in the rumor that Sir Mackenzie Bowell might be prevailed upon to become the Conservative candidate for the representation of Kingston in the House of Commons. Of one thing, however, there can be no possible doubt. If he should intimate his willingness to accept a nomination at the hands of the Kingston Conservatives it would be tendered to him unanimously, and with the utmost cordiality and enthusiasm. The city which gave to Canada the creation and genius of the Liberal-Conservative party — the city which gave to Ontario its present Lieutenant-Governor and present Premier—is not incapable of conferring honor even upon the man of destiny to whom the conduct of the affairs of the Dominion is now entrusted, while it would feel distinctly honored if the lustre to which it was so long accustomed could return to it, and its representative in Parliament were once more no less a personage than the first Minister of the Crown. The old Limestone City, it is true, was not the early home of the present chieftain, as it was that of Sir John Macdonald; but it stands ready to accept him with almost equal pride as another "Bay of Quinte boy," and as the idol since Confederation of North Hastings, which may be regarded as part of its tributary territory. If he could be induced to accept the nomination, he has but to speak the word. Mr. Metcalfe, whose prospects are such that he does not regard himself as permanently wedded to parliamentary life, certainly would not stand in the way. The evanescent rift in the local Conservative ranks, whether it be due to personal or religious divergences, would instantly disappear. Under a leader whose name is synonymous with candor and fair dealing an invincible host would arise. By Protestants and Roman Catholics alike, among whom he is held in equal and unbounded respect, he would be supported with equal zeal and satisfaction. The polling of the full Conservative vote of this rather wayward burgh would be placed beyond peradventure, and the possession of a citadel of no small strategic importance would be assured before the battle became general. Come on, Sir Mackenzie! With or without you, we mean to win; but in prosperity or adversity, in power or in opposition, we fain would make you our member.

IT LOOKS LIKE A SESSION

Opinion in Ottawa Is That the House Will Meet.

THE 28TH OF MARCH IS MENTIONED

Greenway By Procrastination May Throw Action On the Manitoba School Question Over For a Year—Compensation To Injured On the Intercolonial—The Real Promoters of the "Butter Bonus."

Ottawa, March 10.—The impression is gaining ground that any conclusion the Government may reach in the Manitoba school appeal will not be brought before the Provincial Legislature at its present session. There is no power by which the federal authorities can compel Premier Greenway and his colleagues to act promptly. If they decline, therefore, to ask the Legislature to formally pass on any remedial order which may be made, the question will go over for a year, as the Dominion Parliament will not have jurisdiction to act until the Provincial Legislature has put itself on record as declining to do anything. Meanwhile, the current of opinion has again set in strongly in favor of the holding of a session before dissolution, and there are those here who still insist that a session is within the range of possibility. Some go so far as to suggest March 28 for the meeting of the Houses. It is only a question of a few days now before the matter will finally be set at rest.

Hon. Mr. Angers, Minister of Agriculture, has received an important communication to the effect that the United States have consented to relax their embargo on Canadian cattle so as to allow them to pass in transit from Island Pond to Portland, Maine, for shipment to England. It will, of course, follow that Canadian cattle shipped from an American port will have the status of American cattle on arriving in England. The privilege now granted could well have been conceded long ago. It is thought here that it may be precursory of the entire removal of the quarantine embargo by the United States on Canadian cattle. The United States authorities will require the certificate of Professor McEachran of Montreal as to the good health of cattle shipped through their territory.

On Dec. 18, 1890, an accident occurred on the Intercolonial Railway near Levis by which three persons were killed and many wounded. The accident was due to a defective axle on one of the cars. The Government were exonerated, but feeling that an obligation devolved on them to compensate the sufferers, Parliament last session voted $12,000 for the purpose. Thirty-seven claims in all have been filed, and yesterday an order in council was passed approving of an equitable method of distributing this amount.

The Reform press has not failed to characterize the action of the Government in making advances to farmers and dairymen on export butter shipments as an election dodge. A reference to the report of the proceedings of the House Committee on Agriculture last session shows that a resolution urging the Government to take steps to give Canadian butter a better status in the British markets was moved by Major McLennan and seconded by Mr. McMillan, the Liberal member for South Huron.

The appointment of J. A. Valin, barrister of this city, to the Nipissing judgeship, is a tribute to the growth of French-Canadian influence in Eastern Ontario, for in this electoral division the Dominion lists show over 8000 voters, more than half of whom are French-Canadians. It, therefore, became imperatively necessary to appoint a man thoroughly conversant with the French language, and to the extent that he is a native and to the language born, Mr. Valin has an advantage over Mr. P. H. Drayton of Toronto, who was a close second for the appointment.

Good progress is being made with printing the Dominion voters' lists. Of a total of 202 constituencies in Canada, lists for 62 are completed, 38 are out in proof form, six, viz. Toronto East, Centre and West, North, East and West York are being printed in Toronto, seven in Montreal, while the remainder are in hand at the Bureau.

A return published by the superintendent of insurance shows that eight chartered companies have ceased to do new business in life insurance in Canada, and their deposits with the Government, ranging from $90,000 to $150,000, are applicable to the discharge of policy obligations. Six new companies have registered and are permitted to do life insurance business in Canada on the assessment plan. They are the Canadian Order of the Woodmen of the World, Colonial Mutual Life Association, Commercial Travellers' Mutual Benefit Society, Grand Council of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association of Canada, Home Life Association of Canada and Provincial Provident Institution. There are now 82 insurance companies licensed to do business in Canada, in life, fire, accident, guarantee, plate glass, burglary and steam boiler insurance.

Through the efforts of Major McLennan, M.P., John Gaines of Maxville, who was recently sentenced to the Central Prison for eight months for stealing a coat, has been liberated. Gaines' family, consisting of his wife and several young children, were left without means of support, and the man himself is in a poor state of health, being in danger of losing his sight if kept any longer in jail. A petition for his release was sent to Mr. McLennan, who presented it to the Minister of Justice, and made a strong appeal. He was successful, and Gaines is at liberty.

The Marquis of Ripon, Secretary for the Colonies, has ordered the authorities at Bermuda to return to Capt. J. H. Dixon, master of the Nova Scotia schooner Emma S., the Dominion red ensign which was confiscated by them in January last. The first intimation which Capt. Dixon had that he had offended the Bermuda authorities came to him in the shape of a letter from Mr. Alison, Colonial Secretary of the island, informing him that he had contravened the Imperial Merchant Shipping Act of 1889 in flying the Dominion flag outside of Canadian waters, and had thereby rendered himself liable to heavy penalties. Gen. Lyons, Governor and commander-in-chief of the island, notified the home Government of the action that had been taken, and transmitted a copy of a letter received from Capt. Dixon, in which he expressed regret at having erred in hoisting the official flag of Canada, and stating that, as he was in entire ignorance of the law, it was obvious that he had no intention to contravene or evade it. Capt. Dixon added that his vessel had been using this flag for about two years; that he had visited the different British West India islands, and at Bridgetown had lain near two of Her Majesty's ships, who had not noticed the alleged infringement of the law. General Lyons apprised the Colonial office of what had been done, with a view presumably that British men-of-war should, in future, be as vigilant as the Bermuda authorities had been. The answer which he received was doubtless not expected. The Canadian Government had in the meantime heard of the manner in which Captain Dixon had been treated, and had made representations to the Home Government. The result was a pretty strong despatch to the Bermuda authorities, instructing them that under special warrant of Feb. 2, 1892, vessels registered in the Dominion may use the red ensign of the fleet with the Canadian arms on it. They were instructed, therefore, to return to Captain Dixon his flag, which had been taken in error, although he did not appear to have known under what authority he was entitled to fly it.

Spooner Will Not Contest Frontenac

Kingston, March 9.—Chas. N. Spooner, the nominee of the Liberal-Conservatives of Frontenac, has resigned.

NEWFOUNDLAND'S DESTINY.

Union With Canada Is Her Only Hope—Confederation Becoming Popular.

New York, March 11.—A correspondent of The Tribune at St. John's, Nfld., decries the idea of annexation with the United States, and believes it is impracticable even if the people were unanimously in favor of it. In reality, however, he says they are far from unanimous on that subject, and even if an overwhelming majority were in favor of annexation, they firmly believe that England would never permit one of her colonies to break loose and unite with another state; and that any movement in that direction would be promptly and sternly checked. The geographical position of this island forbids such a transference. As a naval station, it is without a rival in North America. The power that possesses it holds the key of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. To permit its occupation by a foreign power would be to destroy the safety of the rising Dominion of Canada, and to establish a standing menace close to her shores. No British statesman dare countenance such a step. Annexation therefore is far outside the range of practical politics and to agitate for it would be mere waste of time and strength.

The pressing problem is how to avert bankruptcy. To the solution of this Sir William has to address himself, and that promptly, for quarter day is at hand. What is to be done? A loan, even if obtainable, would only delay the evil hour for a short time. There appears to be but one door of hope—union with Canada. Personally, Sir William has always been in favor of confederation, and there can hardly be a doubt that he will now bend all his energies to consummate a union. Confederation is by no means populer among the masses, but gradually they will learn that they have only "Hobson's choice." Canada will willingly receive the colony with all its liabilities, and endeavor to develop its resources. The Legislature stands adjourned till April 2, in order to permit the bye-elections to be held. When it meets the probability is that a deputation will be sent to Canada to negotiate terms of union.

SOUTH VICTORIA NOMINATIONS

Fairbairn, M.P., Again the Choice of the Tories—George McHugh His Opponent.

Lindsay, Ont., March 9.—The Liberal-Conservative convention for South Victoria was held Saturday afternoon in the Town Hall. Mr. Charles Fairbairn, the present member, received the nomination.

At the adjourned convention of the Liberal party held to-day, Mr. George McHugh received the nomination to contest South Victoria. Mr. J. D. Edgar, M.P., addressed the electors at the close of the convention.

WANT JUDGE McHUGH TO RUN.

North Essex Conservatives Tender Him the Nomination.

Windsor, Ont., March 11.—The Conservative convention for North Essex met Saturday. Three names were placed before the convention, Sol White, D. B. Odette and Judge McHugh. The vote resulted as follows: Odette, 49; White, 17; McHugh, 78. Drs. Carney, Coventry and Casgrain were appointed to wait upon Judge McHugh and tender him the nomination.

Dryden's Brother-in-Law Nominated

Whitby, Ont., March 10.—The Liberals of South Ontario met in convention here on Saturday to nominate a candidate to contest this constituency in the coming Dominion elections. One hundred and sixty appointed delegates were in attendance from all parts of the riding, and the Music Hall was comfortably filled, a number of ladies being present. Mr. Leonard Burnett, yeoman, of Greenbank, Reach Township, a brother-in-law of Hon. John Dryden, was the choice. Speeches were delivered by the candidate, Hon. John Dryden, Messrs. F. L. Fowke, Oshawa; Charles King, Whitby; William Ross, Port Perry; L. K. Murton, Oshawa, and R. J. Mackie, Oshawa. William Smith, M.P., is the present member.

JUMPED FROM A TRAIN.

Stunned by His Leap, a Markham Man Lay on the Track Till Killed

London, Ont., March 11.—The London bankers' hockey team played a match in Woodstock Saturday night, and while the train on which the team was returning home was passing the East London station about 4 o'clock this morning, one of the members of the team, W. B. Carmichael, a clerk in the Bank of Toronto, was seen to step out on to the platform of the car. It is supposed that for the purpose of reaching home more quickly, and miscalculating the speed of the train, he jumped, and was rendered unconscious by the fall. His body lay on the track and was knocked off by the eastbound express. The injured man was discovered about 5.30 a.m., and removed to the hospital, where he afterwards died from the injuries sustained. Carmichael's home is in Markham, Ont.

10,000 SALVATIONISTS COMING

General Booth Confident of Establishing His Colony in Canada.

New York, March 11.—Harold Frederic cables from London to The Times: General Booth has returned filled with enthusiastic confidence in the future of the Salvation Army and of its industrial projects in Canada. He seems to have more doubts about the United States. About the Dominion, though, he has no reservations. He believes that he is going to astonish the globe by the magnitude of his achievements there, and apparently his plans are all cut and dried for beginning an exodus of emigrants from this side which will be one of the most remarkable of our time. He is very sanguine, too, about keeping these 10,000 colonists in Canada after he has got them there.

ACQUITTED OF MURDER.

Lucila Lacey of St. Catharines Found Innocent of the Poisoning.

St. Catharines, Ont., March 11.—Luella Lacey, 14 years of age, was acquitted of the serious charge of poisoning Frank Wilbur, the 4 months old son of T. Pearson of North Grimsby. M. C. Cameron of Toronto conducted the Crown's case. E. A. Lancaster represented the accused. The jury was out only a few minutes, and the crowd cheered when the verdict was given.

Patron Activity in Manitoba

In every constituency in Manitoba the Patrons have put up a man. In nearly all cases the Patron candidates are ex-Liberals, and The Free Press points out that Conservatives are goint to benefit if the Patrons and Liberals do not soon join forces.

If Hugh John Macdonald declines to be the Conservative candidate for Winnipeg it is almost certain that Hugh Sutherland will be the choice.

The Novel of the Future.

Alphonse Daudet, on the subject of the novel of the future, says: What shall be the novel, the literature of the future? To reply to this question one would need to have a famous pythoness up his sleeve. In the first place, what will the France of to-morrow be? Will she even have a literature? Everything is to be feared at an epoch when the academy amuses itself in deforming the national orthography, when the high priests of the dictionary threatens to become its murderers. In the special case of the novel—admitting that the French of the future shall continue to read and write novels—its need of truth, of exactness, seems to me to carry it from day to day towards history. I mean, of course, petty history, for me the most interesting of all; dairies, memoirs, monographs.

BARBARITY OF TO-DAY.

WHERE LITTLE EXPECTED, IT IS TOO OFTEN FOUND.

Nearly All of the Non-European Nations Naturally Barbarous—Except in the Case of the Civilized Races It Is Human to be Merciless to Enemies.

Some incidents of the war in China and the recent alleged massacre of Armenian insurgents by the Turkish troops call attention to the barbarity that still characterizes the half-civilized nations of the world, says The Philadelphia Times.

The visitor to a royal prince and ruler of one of the provinces of a great state, who is charmed by the courteous manner and evident culture of his host, finds it hard to believe that this polite gentleman a short time before had ordered the heart of a man who had displeased him to be torn out of his body in his presence, but such may be the fact. Over 2,000 years ago these people were possessed of a literature and a general civilization fully equal to that of the Jews whom they conquered and the Greeks who conquered them.

The Turkish troops are a fine body of men, and when one sees them passing in review in a state of perfect drill and discipline he does not consider that these men in battle rarely listen to the prayer for quarter, while the splendidly-mounted Arnaut and Circassian irregulars who ride by at the head of the column are ready to burn villages and kill women and children without compunction or remorse.

If we turn to the Chinese we are struck by the apparent incompatibility of their scholarly competitions and general mental superiority with their cruelties practised upon malefactors. Their barbarity in war and inhumanity to prisoners are notorious, while the atrocities that infest the interior and the pirates that swarm on their rivers and sea coast are almost incredible.

The traveller of Singapore and the islands of the Malay archipelago is brought into frequent contact with a dark-eyed, quiet-voiced people of great commercial acuteness, whose deportment would befit any European drawing-room, and he may never be reminded that these are only the better class of the Malay race. Their piratical proas were long the terror of those summer seas. Great Britain's rule has done much for the millions of India's population. Before the English took hold, a man's life in India was worth far less than that of a sacred cow or monkey, and the hideous slaughters of the mutiny of 1857 show that the old murderous instincts of these people are only held in abeyance by the strong hand of this foreign domination.

In seeking to extend their conquests to the northwest of their Indian possessions, the English have met a race of mountaineers that have forced them back repeatedly. But in the character of this Afghan (or Pathan of the Indian frontier) some of the best attributes of a vigorous manhood are marred by a bloodthirstiness that knows no pity, and is qualified more often in his family and tribal feuds than in battle with a foreign foe. This man never means to wound, but always to kill, and makes sure of this by his habit of turning the blade of his yataghan in the body of the victim after thrusting.

Lying to the north of Afghanistan are the Khanates of Central Asia—Khokand, Bokhara and Khiva, which, with their surrounding deserts are embraced in the general designation of Turkestan. The dangerous fanaticism of their Mohammedan populations has been a deterent to the most adventuresome modern travellers. With hardly more than a single exception they strayed away until Russia penetrated the country with its armies, and made it possible, although still hazardous, to travel it.

The wild Turcoman freebooters who swept caspian deserts on their untiring horses, took captives only for slavery and ransom, and accounted for the defeated enemies of the khan to whom they may owe a temporary allegiance by the heads rolled upon the ground before him, and for which they received the stipulated head money. The man who had disobeyed a law, or was obnoxious to the khan, was led, bound, through the streets of the city, and at any point that suited him the executioner would pull his head back and cut his throat, leaving the body where it fell for a day or more, as a reminder to the passers-by of their possible fate. And yet the Uzbergs, on the banks of the Oxus and Yaxartes, most skilful farmers, and the peop[illegible] these cities excel in the manufacture of certain fabrics and as artificers in some branches.

Of the immense Tartar hordes that roam over Siberia and Mongolia, there is little to be said in this conection. They differ in character, language and religion, but there is a strong family resemblance pervading the whole mass. They are too stolid and unimpressionable to be actively cruel. But they have the indifference to life common to most nomadic peoples.

Turkish troops are by no means all Turks, although almost exclusively Mohammedan. The population of the Turkish empire comprises many races, possessing their own languages and religions, but all standing upon substantially the same plane of civilization. They are often hostile to each other, and many are impatient of the Ottoman or any rule. Those who are nominally Christians are not always distinguished for the virtues that we associate with that belef, and are, as well as their Mohammedan neighbors, often turbulent and difficult to control. The Turk in these days is individually rather good-humored, and not disposed to cruelty and vindictiveness unless aroused by undue opposition to his sovereignty. It is the Arnaut, Circassian or Kurd of his army who is distinguished for cold-blooded cruelty. The Government is contending for its existence with the elements of disruption that surround it. It strikes hard, knowing that the people understand only the law of force and terror, and its soldiers give no quarter, expecting and receiving none if worsted by the insurgents. As for the Bedouin of Arabia and Mesopotamia—the first bearer of Mahomed's standard—the Saracen, who, under Saladin, boldly withstood the mail-clad hosts of the Crusaders—he has fallen back to much the same condition in which the prophet found him, and is a mere predatory wanderer in the desert with little or no religious belief, and quit as indifferent to the lives of those he plunders as he is greedy of the plunder itself.

Egypt and Barbary states from the Red Sea to the Atlantic, although lying almost within sight of Europe, have been but little influenced by its civilization, except where there has been actual occupation of the country, as in the case of Algiers. They all exhibit the dead rot of Isalm, and with it the barbarous criminal codes, cruel oppression, and general inhumanity and recklessness of life that we have noted in the Asiatic communities. The Barbary Corsair, so long the terror of the Mediterranean, is no longer seen, nor are Christian captives suffering there under the lash of their task-masters. But the nature of the people is unchanged, and it is only the fear of condign punishment at the hands of Christendom that restrains them today from pursuing their old trade with all its bloody accessories.

When Atila and his Huns swept across Europe like a pack of ravening wolves, sparing neither age nor sex in their work of slaughter, they were hardly more essentially cruel than the nations they overran. But the times have changed. Our civilization is not that of the Greeks and Romans. It is more practical, and tends to the comfort of the people at large, while the progress of scientific knowledge, and the inventive spirit of the age are daily making the world smaller and increasing our interest in remote peoples, with whom we are willing to share what our civilization may have gained for us.

We cannot now look with complacency upon barbarous usages and cruel deeds, simply because not prevalent among us or perpetrated upon individuals of our own race; and if intervention can improve matters in this respect in any quarter of the world, it is well that the civilized Christian nations should bear a hand for that good purpose.

The speediest and most reliable remedy for all derangements of the throat and lungs is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. This wonderful preparation checks coughing and induces refreshing sleep affords great relief, even in the advanced stages of consumption.

It is not to be wondered at that Ayer's Pills are in such universal demand. For the cure of constipation, biliousness, or any other complaint needing a laxative, these pills are unsurpassed. They are sugar-coated, easy to take, and every dose is effective.

For Sore Throat, Sudden Colds and Diphtheria, no remedy has ever been discovered so powerful to cure as Davis' PAIN-KILLER. LOUIS SHULTZ'S TROUBLE.

His Wife and Family Leave Him and Take His Effects and Money.

Louis Shultz was ten years ago a prominent business man on Front Street, and he was reputed to be in easy circumstances. His line was ready-made clothing, tailoring, etc., and he was assisted in the business by his three sons. To the surprise of many, one day it was reported that he was in financial difficulties, and the sons had left. He alleged that they had converted all the stock they could into cash, and left him with nothing but a load of debts; he owned a nice house, and that went also to satisfy hungry creditors. The old man was reduced in a few days from independence to comparative poverty.

Shortly after this crash Mr. Shultz, who had lost his wife some time before, met a widow named Phillips and they were soon married. They have lived together ever since, but not without many family jars.

Mr. Shultz has been running a small tailor shop in the Elvins block, Front st., and went to his work on Saturday morning as usual. When he returned to his home on Harriet st. in the evening he found the house cold and deserted and his wife and family gone. Everything had been removed from the house, and he also claims his wife took considerable money that he had saved. The old man had to seek shelter in the house of a neighbor, and he says he will institute proceedings to compel his wife to return his effects.

Mrs. Shultz has friends near Frankford and it is supposed she has gone there.

A SOCIETY FUNERAL.

The Remains of the Late E. Braddon Laid at Rest.

The funeral of the late Edward Braddon, who died on Saturday at his residence in the 6th concession of Thurlow, took place this morning to the city and was attended by a large number. The deceased was a member of St. Carthe Court, No. 355, of the Catholic order of Foresters, and was buried under their auspices. The remains were taken to St. Michael's church, the services being conducted by Monsignor Farrelly, who spoke in a eulogistic manner of the deceased. The interment took place at the Catholic cemetery. The bearers were Messrs. Dan Breen, Felix Dion, John Quinn, Louis Cournaga, Alex. Turcott and John Bowen.

The Eclipse.

Seldom or never has a better opportunity occurred for observing a lunar eclipse than that which offered last night. Whilst the satellite was in the penumbra, fleecy clouds floated across her face, giving a good view of the brown looking shadow in the form of a halo around the orb, whose radiance was hardly dimmed by the clouds. Gradually her brightness faded, although the sky became clear of clouds, then the shadow became visible on the eastern or lower limb of the moon, which was in the eastern sky, and slowly spreading across her disc, by 10:40 had totally covered it. The obscured planet was visible for a length of time like a ball of fire seen through smoke, then the dark pall was gradually withdrawn and by 1:30 a.m. it once more sailed bright and serene through the heavens.

The Price of a Postage Stamp.

Any man can take a newspaper. It is the cheapest thing he can buy. It costs the price of a postage stamp—less than to send and receive a letter. What good does it do you? It instructs you and your wife, and teaches your children. It comes to you every week, rain or shine, calm or storm, and brings you the best news of the neighborhood. No matter what happens, it enters your door a welcome friend, full of sunshine, cheer, and interest. It shortens the long summer day and cultivates the long winter nights. It is your adviser, your medium of news, and friend. No man is just to his children and wife who does not give them the home paper to read.

George Tudhope's Funeral.

The funeral of the late George Tudhope took place from the Hospital at 3 p.m. yesterday, and a large concourse of friends turned out to pay their last tribute of respect to the deceased. Rev. M. W. Maclean conducted the services at the Hospital, and Chief Matheson and Dr. Walker read the Sons of Scotland burial service at the cemetery. The bearers were, Messrs. Jas. A. Roy, John McIntosh, W. C. McLean, Robert Matheson, A. Milne, and T. Wills.

Prince Edward Conservatives.

The Weather.

PROBABILITIES.

Fair weather, followed to-night by easterly winds and rain or snow; slowly rising temperature.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

A Woman Gets $75 for Being Slandered, and Another is Given a Like Amount for Having Her Two Arms Broken—The Court Closed.

SATURDAY, March 9.

At the opening of the court this morning the case of Gillen vs. Corby et al was continued, the witnesses for the defence being called.

U. E. Thompson testified that Gillen was satisfied to take $1,000, this to include the plans and specifications and superindence of the work. Generally the services of Mr. Gillen were not satisfactory. Changes were made at the instigation of the promoters. Mr. Gillen agreed to act as clerk of the works and for this he was not to receive any extra compensation.

H. Corby, M.P., testified that the services of Mr. Gillen were not of a satisfactory character. Gillen decided to take $1,000 for all his work, and the directors told him to proceed. He agreed to give his personal supervision to the work. He said he intended to remove to Belleville and could devote his whole time to the work. Witness was certain that Mr. Gillen was satisfied with $1,000 for the entire work which he performed.

D. M. Waters, sworn—Was present at a meeting in Mr. Corby's office. Gillen was present. He asked for 5 per cent.; some demurred, and Mr. Corby said if a specific sum was not mentioned he would not be one to go on with the work. Mr. Gillen agreed to take $1,000 for the whole work. His work as architect was not satisfactory.

Thos. Ritchie testified that he was not at all the meetings held by the defts. Witness understood that $1,000 was all that Gillen was to get for the work he performed. The services of Gillen were, in his opinion, not of a satisfactory nature.

Mr. W. H. Biggar said he corroborated the evidence of Mr. Corby. He was present at the meeting and was certain Gillen agreed to do the work for $1,000. Witness was not satisfied with some of the work done. It was not as satisfactory as they hoped it would be.

This concluded the case for the defence.

Mr. Gillen was re-called and testified that the gentlemen of the company were mistaken as to the sum he was to get. He was certain that he did not agree to do the work, with the extras added, for $1,000.

This concluded the case, and Mr. W. B. Northrup addressed the jury on behalf of the defts.; Mr. Clute, Q.C., for the plff., and His Lordship summed up.

The following questions were submitted to the jury, who, after being out nearly three hours, answered them as follows:

Ques.—Was there any definite bargain about the plaintiff's compensation?
Ans.—Yes, to the extent of the original contract.

Ques.—If so how much was he to get?
Ans.—$1,000 for the original contract.

Ques.—Has he been paid all he was to get?
Ans.—All to the original contract.

Ques.—If anything is to be paid to the plff., can he hold the defts. for it, or must he look to the hotel company?
Ans.—To the hotel company.

His Lordship entered judgment for the defts.

STILL ANOTHER SLANDER CASE.

MCCORMICK VS. GARBUTT.—An action for slander brought by Mrs. Laura McCormick, of Murray Township, against J. W. Garbutt, of the same township. The amount of damages claimed by the plff. was nominal.

Mrs. Laura McCormick, sworn, said she was the plff. in the case and a widow; her husband died two years ago; her husband left her no means; she had two children; she met deft. last March; he called her a vile name and said he could prove it; she brought him before a Magistrate and he admitted the offence; two other persons were present when he called her this name; she had suffered damages in consequence of what he called her, as some persons would not employ her who formerly did; some of her neighbors also had scorned her in consequence of the report being circulated; when she wanted to move no one would remove her; her goods were placed on the road by Mr. Garbutt; the Township Council also stopped granting any money towards her support.

K. Mitchell, sworn, said he heard the deft. call Mrs. McCormick the name alleged and when she said she was not he (deft.) said she was. In consequence of this report Mrs. McCormick had suffered scorn by some persons who used to be her friends.

Frederick Mitchell, sworn, said he heard Mr. Garbutt admit that he called Mrs. McCormick the names alleged by Mrs. McCormick.

The defence offered no evidence. Mr. Clute addressed the jury on behalf of the plff. and Mr. A. A. Abbott for deft.

The jury after being out for 15 minutes returned with a verdict for the plff. for $75.

T. A. O'Rourke and R. C. Clute, Q. C. for plff., A. A. Abbott for deft.

$75 FOR TWO BROKEN ARMS.

THE PREMIER'S RECEPTION.

Preparations in Progress—Six Ministers will Accompany Sir Mackenzie—Notes of Interest.

Our citizens without exception are working with a will to make a success of the reception and banquet worthy of the City of the Bay, in whose history the life of the Premier is so interwoven.

Although many differ from him politically, all such differences have been laid aside upon this occasion, and our people have united to do honor to Belleville's son who has worthily won the highest position in the Dominion.

There will be decorations at the Grand Trunk station and along the line of march, and the city will assume its holiday attire for the occasion.

The ladies are invited to be present at the opera house in the afternoon.

The children of the various schools will assemble along the line of march fronting or near the schools which they attend, each wearing a badge in honor of the occasion, and will add their share to the welcome of the Premier.

The Hon. Sir A. P. Caron, and Messrs. Daly, Curran, Wood and Ouimet will leave Ottawa with the Premier to-night, reaching here at 12:45 p.m. to-morrow, and Hon. Mr. Dickey will arrive to-morrow evening. There will, therefore, be six Ministers in company with the guest of the evening at the banquet. Senator Sanford, of Hamilton, will also accompany Sir Mackenzie and the members of his Cabinet. The Ministers will take luncheon at Mr. J. C. Jamieson's residence.

NOTES.

At a meeting of the Board of Trade on Saturday evening the following Vice-Chairmen were appointed: Messrs. John G. Frost, ex-Vice President; L. W. Yeomans, ex-President; J. W. Johnson and Thos. Wills.

The 15th Battalion will take part in the reception. They will assemble at the drill hall at 11 o'clock. The Quarter Master will be at the armory to-night at 7:30 to issue the uniforms.

The Separate School Board has been invited to take part in the procession and reception.

Thos. Ritchie, Esq., President of the Board of Trade, will occupy the position of chairman at the banquet.

Mr. Corby's coachman was driving a handsome four-in-hand this afternoon, that will be driven in the procession to-morrow.

The visiting Ministers will be quartered at the Quinte.

H. Corby, M.P., has decorated his block on Bridge st. in honor of the Premier's visit.

The Following M.P.'s will be present from outside the county: Messrs. Geo. Taylor, M.P. for South Leeds, chief whip; A. C. Miller, M.P. for Prince Edward; Uriah Wilson, M.P. for Lennox.

The banquet is announced to take place at 8.30 in the evening.

PICTON BEATEN.

The Quintes Add Another Game to Their Record.

The Picton hockey team came to the city on Saturday afternoon to play a return game with the Quintes, and despite the disagreeable storm, the two teams faced each other shortly after 8 o'clock. There was a large attendance of spectators, among whom was a goodly assemblage of ladies. The Picton team, with one or two exceptions, are inferior players, and the Quintes had an easy thing of it, although the score does not show it. The teams lined up as follows:

QUINTES	POSITIONS	PICTON
Jamieson	Goal	H. S. Adams
Powell	Point	J. Hepburn
Phippen	Cover Point	E. V. Leslie
Weller	Forwards	E. C. Smith
Kelso		J. Wright
Twining		F. A. Ferris
Hamilton		G. C. Wilmot
F. McKeown	Goal Umpire	T. Hepburn

F. J. Berringer, Referee.

The ice had been scraped just before the match, but with the heavy down-fall of snow it soon became heavy going for the players and it was with difficulty they could keep their eyes on the puck. After ten minutes Twining put the puck through the Picton goal and that finished the scoring, although the visitors were kept on the defensive most of the time. There were many offsides, but the referee either did not know one when he saw it or did not care about such small things, and so did not call any. The wonder of the Quintes is how such a weak team could defeat Trenton, who gave them such a beating a week ago.

The visitors stopped at the Queen's hotel till yesterday.

SPORTING TALK.

Corbett says if the fight with Fitzsimmons ever comes off, it will take place in Oklahoma.

The yacht Ailsa was disabled by accident at the start of Saturday's race and did not go over the course.

The Montreal Hockey Club defeated Queen's University five goals to one in Saturday's game for the Stanley Cup.

Mr. Norman B. Dick, one of the owners of the well-known racing cutter Zelma, R. C. Y. C., died at Toronto on Saturday night.

"Daddy" Downs, the crack first baseman of last year's Maple Leafs, of Guelph, and who played with the Bellevilles of '93, has signed with Laurence, Mass.

Griffo had the best of the 8-round contest with Jimmy Dime in Boston Friday night. Both men were on their feet at the close and the referee declared it a draw.

George Dixon got the decision over Sam Bolin in a six-round contest in New York, Friday night. Dixon did not knock his man out but was entitled to the decision.

The Oklahoma Senate has killed the bill to allow prize fighting, a committee of preachers and W.C.T.U. ladies having camped with them for three days and nights.

The cable chess match, which has been the talk of two continents, took place on Saturday, the American team playing in the rooms of the Manhattan Chess Club in New York, and the British team in the Criterion restaurant, London. Inasmuch as the game on board No. 4, which ended in a draw, was the only one finished, the match was declared a draw.

The Belleville hockey team having good ice and wishing to play the final game with Trenton for the Corby trophy before it turned soft, telephoned that team, asking them to come down this evening. Their representative telephoned back that the team would not come, as they already claim the cup. That the Trenton team is taking a wrong view of this affair is evidenced by every sporting precedent. The referee was to be sole arbiter between the teams, and as such his decisions should be respected.

The Modern Way

Commends itself to the well-informed, to do pleasantly and effectually what was formerly done in the crudest manner and disagreeably as well. To cleanse the system and break up colds, headache and fevers without unpleasant after effects, use the delightful liquid laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs.

A Sure Remedy for Neuralgia.

Neuralgia is one of the most common and distressing complaints incidental to this climate. It is not confined to any particular season, for whilst most general in the winter seasons, yet many suffer its excruciating agony in the heat of summer. In late years this form of disease has become better known, and consequently the means of relief have become greatly increased in numbers, as well as in efficacy. Among the most powerful and penetrating combinations placed within the reach of the public for the relief of neuralgia, we can mention no remedy equal to or more certain than Polson's Nerviline. Its power over pain is something wonderful, and we advise a trial for neuralgia, or any other painful complaints.

Cured of a Serious Disease.

"I was suffering from what is known as Bright's disease for five years, and for days at a time I have been unable to straighten myself up. I was in bed for three weeks; during that time I had leeches applied and derived no benefit. Seeing Hood's Sarsaparilla advertised in the papers I decided to try a bottle. I found

The Carnival Question.

To the Editor of the INTELLIGENCER.

DEAR SIR,—Two summer carnivals held in Toronto were financial failures. One held in Hamilton was a success, but could not be repeated. No other places in Canada have held summer carnivals. Winter carnivals have "nothing to do with the case."

Now, if summer carnivals were such good things as some people want our citizens to believe, why do not Toronto and Hamilton hold them annually, as they do their big fall fairs? Why don't Cleveland, Erie, Buffalo, Oswego and many other large cities along the lake shore in the U.S. territory and which have unsurpassed facilities, rush into this summer carnival business, if it is such a mine of wealth as a few here represent? And echo answers "why?"

Finally, Toronto, with 200,000 inhabitants having failed in two attempts, and Hamilton, with a population of 50,000, having had a qualified success which no one there will undertake to repeat, despite the knowledge gained by experience, how can Belleville, with but 11,000 inhabitants and no experienced head to direct it, have reason to look for success in a summer carnival? Just reason this out.

These lines are suggested by one deeply interested in our city's welfare.

CIVIS.

Albert College News.

As was announced, the Polymnian Society of the College gave a programme on Saturday evening. Miss R. E. Vincent presided, and the following took part: Misses Henry, Milne, Wilson, W. Gardiner, Morton, S. McDonald, Blair, Williams, Pettit, Curts and Helen Dyer. There were a number of choruses by the society, which were well rendered. Miss Helen Dyer sang with effect "A Letter to Mamma in Heaven," and receiving an encore sang "Sweet Marie." At the close Prof. Shephard gave a couple of selections, which added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening.

Yesterday afternoon the Mission Band held its usual monthly meeting, Miss Henry in the chair. The programme consisted of a duet, by Misses. Jewel and Carman; a solo, by Miss Brintnell, and an address by Rev. Mr. Trotter, of Emmanuel church. Mr. Trotter gave a very interesting account of his trip to Africa, where he served some years as a missionary, and some of his experiences while there. He left England on Sept. 24th, 1856, for Sierra Leone, and touching at Madeira, Teneriffe and Gambia, reached his destination some time in October. He was sent out under the society conducted by the Countess of Huntingdon, and was Superintendent of the churches, schools, institutions, &c. He related some of his experiences there, and among others said he found the people very, very kind. After spending a number of years there he had to return on account of ill-health. He has visited Africa twice since, and says that if he were a young man he would again go as a missionary. His address was both interesting and instructive, and we hope we may again hear from Mr. Trotter. The collection amounted to $15.05.

Missionary Sermons.

The annual missionary sermons of the Tabernacle were preached in that church on Sunday, March 18th. Rev. Dr. Carman, Superintendent of the Methodist church, officiated in the morning to a large concourse of people. In the evening the pastor, Rev. E. Roberts, delivered an excellent discourse on missionary work and urged the demand of the Secretary of the Missionary Society for more money to carry on the work more extensively in Japan and China.

Dr. Carman in the course of his morning sermon, in referring to the old flag of England, said it was now more than ever becoming the symbol of freedom and true liberty. God interfered and took the country from the destroying hands of the Jesuits, when they sought to demolish Protestantism. Our leading men to-day would drag our flag at the foot of Rome unless the people stand up and fight against it. Methodism, that started last, will be first, if you are true christians. If our public men do wrong, God will give others the reins of power. Away with the hindrances to christianity, such as political corruption, intemperance, and other vices. Speaking of missionaries, he said that some people wanted a man to work for fifty years in the mission fields, until he is worn out, and then kick when he is to be granted a small superannuation stipend. What are these worn-out men to do? They cannot go into business. Show me a Government or Society that administers its affairs more economically than the Missionary Society of the Methodist church.

CENTRE AMELIASBURG.

We were pleased to meet Mr. James Hill, a former resident of Belleville, last Saturday. He comes to us hale and hearty. The North-West atmosphere seems to agree with him.—Rev. Meyers is expected to preach the missionary sermons in Centre church next Sabbath.—B. W. Meyers and family, Belleville, were visiting friends in this vicinity last week.—Mr. A. McCrodan and wife, Belleville, spent last Sabbath in this neighborhood.—Mrs. R. Fox, Northport, is visiting at her brother's, W. H. Redner.—Mr. E. Vandusen (our former teacher) was a caller on his many friends in this neighborhood last week.—An old adage a faint—(heart) Hart—never won a fair lady, but how is it with the other fellow? I guess "Will" is a goner; cards are out, continued next week.

How Free Trade Affects Oshawa.

Oshawa Vindicator.

We have a practical lesson right here in Oshawa, of the effects of lowering the tariff on manufactured goods. Last summer this paper called attention to the fact that lowering of the tariff on the goods produced by the Cedar Dale works—scythes, forks, hoes and rakes—was followed by large importations of surplus stocks from the United States. These American manufacturers did not hesitate to tell their Canadian customers that the goods were sold in Canada at a price at which they could not be purchased by firms doing business in the United States. The manufacturers were overstocked. Money was scarce and they wanted cash. By selling their surplus stock at the cost of production, they were serving a double purpose. The American manufacturers were getting cash, and they were smothering Canadian industries. If the skilled artisans in any part of Canada want to know what benefit protection is to them, the skilled labor of the Cedar Dale works at Oshawa, that is now being laid off full three months before the works usually shut down for repairs, can tell them something about it. Every scythe, hoe, fork, or rake imported from the United States, means just that much less labor at the works here. The presence of foreign goods is already felt in the market and the staff of workmen at the works here is being reduced.

Besides this there is the Malleable works. Three hundred of our population out of employment, with no prospect of the works being restored, and why? Because at the present state of the tariff the American manufacturers of malleables see their opportunity to discourage the rebuilding of the works here and are laying down malleables in Toronto at what it costs to produce the grey iron. Any of the idle men that were usually employed in the two leading hives of industry mentioned can tell what benefit they derive from protection. Protection meant work and support for their families. The want of it, idleness and close economy, and the breaking up of homes. In the face of these facts, which cannot be disputed, there is a newspaper in town that devotes columns each week to advocating a policy that promises to remove the last vestige of protection. With the evidence of the bad effects of the lowering of the tariff before it, this newspaper is so blind to the town's prosperity and best interests that it advocates a still lower tariff, knowing full well from what has already transpired, that a lower tariff will be followed by a less number of skilled artizans in town, vacant houses, less business, less market for the consumption of East Whitby farm produce and a business stagnation that every man with the true interests of the town at heart should do all that lies in his power to avert.

NEW REGULATIONS.

They are in Respect to Cattle and Sheep Through the States.

TORONTO, March 9.—The local cattle dealers are much disturbed over new regulations that have been enforced by the authorities at Washington, respecting the shipping of Canadian cattle and sheep through the United States in bond. Heretofore Canadian sheep could be shipped from any of the American ports, while all were closed to Canadian cattle. Now all the ports are closed to sheep, except Portland, and the same port is now open to our cattle. Some of the dealers this morning stated that the new regulations would practically kill our winter export trade of sheep and would benefit the Canadian cattle trade. Though the new regulations were adopted by the United States Government on February 7, the Canadian shippers knew nothing of them till a few days ago. They claim that the Grand Trunk Railway will benefit by the change, inasmuch as this road has practically the control of all shipping at the port in question. The matter will be brought to the notice of the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa.

THE HEART

is liable to great functional disturbance through sympathy. Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, often causes it to palpitate in a distressing way. Nervous Prostration, Debility and Impoverished Blood, also cause its too rapid pulsations. Many times, Spinal Affections, cause it to labor unduly. Sufferers from such Nervous Affections often imagine themselves the victims of organic heart disease.

ALL NERVOUS DISEASES, as Paralysis, Locomotor Ataxia, Epilepsy, or Fits, St. Vitus's Dance, Sleeplessness, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Melancholia and Kindred Ailments, are treated as a specialty, with great success, by the Staff of the Invalids' Hotel. Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

CHAPTER V.

The battle (considering the romantic environment) did not amount to much. Meryon began it with two impulses, both foolish. The first was to put himself between Terah and danger—which, since they were both already surrounded by the enemy, was impossible except he formed himself into a hollow square, which is well known to be impracticable. His next idea was to swallow the hollow ruby, which would have resulted, had he accomplished it, in his being cast asunder like a bean pod, for the sake of what was inside. He put his hand to his pocket and felt the ruby there, but it had slipped through a hole and lodged in the lining. While he was frantically fishing for it, he heard Terah cry out; the memory of his dream flashed over him—but where the black mountains and the embroidered eagle? He felt a burning, numbing sensation in his right shoulder and would have fallen over backwards but that he was sent the other way by a bang on the back of the head; after which he knew nothing.

Death is said to be a painless operation; when Meryon came to himself he was assured of continued existence by the excruciating discomfort which he suffered. He was in a small dark place—the cave in the big rock, as he rightly surmised—with a gag in his mouth, a bullet wound in his shoulder, a gash in the back of his head and a splitting headache. A raging thirst beset him, hiding from him the fact that he was also fainting with hunger. The first thing he did was to feel in his pocket. The ruby (as he expected) was gone.

HE STAGGERED OVER IT.

In his groping, however, his hand came in contact with his canteen, which he had filled at the spring just before Terah's arrival. After a fierce struggle he succeeded in getting his gang off and took a drink—the best drink he ever had, before or after. Why had he been gagged at all? Why shut up in the rock? There were several perplexing features about this affair. Meanwhile he was not going to submit without a struggle of being buried alive. He got to his feet and dragged himself to the doorway of the cave, revealed by gleams of light coming through chinks, and found it stopped by a mass of rock. With all his remaining might he gave this rock a kick; to his astonishment it fell outward, being only a slab resting against the aperture; he staggered over it, out into dazzling daylight, and into the arms of a man in European dress, who exclaimed in some surprise: "Hullo, Fred Meryon! I might have known it would be you," in the voice of his old friend, Horace Chase, the surgeon. Meryon said: "Great Scott, Horace!" and fainted—not being an oriental.

The meeting had come about thus: The English had a "post" in the capital of our prince's alley, and hearing that a row was brewing between the two other principalities, sent a detachment out to stop it. Chase went with it to cut off arms and legs in case anyone was injured. After transactions which do not concern us, they got on the trail of a marauding party and captured them with their booty, among which was a young person dressed like a boy, but a girl underneath. She said she was a princess, and told a queer tale, in consequence of which they kept on until they came to the tall, conical rock, and were about to investigate it when it opened and out popped Meryon, as we have seen.

Among the prisoners was a fat old person whom the princess denounced as her father's chief eunuch, a fugitive from justice, and the shooter of her lover. This creature, upon interrogation, denied not only what was charged against him, but, most shrilly of all, something which was not, namely, that he had taken the hollow ruby. Further inquiry developed that he had got together his band of cutthroats ostensibly to waylay Meryon and capture the princess, who was to be held for ransom; but he himself had secret knowledge of the ruby, and designed to get that for himself. Accordingly he had shot Meryon, gagged him lest he recover and swallow the stone, and deposited the body in the rock, meaning to sneak back unobserved and hunt for the jewel at his leisure. Fate had then stepped in and laid him by the heels as narrated.

What was the hollow ruby? the Englishmen wanted to know. Terah told them; though it was news to her that Meryon had had it in his keeping. Where, then, was the hollow ruby now? Hatipha was not only searched outwardly, but fed for a day or two on a diet of castor oil and soapsuds, to no purpose. Meryon's clothes—he being still unconscious in the delirium of fever—were examined; and they even sent back and searched the cell in the rock. The ruby was not to be found. At this juncture Meryon came to himself, learned from his friend Chase what had been going on, and spake. It should be promised that the English had brought their prisoners to a city of the hostile country; and that Terah had become an object of general admiration.

"That old swine Hatipha has it, depend on it," said Meryon.

"We can cut him open. There's nothing else left to do to him," said the always low-voiced and undemonstrative Chase in a dreamy, professional tone. "But I fancy you swallowed it yourself."

"With that gag in my jaws? But I see your game. You want to incise my epigastrium and get the glory of an operation. All right. Only, mind you, if ever I get well again, I'll give you such a licking as—"

"Don't excite yourself; I won't risk it then, for my operations always succeed! This wound of yours is enough for the present."

"Why not try the experiment of removing the bullets?" growled Meryon, testily.

"Dear boy, it just went in at one door and out at the other. Here's the aperture of exit at the back."

"I can feel it all the same. Why doesn't my princess come and nurse me?"

"Your princess?" Chase repressed a smile. "She's busy."

"What the devil do you mean?"

"Look here, my boy," said Chase, gently, "don't agitate yourself—but what is she, anyway? You were always a fool about girls—it's your temperament, you know; but you can hardly be quite such an imbecile as to mean anything serious with her?"

"Dr. Chase, I consider your remarks damned insulting! I want no more of 'em! I shall marry the princess and take her to New York, and whoever doesn't pay her proper respect as my wife, will regret it, do you understand?"

The surgeon was imperturbable. "You should have had her boxed up in the harem and expressed through to your New York residence, and married her as she stepped out; and afterwards keep her in the meat-safe, or some equally cool and secure retreat. For, to be frank with you, she has been carrying on here in a manner that may be natural to an oriental princess with a taste for variety long repressed and finally indulged, but which, were she my fiancee, would make a murderer and suicide of me in five minutes. Why, you great red-headed calf, if she'd been able she would have married by this time to the entire detachment, from the drummer boy to the captain. You can punch my head, you know, but I'm giving you cold facts. Of course I don't blame her—who would? Its the way she's made, and would be just right in a Nautch-girl—but as Mrs. Fred Meryon, of Murray Hill and Beacon street, eh? Come, man, swallow your medicine!"

"Are you giving me this straight?" inquired Meryon, after a short and pregnant silence.

"Straight and cold; and a good bit diluted, too!"

There was another silence long and meditative. "Poor little thing!" at last muttered the artist. "It's my fault. To marry her would make it worse. We don't understand these eastern women—their warm blood or their cold blood, either. But now she has found out what freedom is, it would be cruel to take her back to be shut up again. Still, what else . . ."

"We'll take her back and see if something nice can't be done for her," said Chase; "meanwhile I'll see she gets into no mischief here; and do you keep quiet and get that shoulder healed."

A week later they set out and proceeded by easy stages, carrying Meryon on a palanquin. Terah and Hatipha were of the party, much against the will of both. But whereas Hatipha's only objection was that he would be flayed and impaled at the end of the trip, the poor little princess had to tear out of her heart some thirty or forty vigorous young flirtations. It may be stated here that during the first night's encampment this young lady disappeared, and with her a handsome young camel-driver and a camel; and there is reason to think that she has been living happily ever since.

THEY PROSTRATED THEMSELVES AT THE FEET OF EBAL.

Upon arriving at the prince's palace they found changes.

It appeared, in the first place, that the princess, the mother of Terah, having been taken very ill of a dropsy and at the point of death, summoned the prince to a private interview at which she informed him that Terah was not his daughter, but that as compensation Ebal, who had been brought up as a slave, was in truth his lawful son and heir. Their remarkable likeness to each other was due to their both favoring their mother. The lady further explained that her infidelity and deception had been carried out in retaliation for a disappointment the prince had given her, some fifteen years before, in the matter of a box of sweetmeats. She died, with a smile of satisfaction, just as the executioner whom the prince had lost not an instant in sending for, arrived with his bowstring—too late!

But his highness was indignant, and somebody must be impaled. He sent for Terah. It was then discovered for the first time that she had eloped with Meryon, and left the slave boy Ebal—now the true prince—in her place. The latter was brought to his father, expecting instant death; but as his highness needed an heir and had no other, he was forced to spare him. He sent however, for the father of Terah, whoever he might be.

The messenger learned that he used to be a gardner in the service of the harem, and that he had died a natural and easy death only a week before.

Here truly was a maddening state of things; four impalements missed one after another, and Hatipha and Meryon also out of reach. Some one must be slaughtered, and at once; but whom? No one who had offended the prince could be got at, and nobody who could be got at would offend him. His highness' wrath, which had been warmed up for eight and forty hours, now attained the temperature of superheated steam, and the boiler exploded. In other words, this great and worthy potentate expired of an apoplexy in the midst of his trembling courtiers, who instantly, with hosannas of joy, prostrated themselves at the feet of the astonished Ebal and proclaimed him their ruler.

SHE SOLD HER DIARY.

How a Girl Turned the Edge of a Joke to the Benefit of the Poor.

There seems to be no limit to a woman's self-sacrifice when she once takes a charitable object to heart. This is the story of a girl who sold her diary—and you have to be a woman to realize all that that means.

It was on shipboard, and it happened on the way over from Liverpool last summer. The girl was a millionaire's daughter, and in addition to devoting her pocket money to the East Side mission, of which she is a patroness, she spent most of her leisure time crocheting wonderful and altogether useless nothings, which she persuaded her rich admirers to buy at fabulous prices for the benefit of the poor. She had devoted the entire trip to this pretty work—except for an hour a day, which she spent in filling out her dairy with such sentimental observations as misses of 20 or thereabout are apt to find expression for on the innocent white pages of their diaries.

The friends she had victimized on the way over, by luring dollars from their pockets in exchange for crocheted things, made much sport of her diary, and at last conspired against her peace of mind.

"Now, say, Miss Blank," said one of them, in pursuance of the plot, "we have decided to strike. We are not going to help your tenement house heathen a cent's worth more unless you sell us your diary. How much will you take for it?"

"How much will you give?" asked the girl, after a little thought.

Five dollars was the bid and refused. Miss Blank then playfully put the precious volume up at auction, and the men in the party, never dreaming that she could be in earnest, piled bid upon bid, until the price stood at $65.

"The diary is yours, Mr. Jones," said the girl to the successful bidder, "but remember my terms are spot cash, with the further condition that you leave it with me until I can make a copy for myself."

The laugh was on Jones, and his companions forced him to pay down the money on the spot. Miss Blank delivered the dairy, and of course all that the unlucky joker could do was to return it unopened with his compliments.—New York Herald.

As Parmelee's Vegetable Pills contain Mandrake and Dandelion, they cure Liver and Kidney Complaints with unerring certainty. They also contain Roots and Herbs which have specific virtues truly wonderful in their action on the stomach and bowels. Mr. E. A. Cairncross, Shakespeare, writes: "I consider Parmelee's Pills an excellent remedy for Biliousness and Derangement of the Liver, having used them myself for some time."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of to-day, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

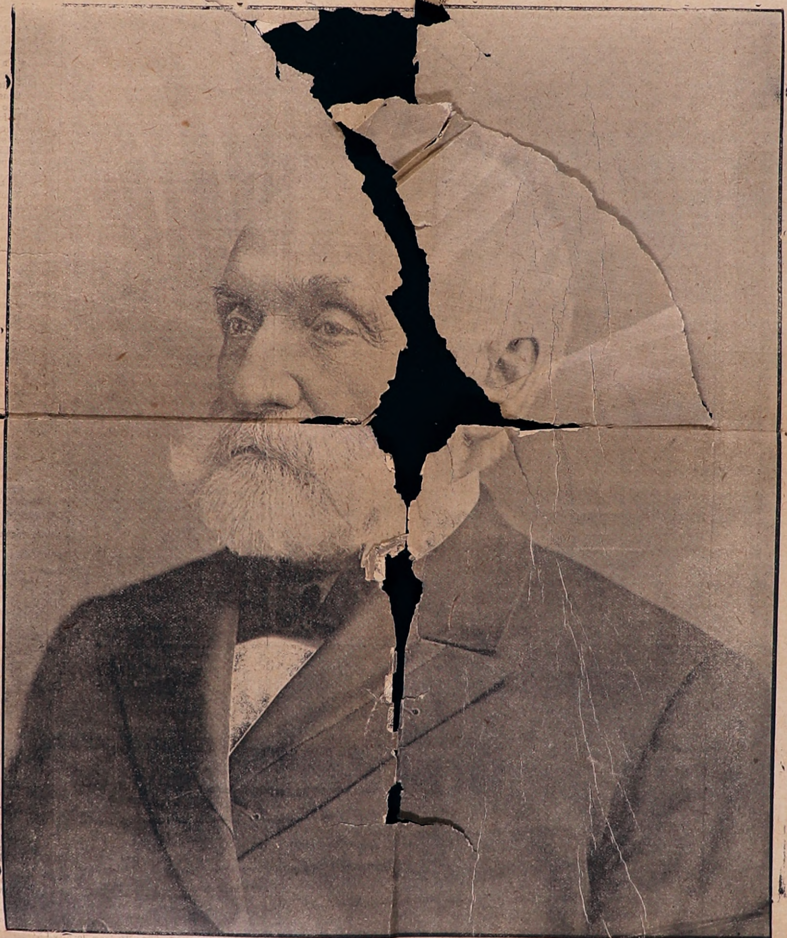
VOL. 28. BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13 1895. NO. 263



HON. SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL, K.C.M.G.,
Premier of the Dominion of Canada.

Belleville

YESTERDAY'S DEMONSTRATION.

The demonstration made by the citizens of Belleville yesterday in honor of the the city's most distinguished son, the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, K.C.M.G., Premier of Canada, proved to be one of the most notable public events that has ever been recorded in Canadian annals. There have been in the past in this city demonstrations in honor of distinguished men of both the great political parties, which were enthusiastic and successful; but the enthusiasm was confined to the particular party whose leaders were being honored. Yesterday's demonstration was the unanimous and united expression of esteem (may we not say affection) felt by all the people of every creed and class and shade of political opinion for a distinguished statesman, who has raised himself by his integrity, ability and devotion to duty to the highest place in the gift of the Canadian people. The triumphal procession through the streets, and the splendid reception in the opera house, expressed the popular feeling of regard for the Premier.

The banquet in the evening was in keeping with the events that had preceded it. Senator Sullivan, of Kingston, voiced the opinion of the gentlemen present when he said that he had been at many banquets and public functions of a like nature, but the one at which he was privileged to be present last night was the most magnificent he had ever attended. There was nothing lacking. The Board of Trade had anticipated and provided everything that could make the banquet a success; and in doing this they had the hearty co-operation of the generous proprietors of the magnificent Hotel Quinte, which was the admiration of every visitor and guest. The speaking was of the highest order, and as a sample of the talent possessed by the gentlemen whom Sir Mackenzie Bowell has called to his Cabinet it proved a revelation and a delight. The French members of the Cabinet spoke as eloquently as did those who were born to speak the English tongue. The Hon. Mr. Ouimet's jocular allusion to Mr. Dalton McCarthy's efforts to abolish the French language evoked a response that must have pleased him. Referring to the same matter later in the evening, one of the speakers assured the French gentlemen present that the McCarthy crusade against the French language had no sympathizers in this section of the Dominion. The 12th day of March, 1895, will long be remembered as the red letter day in the history of Belleville.

A Liberal Offer.

The Hamilton Spectator says, speaking from the depths of its experience: "Could there be anything more absurd than the charge made by the Belleville Sun that Hamilton is jealous because Belleville is going to have a summer carnival? Why Hamiltonians are willing to give Belleville the most satisfactory proof to the contrary. They will consent to lend Belleville for its carnival purposes the Tutelary Genius of the Great Hamilton Carnival, C. R. Smith—but only on condition that he shall be sent back after use, as good as when delivered." Take care, Mr. Spec., or you may have the editor of a paper published in a large Yankee city where they don't hold summer carnivals, although most favorably situated for such an enterprise, throwing the awful title of "pessimist" at you.

Madoc Convention.

The Conservatives of North Hastings will meet at Madoc to-morrow afternoon, for the purpose of selecting a candidate for the House of Commons.

Amongst those in attendance will be Sir Charles H. Tupper, Hon. Dr. Montague, Mr. Corby, M.P., Mr. Northrup, M. P. and other prominent members of the party.

The Weather.

It looked like the beginning of spring today, with water flowing freely on all the streets and the sleighing rapidly disappearing. The mercury did not fall below 28 last night; at 8 a.m. it was 30 and at noon 43.

PROBABILITIES.

Unsettled, stationary or a little higher temperature; some falls of snow or rain.

There will be four eclipses this year, three of the sun and one of the moon. The next eclipse of the moon is also total and will be visible here, occuring on the night of Sept. 3rd, 1895.

Kingston people are urging the withdrawal of the bonus which they voted to the Smith's Falls railway, on terms that have not been complied with.

The members of the Philharmonic who were not present at the practice last evening missed a treat, for the Society has commenced to practice one of the choruses from Tannhauser, "Hail, Bright Abode." They made the room ring with its melodic beauty. The chorus is a heavy one and will require all the members in order to render it with full justice to the music and to the Society.

BELLEVILLE'S HONORED GUEST!

Hon Sir Mackenzie Bowell, K.C.M.G., Premier of Canada, Welcomed to His Old Home.

BOARD OF TRADE BANQUET A GRAND SUCCESS!

A Magnificent Reception From His Former Fellow Townsmen---Several Members of His Administration and Distinguished Friends Accompanied Him.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING HELD IN THE OPERA HOUSE!

The City was in Holiday Dress and the People of the City and District Assembled in Thousands to Honor Their Old Friend ---Amid Brilliant Decorations a Grand Procession Escorted Him to Luncheon---The Opera House Crowded at the Reception---All Shook Hands With the Premier---Party Lines Abolished in Belleville's Welcome to Her Distinguished Son--Full Report of the Proceedings.

It is one of the peculiar privileges of a Briton that he may be divided, yet united, in his allegiance to his country. He may be an Englishman, a Scotchman, an Irishman, a Welshman, or a dweller in one of the great self-governing colonies, and dearly love and manfully uphold the peculiar interests of his place of residence, and yet, withal, be loyal to the constitution, to the Queen, and to the Government of that greatest empire which the world has ever seen, "whose morning drum-beat, rising with the sun and keeping company with the hours, daily circles the earth with an unending strain of martial music." So was it with the great statesman, the Father of Confederation, who first held the reins of power in Canada after the union, whose death is still mourned, and whose proudest boast was that he was a British subject. So was it with the other two Sir Johns who succeeded him, the last of whom, in his glorious but deeply lamented death at the foot of the throne, by the imperial honors showered upon him in life and in death, served to knit more closely the mother-land and her greatest colony. So is it with his successor, whom we all know and whom we are all delighted to honor.

H. CORBY, M. P.

Worth makes the man,
The want of it the fellow.

This old couplet is strikingly exemplified in the almost romantic career of Sir Mackenzie Bowell from—we use the trade term advisedly, because he is proud of it Printer's Devil to Prime Minister. Born in England, he was brought to Canada when a young boy with his parents. With no advantages to aid him, he began at the bottom rung of the ladder as a "printer's devil" in the INTELLIGENCER office, and step by step he has mounted slowly but steadily to the very top. The secret of a success so far beyond that of his fellows is not far to seek nor difficult to find. It is this: To uncommon ability and force of character he has added thorough reliability, truth, honesty and industry. Added to these qualities, he has been a good citizen, an energetic upholder of his own opinions, and a loyal British subject. Such are the qualities of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, which proves that the adventitious aid of wealth and lofty birth, with all the advantages which attach thereto, nor the aid of influential relatives is necessary to enable a man to attain to the highest position under the crown in this country. The qualifications must be in the man himself. And so it will be well for our young men to heed this lesson.

W. B. NORTHRUP, M. P.

When, in December last, our former townsman became Premier of Canada at the request of Her Majesty's representative and the voice of his colleagues, as successor to Sir John Thompson, the people of Belleville expressed a desire to compliment him upon the culmination of his career. He had begun life in Belleville, and here he had laid the foundation of his greatness, and he was, in all but accident of birth, a "Bay of Quinte Boy." So, the Board of Trade took the matter in hand—and very appropriately, for it must be remembered that Sir Mackenzie, first as Minister of Customs for thirteen years and afterwards for two years as Minister of Trade and Commerce, has had longer and more intimate connection with the foreign trade of this country than any other Minister ever had. The result of their action, after some delay caused by the Premier's health, s seen in Tuesday's demonstration.

BELLEVILLE EN FETE

The finest possible weather favored the occasion, the air being cool, clear and bracing, and the sleighing excellent for the time of year. The street presented a gay appearance, the display of flags, banners and mottoes, the parti-colored festooning on the buildings and the fluttering of many gay flags in the wind—most prominent of all, as it ought to be, that dear "old flag" which some silly people tried to deride a few years ago—lending a lively and picturesque aspect to the scene. Belleville was truly en fete, Liberals, Conservatives, Independents and people of all shades of political opinion uniting to do honor to the guest of the day. To particularize all would far exceed the space we have to spare, but the display was a fine one.

The decorations at the Grand Trunk station consisted of a banner stretched across the entrance to the yard, bearing the words "Belleville delights to honor the first Prime Minister." A string of flags were also across the street. The large flag floated proudly from the flag staff upon the engine house.

SOME OF THE [illegible]

A number of streamers bearing significant mottoes were displayed. A few of them, are here transcribed, and their positions given:

"There is no prouder boast than 'I am a British subject.'" At post office.

"We are proud to claim as a citizen one whom the Queen and country unite to honor." At Bridge and Front streets.

"One of the products of Belleville Schools—a Prime Minister." At Front and Campbell streets.

THE RECEPTION AT THE RAILWAY STATION.

The procession was formed on the market square at about noon and proceeded to the Grand Trunk railway station in the following order:

J. J. B. Flint, Esq., Marshal.
Chief Newton and Police Force.
I.O.O.F. Band.
Company of 15th Batt. A.L.I.
Mayor and Members of Council.
Board of Trade.
Board of Education.
Separate School Board.
Citizens in conveyances.
Citizens on foot.

The train was due here at 12.45, but was 20 minutes late. Before the arrival of the train bearing the distinguished guest, the platform surrounding the station was filled with people, whilst the yard in front was blocked with vehicles. The arrangements were, however, in excellent hands, and no hitch occurred. The band was stationed at the west end of the freight shed, whilst the military company was drawn up on the platform near its edge. As the cars drew near the station the band struck up a lively tune, while the military presented arms and gave a salute. When the train was brought to a stand still, the Mayor, the President of the Board of Trade and a number of prominent citizens boarded the Government car Cumberland and welcomed the Premier and his colleagues who accompanied him. When Sir Mackenzie Bowell stepped off the train he was loudly cheered. He was conducted to the conveyance which was in waiting for him. The procession was then re-arranged in the order as it had come up to the station. In the first three conveyances were a number of prominent citizens. Mr. Corby's handsome pleasure sleigh drawn by a four-in-hand team, was occupied by the Premier, Sir A. P. Caron the Mayor and Mr. Thos. Ritchie, President of the Board of Trade. In the sleigh immediately following were seated Messrs. W. B. Northrup, M.P., Senator Sanford, Hon. Mr. Ouimet and Hon. Mr. Daly. Next came Hon. Mr. Curran, Hon. Mr. Wood, Mr. Corby, M.P., and Mr. J. C. Jamieson.

Following were sleighs containing the City Council, Board of Trade, Board of Education, Separate School Board and an immense line of rigs. From the station down to Front street it was a triumphal march; cheer upon cheer being given for the Premier and party. The school children of the station and Canifton road schools were placed near the Canifton road and as the sleigh containing Sir Mackenzie came up in front of them they all waved small flags and ch[illegible] girl stepped up to t[illegible] the Premier with [illegible] flowers. PREMIERSHIP OF CANADA.

AT MR. JAMIESON'S.

The residence of J. C. Jamieson, Esq., where the Premier and Ministers partook of luncheon, had been tastefully decorated for the occasion. It is situated on Albert street, and in a commanding position. In the front portion of the building facing east, red, white and blue bunting was used profusely. Small flags were also used, making quite an inviting display. Upon the south side the decorations were of a more extensive character. Small evergreen trees were placed in position over the gate and also upon the steps leading up to the main entrance of the house. Over the gate between two of the trees, worked in evergreen were the letters "N.P." The balcony was almost hidden with bunting, flags and streamers. The north side, facing Bridge street, was not overlooked. Small and large flags hung from all the windows, intertwined with bunting. From the large flag staff two streamers floated to the breeze. Across the street was suspended a string of flags, a large Union Jack being in the centre and three smaller ones on either side. In the interior of the house, flowers both in pots and cut were distributed in the various rooms, and arranged in a most tasteful manner.

THE PARTY.

Besides the Premier and the Ministers, the gentlemen who were present at the luncheon were Senator Sanford, Rev. E. N. Baker, (pastor of the Bridge st. church); Thos. Ritchie, (President of the Board of Trade); H. Corby, M.P., (West Hastings); Messrs. W. D. Mace, of Tamworth and C. P. Holton.

THE PUBLIC RECEPTION AT THE OPERA HOUSE.

The interior of the opera house was most beautifully decorated, the stage being especially attractive. The boxes were hung with Union Jacks and bunting. The stage, had be[illegible] closed in at the [illegible]s and columns, and backed [illegible]e scene, through the portals [illegible]d be caught glimpses of a [illegible]r sitting. The stage floor [illegible]somely carpeted and furnished with handsome easy chairs, sofas, tables, etc. Flowers, ferns and smilax were incorporated in the decorations with splendid effect. This part of the decoration was in the hands of Mrs. John G. Frost, Mrs. Geo. Denmark, Mrs. W. H. Gordon and Miss Ritchie, and to them is due the greatest praise for the taste displayed in every detail.

In addition to the Premier and his colleagues the following gentlemen occupied seats upon the platform: Mayor Walmsley, Aldermen F. M. Clarke, W. H. Gordon, N. B. Falkiner and A. Robinson, Messrs. H. Walker, T. Ritchie, Thos. Hanley, G. W. Ostrom, ex-M. P. P.; W. P. Hudson, ex-M.P.P.; A. N. Reid, D. B. Robertson, H. Corby, M.P.; W. B. Northrup, M.P.; Mgr. Farrelly, W. Tennet, Rev. E. N. Baker, Rev. W. Wilkins, of Trenton, and Rev. Mr. Anderson.

Long before 3 o'clock this afternoon, the hour set for the city's reception to Sir Mackenzie at the opera house, that spacious auditorium was filled to the doors with ladies and gentlemen, and when the Premier, accompanied by the members of his Administration and the Mayor, appeared upon the stage it was the signal for mighty cheers and the walls of the theatre re-echoed with the very force of these loyal acclamations. When Mayor Walmsley, who presided at the reception, could make his voice heard above the tumult, he called for order, which was soon restored, and he read the following address:

MAYOR WALMSLEY.

To the Honorable Sir Mackenzie Bowell, K. C. M. G., Senator, Premier of the Dominion of Canada, &c., &c.

SIR,—The Citizens of Belleville and surrounding district take the first opportunity afforded to them since you have been entrusted by His Excellency, the Governor-General, with the Premiership of our loved country, and since our Gracious Sovereign has conferred upon you "Knighthood for services to the Empire," of extending to you our heartiest congratulations on these richly deserved honors, and our warmest welcome to your home since childhood and where your children, our fellow citizens, enjoy the esteem of which you have proved yourself so eminently worthy.

We desire in this manner to emphasize this expression of our esteem, and to record our high appreciation of your great services to ourselves and our beloved Dominion of Canada.

You have seen the little hamlet at the mouth of Meyers' Creek grow year by year until it has reached the proud position which our beautiful city occupies to-day.

You no doubt have a vivid recollection of your first arrival upon Flint's wharf and little did you think that the port you were landing at would one day and in yourself give to Canada a Premier of which our country is so justly proud.

Your career through life has been an exemplary one of steady progress. When you first applied yourself to the "Work of Life," it was at the lowest rung of the ladder in the printers' trade taking the position of what is commonly known as the printers' devil, but through your energy, indomitable courage and natural ability you have climbed each rung of that ladder which is placed before every citizen in this Free Country of ours, with boldness and strength and with each fresh grasp of a higher rung your energy has increased until now, Sir, you have attained the highest position and honor in the gift of our country.

You have represented your fellow citizens in the Parliament of Canada for over twenty-five years, and since the year 1878 our country has called upon you to act as one of its Ministers and advisers of the representative in Canada of Her Most Gracious Majesty, our beloved Queen Victoria.

Your talent for work and your ability to perform the same at duty's call has won for you the highest regard of all until the confidence placed in your early career by us has been extended over our broad Dominion from ocean to ocean.

Your course has commanded our profound admiration from its earliest days, and we feel that no words can fully express our pride in welcoming you to your home in Belleville as Premier of Canada.

Your services to our Dominion have been so many that it would be impossible to enumerate them. The older inhabitants recall with pride the gallantry displayed by you on more than one occasion, when a call to arms was made by the Government of the day, how spontaneous was your response, and how you marched forth with other brave men to die if needs be in defence of "homes and altars free."

The late Intercolonial Conference is, however, a crowning service which will result in great gain to our own country and to other portions and colonies of the Empire.

No class of the community has entered with greater enthusiasm into the welcome accorded you to-day, than the pupils attending our schools and the students at our various colleges. Belleville boys and girls will ever remember that from their schools you went to the "Battle of Life," and your life will always be an incentive to Canadian youths.

We pray and trust that you may for many years remain with us and serve our country, whose interests we know are well cared for and safe in the hands of one who has shewn true, honest, life long loyalty to the Sovereign and the Empire of which we form a part, and we hope that you will often look back with pleasure and pride to this day, not so much on account of the large numbers come together to do you honor as of the expression herein recorded of the great confidence, esteem and affection of your fellow townspeople.

I have the honor to be, on behalf of the Corporation,

J. E. WALMSLEY.
Mayor.

After Mayor Walmsley had read the address, the Premier rose to reply. He was received with loud cheers and a body of College students and other young men in the gallery sang "He was a printer," "He's the Premier" and "He's a Daisy." When he could make himself heard, Sir Mackenzie said:

MR. MAYOR, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—It is a matter of pride to me, though egotistical it may seem, to return to my native city and receive such a welcome as you have given me to-day, and that too, from all classes, irrespective of creed or politics. When one passes through a battle, and particularly a political battle, and still maintains this friendship, it is indeed gratifying to him. This freedom of thought is coming to be recognized as one of the great factors that binds us together as a people. I graduated from the common schools of this county and the first school I attended was taught by Mr. Blaind, a son of whom is here to-day and whom I have shaken by the hand. He had seen the town grew, as referred to in the address, but not as rapidly as he would liked to have it. If the early inhabitants had displayed the push and vim that its present citizens are doing, the city would now boast of a population of 30,000 or 40,000 instead of 11,000. There are different causes that have tended to retard Belleville's growth. It was once the centre of great lumbering operations, but these have long since been removed and she can derive no further benefit from them. Another cause of her slowness in growt[illegible] her lack of railway connec[illegible] As I saw fit to shoulder my musket [illegible] defence of my country when she wa[illegible] threatened with foes from across the border, so, I am satisfied, you would do to-day. He spoke briefly of the causes leading up to the troubles between Canada and the Fenians amongst our neighbors to the south and said he had the honor to be present as an officer of the local battalion on both those occasions. He was a Captain in the 15th Batt. at the first Fenian raid. The 15th had done good service in the North-West rebellion and some of its officers to-day carry the scars from wounds received there. He congratulated the city particularly upon the excellence of her Public School system. He had had the honor to be a member of the city's School Board and had to the best of his ability served in that capacity. He had proposed the building of a Central School, thus enabling the Board to classify the scholars so that a teacher could do much more and better work than under the old system, but his idea was not received with much enthusiasm by some of his colleagues. He was glad, however, that his successor, Mr. Sawyer, had much stronger ideas on this point than he had had and he succeeded in having them carried out. Every Canadian has reason to congratulate himself upon being a citizen of a country that is growing as ours is. We live in a country that commands the respect of the whole world, and if it is one thing more than another that has tended in this direction it was the late Intercolonial Conference, which was a grand thing for Canada. During his visit to Australia he met with every courtesy and now the beneficial results of his visit were becoming more and more apparent. He hoped the day was not far distant when the whole of British North America would be united by one band. He had seen all the provinces, except Newfoundland, brought into confederation under one central government. There are some difficulties in bringing Newfoundland in and these are principally her financial position and the French sh re difficulty. Many of you know how hard it was to govern old Upper and Lower Canada and I need not point out to you the benefits of their union. She is to-day looked upon as the brightest gem in the British crown. We cannot afford to leave an independe[illegible] island laying at the mouth of the S[illegible]awrence river, exposed to the depredations of marauders and with intrigues arising from time to time within its own borders. If these intrigues prove successful then good-bye to our great fishing industry of the eastern provinces. In conclusion, he said the sooner we learn to respect the equality of rights of all men sooner will we become a united people. He thanked the citizens again for their very kind reception and he would say that in the future as in the past he would try to merit their honor and respect. He took his seat amidst loud and prolonged applause.

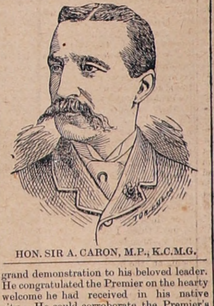
When the Premier concluded his address Miss Amy Wallbridge, the pretty little daughter of Mr. Geo. Wallbridge, stepped upon the stage and gracefully presented him with a beautiful bouquet of roses and primulas tied with red, white and blue ribbon. Sir Mackenzie accepted the tribute and kissed the little girl, at which the audience again cheered lustily.

The Mayor then called upon Sir Adolphe Caron, who was warmly received. He said he was much pleased to be present at this grand demonstration to his beloved leader. He congratulated the Premier on the hearty welcome he had received in his native city. He could corroborate the Premier's remarks in reference to to the Intercolonial Conference. It would not only furnish us with a market for our goods in years to come, but it would tend to bind the colonies closer together. I know that it was to Sir Mackenzie Bowell's initative that the intercolonial conference owed its existence, and to him is the credit for the benefit to be derived therefrom due. I can understand how proud and happy Belleville is to-day to see the printer's devil of sixty years ago the trusted Premier of his country to-day. I can well understand why that address which is a paper in history and which is so well drawn up, contains much which shows the appreciation of the people of this city for the Premier's worth. The present Premier had been as warmly received by the people of Quebec as had the late lamented Sir John Thompson by the people of Ontario. Let us be a united people. We are getting too big to let parish politics have any place in the affairs of our government. He had visited Belleville in the early years of his political career and several times since and on each occasion he had received the most cordial reception. Thanking the Mayor and the audience again he took his seat and was loudly applauded.



HON. SIR A. CARON, M.P., K.C.M.G.

Hon. J. J. Curran was next called upon. He said he was not only pleased to be present on the occasion of this magnificent demonstration, but he was gratified to be able to say a few words. He had had the honor of being for many years connected with the Premier in the administration of the affairs of this Dominion and he had always found him a man above anything petty, a man whose mind was broad, whose heart was sympathetic and always ready to do all in his power for his country. He congratulated the people of Belleville, irrespective of creed or politics, on the magnificence of the demonstration they had tendered the Premier to-day. Everything in connection with this festival was of the best possible character. He thanked the school children for the many beautiful bouquets presented to the Premier, his colleagues and himself. He hoped the Premier would be long spared to carry out the grand work entrusted to him and that this city may grow and prosper. (Loud applause).

Hon. T. M. Daly said he was proud, as [illegible] be present to [illegible] Sir Mackenzie Bo[illegible] the proudest momen[illegible]mier's life. He was glad to [illegible] classes joining together in this demo[illegible]tion. As a Canadian he was proud of [illegible] loyal sentiments of the citizens of Belle[illegible]ville. (Cheers.)

Hon. John F. Wood said he wished to thank the committee under whose auspices he was present to-day. The Premier had commenced his career when a strong hand was needed and he had proven himself an able legislator and an honest steward of the moneys that had passed through his hands. He thanked the Premier for having asked him to assist in the government of this country. It is not an easy country to govern, and he needs all the sympathy and assistance you give him. He thanked the audience for their attentive hearing and retired amid applause.

The name of H. Corby, M. P. was the signal for hearty cheers. He spoke briefly as to the pleasure it gave him to join in this demonstration and do honor to Sir Mackenzie Bowell. He was proud of the Bay of Quinte District and made the remark that the Bay of Quinte boys generally get there, as had Sir Mackenzie. (Loud cheers.)

The Mayor announced that after singing "God Save the Queen" the Premier would be pleased to shake ha[illegible] with all t[illegible] who would come upon the stage. It is needless to say he was kept busy for some time, as there were in the audience hosts of his old friends and admirers.

BOARD OF TRADE BANQUET.

During the interval between the reception in the afternoon and the banquet in the evening the Premier and his colleagues were at liberty and retired to their rooms for a brief rest or to the homes of their friends as the case might be. Between seven and eight o'clock the guests began to arrive at Hotel Quinte and by 8:30 the rotunda present[illegible]nimated scene, while on t[illegible]ir Mackenzie and the [illegible] held an informal recep[illegible]y inspiring to the younger [illegible] the old heroes of the rank and file embrace the opportunity to say a word to their chieftain and shake him by the hand. It was about 9 o'clock when the dining hall doors were opened and soon the large assemblage were seated.

The banquet was in every way a fitting close to the magnificent demonstration tendered the Premier during the day. Although the dining hall is the largest in the city, yet when it was filled to overflowing, there were still many who would have been glad to give twice the price of a ticket to gain admittance. The tables were laid in the form of a double horse-shoe, and were most tastefully, although not gorgeously, laid. Roses, carnations, and candelabra entered into the decorations with pleasing effect. The beautiful glass and silverware of the house tended to set off the tables. On the wall of the dining room was the motto "God Save the Queen," and opposite the speakers on the south wall was the motto "Our Guest. - His Worth is Warrant for his Welcome."

THOMAS RITCHIE, ESQ.

Thos. Ritchie, Esq., President of th[illegible] Board of Trade, occupied the proud pos[illegible] tion of Chairman. his skill. To Mr. Hunter more particularly belongs the honor of successfully managing the whole affair and it cannot but redound in his favor, for everyone was highly pleased with every arrangement.

After all had done justice to the dinner the chairman rose and asked the Secretary of the Board of Trade to read the regrets.

J. Parker Thomas, the Secretary, read the letters of regret at their inability to be present from Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, Hon. J. M. Gibson, Hon. G. W. Ross, E. McGowan, of Ogdensburg; Judge Dean, Lindsay; Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Frank Smith, Hon. Mr. Harty, Hon. John Dryden, Hon. Geo. E. Foster, Hon. W. B. Ives, Hon. E. H. Bronson, Hon. Mr. Hardy, L. J. Sargeant of the G. T. R. the Presidents of the Montreal and Toronto Boards of Trade, Sir William Van Horn, Hon. John Haggart, Hon. Dr. Montague, Hon. A. B. Angers, Hon. John Costigan, Hon. Mr. Patterson, A. F. Wood, ex-M.P.P., Hon. R. Harcourt.

The Chairman then read the following telegram:

VICTORIA, B.C., March 11.

Thos. Ritchie, Esq., President of the Belleville Board of Trade:

Please convey our congratulations to Sir Mackenzie Bowell. Wishing himself and your Board a pleasant gathering. From Belleville friends. Signed: Wm. W. Northcott, John B. Lovell, Wm. Powell, James Root, Angus McKeown, A. Stewart Potts, Thos. Brownlee, J. A. Northcott, W. J. Taylor.

In addition to the above, the chairman said, there were hundreds in our midst that regretted not being able to be present.

The Chairman proposed the toast "The Queen" in the following words:

Gentlemen, I rise to propose the toast which is always honored first wherever British subjects are gathered round the festive board, and there is no place throughout Her Majesty's vast dominions where it is honored more sincerely and enthusiastically than in Canada.

In proposing the health of Her Majesty the Queen it is not customary to make any remarks, but I may be excused in departing from this rule on this particular occasion, as late occurrences seem to justify it.

We all have in melancholy remembrance the sad and tragic event of the death of Sir John Thompson at Windsor Castle last December. We were then deeply moved by the exhibition of sympathy and kindness which welled from the true womanly heart of our beloved Sovereign.

We remember with what tender feeling she embraced the orphan child of the dead statesman and her consoling words to her and to her widowed mother. We remember too her desire to do honor to departed worth by dispatching a war ship to bear the remains home to their native land.

We also remember how, a little later, when the Queen learned of Sir Mackenzie Bowell being ill, her tender solicitude for his recovery prompted her to cable an enquiry every day. All these are true womanly acts which tend to bind us more closely to her person.

The company rose and sang heartily "God Save the Queen" and gave three hearty cheers.

The Chairman, in proposing the toast of "The Governor-General," said:

I rise now to propose the health of His Excellency the Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada. We have been fortunate in the past in having appointed as representatives of Her Majesty in Canada a long line of able and talented men, whose ability and statesmanship has not been excelled by the supreme rulers of any nation on earth, and we now have in the person of Lord Aberdeen a man who has already greatly distinguished himself in the vice regal chair before coming to Canada. As in Ireland, so in this Dominion, he is acting upon the principle that the only true loyalty to crown and country consists in true service to the people and in promoting and executing measures for the well being of those whom he is appointed to govern.

With the toast was coupled the name of J. J. B. Flint, Esq., Police Magistrate, and after the toast had been duly honored the speaker was received with loud applause.

Mr. Flint thanked the company for the hearty manner in which they had honored the toast just proposed and also for the honor done him by associating his name with the toast. He felt pleased to be the first person to be called upon to respond to a toast in this magnificent dining room and he knew the citizens appreciated the efforts of the gentlemen who had spent their time and money in building this grand house. As an old Bay of Quinte boy he dare not refuse to respond when called upon. We have had many eminent men who have helped to mould our constitution, and as before stated, it is a hard task to govern a country like ours, peopled as it is by mixed races. As a citizen of Belleville, he felt to-day great pride in the Premier, whom they were gathered to honor. He had seen him working at the printer's case and he had followed him ever since. He was proud of the position to which he had attained in this grand new Dominion. He had had nothing else with which to fight the battle of life than rugged honesty and an honest heart. Whether Grit or Tory we to-day feel proud of our guest. In reference to the toast to which he had been asked to respond he said, while we have had many good and able men to fill the position of Governor-General, the present representative of Her Most Gracious Majesty is a man whom we delight to honor. He has proven his worth while he has been with us. The speaker went into a brief history of the grand old family of Gordon, of which Lord Aberdeen is an honored descendant. He was loudly applauded on his eloquent effort upon taking his seat.

Upon rising to propose the toast of "Our Guest" the Chairman spoke as follows:

The most pleasant duty of the evening now devolves upon me, that of proposing the health of our distinguished guest, in whose honor we have assembled round this festive board.

As fellow citizens with him of this fair City of the Bay, we most heartily congratulate the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell upon his being called on to fill the most high and honorable position of First Minister of the Crown. What specially reflects greater glory upon him in the exalted position he now occupies, is that he attained to this eminent distinction not through any adventitious circumstances, but through his industry and perseverance and his consistent, honorable, upright conduct as a man.

It must be a source of great gratification to the Premier to know that the enthusiastic reception of this afternoon and of this evening is not a party demonstration got up for party purposes, but it is a cordial recognition of his personal worth participated in by all classes and all shades of politics. Those who differ from him in his stable policy and those who are fully in accord therewith are all equally loud and all equally sincere in offering their meed of praise.

It would not do for me to dwell at length on all the merits of our honored guest here in his presence or to sound his praise as we might, were he absent, and besides it would take too long to even enumerate his life's achievements in his progress up the ladder of fame. Let it suffice to say that in whatever position he has occupied in the past he has fulfilled its duties conscientiously and well, whether in the lowly position of Printer's Devil or in the exalted position of Minister of the Crown. The honorable and gallant knight for many years filled the onerous position of Minister of Customs, and we merchants know well how faithfully he performed his work there. Attending most thoroughly to all the details, which was most laborious work and often very thankless, he was always on the alert to protect the public interests, and at the same time to guard the interests of honest importers by having the law strictly enforced without fear or favor, as no one holding that portfolio had done before him. In short, as Minister of Customs, he was what all rulers ought to be, "A terror to evil doers and a praise to them that do well."

But we need not speak here in detail of his many labors in the service of his country. The worth of these was lately recognized in his being called to preside at the Colonial and Imperial Conference held last Summer in Ottawa, which position he filled with such dignity and ability, that our most gracious Sovereign, in recognition of this and of his past services to his country, determined to confer upon him the most distinguished order of Knighthood of St. Michael and St. George. His brilliant career has now culminated in his being called upon to occupy the highest place in the country next to the Throne.

We recognize in Sir Mackenzie Bowell what is of priceless value to any land, an honest man. What is it that makes any nation truly great and prosperous? It is the character of its people—the honesty and integrity of the individuals composing the nation. We may differ very widely among ourselves as to what each conscientiously believes to be for the best for his native land, but if we are all honest and true in acting upon our convictions of right, and are magnanimous enough to give credit for equal honesty of purpose to those who differ in opinion from us, then we shall surely succeed in working out together a glorious destiny for this great Dominion of ours. All the history of past ages as to the rise and fall of nations proves incontestably that it is not mere national wealth and grandeur, however these may be multiplied and increased, that will make a people united, contented, great and powerful, but it is the love of truth and justice and right pervading the nation.

Without detaining you further, gentlemen, I will ask you to rise and drink heartily with me to the health of the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Premier of the Dominion of Canada. May his life long be spared and may his name descend to future generations honored in the annals of his country. Our guest—"His worth is warrant for his welcome."

The Premier was received with three rousing cheers and a "tiger." When order had been restored he proceeded as follows:

THF PREMIER'S SPEECH.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL, on rising to respond, was received with a great outburst of cheering, which was renewed again and again. At the lower end of one of the tables an enthusiastic admirer struck up: "He's a daisy," and the audience quickly caught up the refrain and sang it with great gusto to the end. When quiet had been restored, which was not for several minutes, he said: Mr. President and gentlemen, if I were to say half that my heart at this moment suggests, I think I should occupy your time until the small hours of the morning; for if ever a man should feel proud of the position which he holds in the affections of the people who know him best, that man is my humble self. The demonstration which has been tendered to me to-day is one of which I feel entirely unworthy, but I accept it as the highest tribute which you could possibly show to one who has been associated with you for more than half a century of time. (Cheers). I know the people of Belleville and the County of Hastings very well. They have conferred many honors upon me, and I take this opportunity of returning my thanks, which I offer from the bottom of my heart, to my old constituents, many of whom are here to-night, for the confidence which they reposed in me, as their representative in Parliament for more than a quarter of a century. While I had the confidence of those who concurred in my political views, it is gratifying to know that I also retain the respect of those who differed from me. (Cheers). I also feel a deep sense of gratification in knowing that the friendliest interest was also taken in me by the people of the [illegible] adjoining ridings in the county of Hastings. (Renewed cheers). In passing down the street to-day, after arriving at the station with some of my colleagues, and seeing the many evidences of respect, I felt that I was amply rewarded for all the toils and all the abuse and all else that has fallen to my lot as a public man. (Hear, hear). You, Sir, referred to the difficulties and many obstacles which men in public positions have to encounter, and I am sure that the only way to surmount them is, upon all occasions, to do that [illegible] you believe to be right, knowing that the good sense of the people will ultimately be your vindication. (Cheers). None could feel otherwise than highly gratified by such a spectacle as met my eyes to-day—the great number of people who lined the streets and the decorations which had been made. But what was most pleasing to me, was to see the number of school children who met us at different points to offer their tokens of respect. Why, sir, most of them have been born since I was called upon to fill the honorable position of a Minister of the Crown. (Hear, hear). First, we had the students of Albert University, which Institution I remember well when it started as the Methodist Seminary, and which has now come to occupy a foremost place among the educational forces—which is creditable alike to its Professors and to those who have given it their support. (Cheers, cheers). I was pleased by the reception which the boys of the University gave me, and I was also much touched by the cheerful heartiness with which they raised their voices in honor of your guest to-night. What pleased me more than anything, however, was the unity of feeling that was shown between the children of our Public Schools and the children of that school over which my friend Monsignor Farrelly—and I think I may safely call him my friend—presides. (Cheers). During the thirteen years in which I had the honor of being at the head of the Public School Board of this town, we always worked harmoniously, with the one object in view of assisting the children to discharge their duty to their God and country. (Cheers). I am now pretty well on in years, but I sincerely hope that the feeling may continue to grow in this country, so that we may enjoy the fruits of that intercourse and kindly feeling which should exist between all classes of the community, and thus defeat the aims of those agitators who have only their own aggrandizement in view, and who use these means of climbing to the top of a ladder which they could never reach on their own merits. (Cheers). I know, Mr. President, that this is a non-political banquet. I shall, therefore, say what is in my mind in general terms; although, if I had a political speech to make I think I could do much better. (Laughter). I shall not be able to speak to you with that eloquence with characterized the address of my friend the Police Magistrate. He spoke to-night with that same easy flow of language which I have so often heard when he and I had discussed politics in the northern part of this county; for I have had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Flint more than once, on what is commonly called the "stump." His eloquence I never possessed. I always tried to state the case in that practical way which I thought the people would best understand, and the result was that I always came out ahead of my friend. (Cheers and Laughter.) You must not, however, understand me to minimize the talents which my friend so well exhibited in the speech which he has made to us to-night. What I have said is in the way of badinage; for, you know, I always like to exchange compliments with those with whom I have come in contact in days gone by. Let me now say that I did not assume the responsible position which I now hold, without a good deal of fear and trembling. My colleagues who are here to-night, will bear witness to that. And here, permit me to say in behalf of my French colleagues, two of whom are here to-night, that no one came more cheerfully to my support than did they. (Cheers.) Sir Adolphe Caron and I have worked together in the House of Commons since 1873. As a general rule we worked harmoniously, for the simple reason that we did, even though we were wrong, what we honestly believed to be for the benefit of this great Dominion. (Cheers.) This is quite as true of all my colleagues. Permit me to turn aside for a moment and say that since I have had the honor of being Premier of this country, I have had so many kind things said of me, and so many things that are not kind, that I scarcely know what I really am. (Laughter.) No sooner had I assumed the duties of my office, than a French Canadian journal, published in Ottawa and called "Le Temps" denounced me as having been, and still being, at the head of a blood-thirsty association. (Laughter.) The answer to that charge I think I may safely leave to the judgment of those who have known me here for so many years, and I think the Very Rev. gentleman who sits on my right will also exculpate me from any particular blood-thirstiness. Then, on the other hand, I observe that my old friend Dalton McCarty, in a speech which he made at Picton, sneeringly said, "Mr. Bowell is as good a Protestant as I am." This he followed by a long speech which was calculated to show that throughout my whole political career I had been the very opposite. (Laughter.) In this latter view he was supported by the Mayor, who said: "As for Mackenzie Bowell, his career has been such as to stamp him as much a tool of the Roman Hierarchy as any member of the Church of Rome." (Laughter.) Perhaps some of my old friends here will tell how many times I have been to mass and confession. But let me go a little further. There is a member of the House of Commons named Devlin. Neither his position in the House, nor in the country, would justify me in referring to him at any particular length; but he is one of those Irishmen who has the gift of the gab, and whenever he rises to speak, he denounces what he calls "sectarian bigotry." Speaking recently at Montreal, he said: "I do not for the life of me see how any Irish Catholic can support Bowell, who did not reach his position through any intelligence he possesses, but simply by his hatred of the Catholic people. For my part, this is a matter of conscience and I cannot support such a man." Now, if he has a conscience and his conscience leads him to that conclusion, he is quite right in saying he cannot support me, but, after sixty years residence in this city, I think I can appeal to the Catholics who have known me during that long period, to answer whether or not that criticism was justifiable. (Cheers.) Then I observe that Mr. Tarte came forward and denounced me as an Orangeman, and therefore he could not support me. I did not mind that, but when he said that I had instigated an attack against [illegible] had conspired to injure Mr. Chapleau, [illegible] of my former colleagues, I felt indignant. (Hear hear.) If there is any trait in my character in which I take pride, it is that I am above being a conspirator. (Cheers.) Upon one occasion my friend here at my right (Hon. Mr. Ouimet) took different views upon a certain question before the House, and he went a little further than I thought he should have gone. Seeing rather an angry look in my face, and not knowing me as well as he does now, he went to Mr. Chapleau and remarked that he had probably offended me. Mr. Chapleau, who knew me well, at once said, "If you have, he will surely tell you of it." (Hear, hear.) Now when Mr. Tarte says that I caballed against my old colleagues, he says what is best answered by a very expressive little Anglo-Saxon word of three letters. (Cheers.) Conspiracy is as repugnant to my nature, as honesty is to Mr. Tarte's. I now come a little nearer home and find that my next critic is one whom I have known since 1838. In a letter to the press of this city he declared that I am not a good Methodist and that he does not belong to my party. There are two truths in that letter. First, that I was not as good a Methodist as I ought to be, and second, that he does not belong to my party. I thank God for the latter, for I do not want any man to be a follower of mine who could be so narrow minded as that Rev. gentleman. (Cheers.) He says I never evinced any desire to flee from the wrath to come. I dare say he knows more of my life than I do myself. But there is one thing I do know; my poor old father, as many years ago as 1838, had some idea of what might become of his son if he allowed him to pass under the tuition of that Rev. gentleman. At that time, the Rev. gentleman was conducting a newspaper in this city, which was owned by a man named Hart, who afterwards went to Cobourg and tried to take from the bank there the funds that were needed for the support of the rebel cause in Belleville. About that time, the paper came out one morning with the coat of arms turned upside down at the head of the editorial column, and the naughty volunteers went into the office and threw the type out of the back door, and next morning took the editor by the scruff of the neck and threw him after his type. (Laughter.) Well, this Rev. gentleman came to my father's house one morning and said, "I understand you have a son who knows how to set type." My father said he had, whereupon the Rev. gentleman said he would like to have the boy come and work on his paper. "What paper?" inquired my father. "The Plain Speaker" was the reply. My father laid his knife and fork down, and with some show of indignation said, "When I wish my son to be brought up for the gallows, I will let him go to work in your office." (Laughter and applause). That occurred over half a century ago, and he has waited until now to get a rap at me. It is not true that I ever posed as a Methodist to gain notoriety. What the newspapers said about me in that relation was said on their own account, and I have no more control over what they said in laudation than I have over those that assail me in unwarranted attacks. (Hear, hear). The effect, however, is to place me in a position something like that which an old acquaintance of mine found himself in one morning, after a night's excesses. His name was Ami, and he lived near Madoc. Seeing his wet and bedraggled clothes, and not knowing how he got there, he looked himself over and asked: Am I Ami, or am I not Ami? If I'm not Ami, who the devil am I? (Laughter). However this may apply to me, I wish to repeat my great gratitude to the people of Belleville, who have given me such a hearty welcome to-day. One of the best evidences that it is not political is, that I see my friend the President of the Reform Association in one of the vice chairs. (Cheers). I hope that the feeling which this fact indicates, may continue. (Hear, hear). I trust that the young men of our country, although they may not reach positions of eminence, may not allow their party conflicts to engender personal animosities, but may exhibit toward each other that kindly feeling which I am so pleased to see shown towards myself (Hear, hear.) In this connection, I cannot refrain from saying a word about the old Belleville and Hastings boys who wrote me from all parts of this continent, extending their heartiest congratulations to me on the honors conferred upon me. From points as far south as California, and as far north as British Columbia, letters and telegrams came to me of an exceedingly gratifying character. I see here to-night faces that I have known from my boyhood, while I miss many others which I should be glad to see. Within the time of my public career, leaving aside personal matters for the time being, I have seen all the Provinces of British North America united with one single exception. Canada within that period has made great progress, and to-day she occupies one of the foremost positions in the world, commercially, politically, educationally and intellectually (Cheers.) I believe I am safe in saying that there is not a colony or a country in the world presenting finer educational advantages—whether for the rich or poor, blind or deaf, in high station or humble in life. (Cheers.) Our institutions open their doors to all, with the widest possible freedom. We are a free people. But there is such a thing as the abuse of freedom, degeneration into license; there is a democracy that leads to tyranny; and we should be careful to observe that happy medium which now prevails. (Hear hear.) Commercially, it may be said, that our trade now extends to all parts of the world. You, Sir, referred in complimentary terms to the Colonial Conference. If I were to give the history of my visit to Australia, and go into the results of that mission at any length, I should weary you; but I wish to say this, that few people have an adequate conception of the vast resources of that part of Her Majesty's possession. (Cheers.) They are now where we were 28 years ago. They have seven separate and distinct Governments, each separated from the other by jealousies and conflicting interests and incapable of united action for the good of the whole. This was well illustrated at the Colonial Conference. When my colleagues, the Postmaster-General, the Finance Minister or I spoke at the Conference, we spoke for the whole Dominion; but when the Australian delegates spoke it was for New South Wales, Victoria, Greenland, South Australia, New Zealand or Tasmania. I frankly told them that until they dropped this provincial idea and formed a basis of union, they would never be able to accomplish much in the way of bringing the British Colonies closer together for purposes of trade or joint action in anything. (Cheers.) They realize that, I think. That Conference accomplished as much as any man could have expected. It did not bring about a union for the development of intercolonial commerce, but it did much to pave the way. (Hear hear.) It also did much to strengthen the scheme of Australasian federation, and that was much needed. Why, sir, when I went there I found that it would take me two or three years to bring about a satisfactory commercial arrangement. Each colony had its own notion about the tariff that should prevail. One was highly protectionist, the other professedly in favor of free trade. Their legislation, in fact, seemed designed to keep the colonies apart. Their railways were of different gauges, Queensland being narrow gauge, New South Wales standard gauge and Victoria broad gauge. (Laughter.) One of the newspapers, commenting on a speech that I had made, said it was strange that a gentleman should have to come ten thousand miles to tell them what to do; "but," added this paper, "he has told us the truth." (Cheers). Apart from the results of the Colonial Conference, to which I have alluded in general terms, it has been [illegible] gratify[illegible] to me to observe [illegible] have been discussed [illegible] Parliament for the executio[illegible] at the meeting in [illegible] (Hear, hear.) It was pleasing [illegible] clause in the Governor's speech [illegible] Victoria, referring to my visit to that colony; but it was still more pleasing to observe a paragraph in the speech of Her Majesty, read at the opening of the Imperial Parliament, indicating the great importance which was attached to our deliberations. (Cheers).

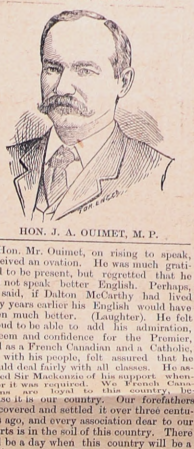
Now, Sir, the commercial progress of Canada has been very great within the twenty-seven years which have elapsed since I entered Parliament, and I could give you figures to emphasize that fact; but figures are dry. It is said that Gladstone is the only man who can talk figures and be interesting all the time—which is a great accomplishment. I wish, however, to refer to the development of one great industry, and I do so because we have a very deep interest in this part of the industry. I refer to the [illegible] industry. (Cheers). I have selecte[illegible] period within which I have been [illegible] because it harmonizes wi[illegible] though I see some g[illegible] have known me for many [illegible] than that. I see Mr. John [illegible] me, and remember that he and I [illegible] to go out as scrutineers in some of the earlier campaigns. I had just gradua[illegible] from the interesting position of Printer's Devil, while he was a full fledged lawyer; but that did not prevent me from having the cheek to meet him. (Cheers and laughter). I speak of a later period than that in relation to the cheese industry. [illegible] at 1868, I find that we exported [illegible] year 124,320 lbs, while last year the figures reached the very large sum of 154,977,480 lbs. (Cheers). In 1868 the value of our exports of cheese was $13.675 as against $15,488,191 last year. (Renewed cheers). How have our neighbors across the line fared in this respect? When we exported 124,320 lbs., they sent abroad 15,500,000 lbs. Last year we stood at the head of them by the enormous amount of 81,126,046 lbs. The total value of their exportation being $7,180,232 as against $15,488,191. (Cheers). Yet, I am safe in saying that this industry is yet in its infancy, and, viewed in the light of British importations, is capable of very much further development. (Hear, hear).

He had been informed, he said, by the Governor-General that he had been greatly impressed by his warm reception in Belleville last year; that he remembered it with great pleasure and that his only regret was that the Countess of Aberdeen had not been able to accompany him to our beautiful City of the Bay.

I must now draw my remarks to a close; before doing so, however, I should like, having regard to the object of this demonstration, to tell the young men of Canada is but one road to success: that road is along the lines of industry, perseverance and integrity in every position in life. (Cheers). It is as true of the printers' devil as it is of the lawyer; of the apprentice in the machine shop as the clerk in the bank. I know some boys in my younger days who never worked a moment after the six o'clock bell struck, nor a moment before seven in the morning. I have watched their career during a long life, and I have not seen one of them rise to any position of prominence in the country. (Cheers). The young man who succeeds, is he who works at his master's business as though it were his own; who never objects to an extra hour at either end of the day when it becomes necessary. (Hear, hear.) What applies to the individual also fits the nation. Sir, I have a marvellous confidence in what we may do in Canada if we only stand true to ourselves. (Cheers.) I have been called an optimist; but the man who is a pessimist ever looking on the dark and discouraging side of things is the man who never accomplishes much. (Hear Hear.) To make our future great we must have faith in our mission on this portion of the North American continent, we must feel that there is something to be accomplished in working out our destiny. In doing this we should never forget that in this northern climate we have a superior class of men—men, who, if they apply their energies as I have indicated, will never lead England to regret that Canada is among her possessions. (Cheers.) And, sir, speaking of our destiny, I hope the time is not far distant when this great Dominion will be rounded off by the admission of that interesting island which lies at the mouth of the St. Lawrence. (Cheers.) There are difficulties in the way, arising largely from treaties which the mother country entered into when she thought Canada of little value; but they may be met, although it would be a long story to go into the details of the matter. I simply wish to hint at what the policy of the Government is in that respect. And now, gentlemen, you may call us Tories, or Liberal Conservatives, but it will be our aim to promote the progress of this country by dealing out, irrespective of creed or race, equal rights and privileges to all classes of the community.

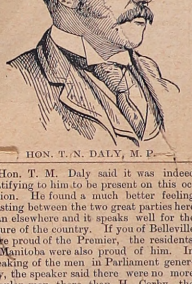
As the Premier sat down the guests rose to their feet and cheered him again and again, waving their handkerchiefs and singing with lusty enthusiasm "He's a Premier; he's a Premier just now."

"The Senate and House of Commons" was honored with loud cheers.



HON. J. A. OUIMET, M. P.

Hon. Mr. Ouimet, on rising to speak, received an ovation. He was much gratified to be present, but regretted that he did not speak better English. Perhaps, he said, if Dalton McCarthy had lived fifty years earlier his English would have been much better. (Laughter). He felt proud to be able to add his admiration, esteem and confidence for the Premier, and as a French Canadian and a Catholic, he, with his people, felt assured that he would deal fairly with all classes. He assured Sir Mackenzie of his support whenever it was required. We French Canadians are loyal to this country, because it is our country. Our forefathers discovered and settled it over three centuries ago, and every association dear to our hearts is in the soil of this country. There will be a day when this country will be a distinct nation. This is the work you young men have before you. It affords me pleasure to say that Canada will never have more loyal or devoted sons than the French-Canadians of Quebec. Although some people have said the Premier is not a good Methodist, and others that he is too good an Orangeman, yet the Catholics of the Dominion have every confidence in him. What we want is the constitutional rights of the majority, and the rights written in the constitution for the minority. Although he was going away on the train, which was nearly due, still his heart would remain with his leader. When we witness a demonstration of this kind, we are constrained to believe there is still something for the public servant to expect. (Loud applause.)



HON. T. N. DALY, M. P.

Hon. T. M. Daly said it was indeed gratifying to him to be present on this occasion. He found a much better feeling existing between the two great parties here than elsewhere and it speaks well for the future of the country. If you of Belleville were proud of the Premier, the residents of Manitoba were also proud of him. In speaking of the men in Parliament generally, the speaker said there were no more popular men there than H. Corby, the representative from the West Riding of this county, and Mr. W. B. Northrup, of the East Riding. W. H. Biggar was also a popular man in the Ontario Legislature. The Bay of Quinte district had sent to the Legislative halls some grand men, such as the late Messrs. Murney, Baldwin, Wallbridge, Robertson and Burdett. As a young Canadian he was proud of being present to assist in doing honor to the beloved Premier. The worthy Premier was a man of high character, against whom nothing could be said.

HON. A. R. DICKEY, M. P.

Hon. A. R. Dickey was the next speaker and was most heartily received. He said he came from one of the eastern provinces to do honor to the Premier of Canada. Sir Mackenzie Bowell won his reputation in the House of Commons. The House of Commons was composed of men who had high aspirations and a better body of men can not be found in the world, not even excepting the members of Parliament of Great Britain. As a Nova Scotian he (the speaker) was present to do honor to the guest of the evening. The Premier was a man who had risen from a low to an exalted position and in doing so never pushed any other man down. He always gave all men fair play.

HON. J. J. CURRAN, M. P.

Hon. J. J. Curran was most enthusiastically received and gave an address worthy of the man and the occasion. He said that the gathering was an inspiring one. The hon. Premier was a true Canadian having a desire to do all he could for his country. It was the Boards of Trade which had assisted much in placing Canada in the commercial position which she to-day occupied in the world. In the House of Commons some eminent men had held sway. The speaker grew eloquent in reference to the late lamented D'Arcy McGee, Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Geo. Cartier and Sir John Thompson and others, who will ever live in history. The late Premier, Sir John Thompson, distinguished himself at Washington, London and at the Behring Sea arbitration held at Paris. His lamented death at Windsor Castle bound closer together the mother country and Canada. The act of Her Gracious Majesty as she gathered in her arms the fatherless child and planted upon her cheek the kiss of affection and sympathy, would ever be held in remembrance by the people of this land. His remains were brought here upon the magnificent warship Blenheim, with the Union Jack as his shroud. These acts could not but help cement still firmer the bond of unity. In his closing remarks the speaker paid a glowing tribute to Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

Mr. S. Burrows was called upon for a song and responded, singing "Fair Canada." He was in fine voice and sang with much effect.

HON. JOHN F. WOOD, Q. C., M. P.

Hon. J. F. Wood said he was delighted to visit Belleville and add to his acquaintances here, and more particularly those opposed to him in politics. He was sure the Premier had enjoyed none of his life's achievements more than he had the magnificent reception tendered him here to-day. The Bay of Quinte district has the honor of having furnished two Premiers, Sir John McDonald and Sir Mackenzie Bowell. The toast I am called upon to respond to is of great importance and I am sure the House of Commons, of which I have the honor to be a member, will compare favorably with any legislative body in the world. Edward Blake, in his opinion, was one of the greatest parliamentarians of the age, and notwithstanding that he differed from him in politics, still he was glad to be able to speak thus of him. He was pleased to have the opportunity of expressing honest sentiments in reference to his political opponents. It is the duty of the Parliament to watch the sentiments of the people and then be able to mould their legislation in conformity with these sentiments. Amongst all the auxiliaries surrounding the parent stock, Canada bids fair to ever hold the chief position. (Applause).

Hon. Senator Read was warmly welcomed on rising to speak. He said he had been spoken of as the youthful Senator. He felt youthful, and a man is generally just as young as he feels. He felt it an honor to be present to do honor to his old friend. The Premier was his foster-father politically, for it was he who had first induced him to go into political life and he had watched over him ever since. He considered the Senate the most notable body of men in the country. These young Commoners are just preparing for the Senate. The Commons look to the Senate to correct their mistakes and he instanced many bills that, both Government and private, that they had amended and sent back to the Lower House. He wished to thank the Premier for having filled a very important position for him twenty-one weeks ago to-day—that of standing up with him when he plighted his troth. He was loudly cheered on taking his seat.

Hon. J. J. Curran sang "Miss Brady's Pianoforte," much to the amusement of the company.

Senator Sullivan made a brief and humorous speech. He congratulated Belleville on the excellence of the entertainment put up by them. He had never seen anything to equal it. He hoped Mr. Corby and Mr. Biggar would ever retain the proud distinction of being the most popular men in this district. He thought too many encomiums could not be paid to the guest of the evening, and he knew the country would receive the news of this grand reception with deep satisfaction. He was glad to know that Belleville has been in a position to honor their former citizen, for he deserved it all. (Applause.)

Senator Sanford said the Senate had been called old fogies and worn out, but such was not the case. It was a happy day for him to see such a grand reception tendered to his old and warm friend Sir Mackenzie Bowell. He referred feelingly to the death of Sir John Thompson. He rejoiced with the people of Belleville that Sir Mackenzie has been appointed to his present proud position. He richly deserves all the honor you have bestowed upon him to-day. (Cheers)

George Taylor, M. P. for South Leeds, spoke briefly at the pleasure it gave him to be present to do honor to his illustrious leader.

H. Corby, M.P., was given three rousing cheers on rising to speak. He was pleased to have the honor of responding to the toast of "The Senate and the House of Commons." He paid a high tribute to the Premier. He was glad to see political opponents join in the demonstration.

The Chairman, in calling upon W. B. Northrup, M.P., referred to him as the silver-tongued orator of the Bay of Quinte District. The speaker expressed the pleasure it afforded him to be present. We believe that this country of ours has a grand future before it and we also believe we are destined to work out that future for ourselves. He paid a tribute of respect to the guest of the evening. His speech was eloquent and pregnant with flowery metaphors.

Mr. S. Burrows was again called upon and sang his old favorite "The Union Jack of Old England," with chorus by the company.

The toast list was handed over to Mr. John G. Frost, vice-chairman. He said although he was President of the West Hastings Reform Association, he had no reluctance in doing honor to their distinguished guest. He was sure the Premier deserved all the honor done him on this occasion.

"The Ontario Legislature" was proposed and and duly honored.

W. H. Biggar, M.P.P., was the first speaker to respond to this toast. He said he came here to do honor to the guest of the evening. He felt it a duty to do honor to those who honor us. In speaking of the Legislature he was sure there were many members on both sides of that House who would do honor to any legislative body. While in Ottawa there are only two parties, in Toronto there are five and each with a policy. As a citizen of Belleville he was proud to hear the praise bestowed on them for the manner in which they had entertained the Premier. He only hoped he would live to receive half the honors bestowed on Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

W. P. Hudson, ex-M.P.P., spoke briefly of the pleasure it gave him to be present. He had known Sir Mackenzie from his boyhood and he and his father had received many kindnesses from him.

"The Army and Navy," coupled with the names of Col. Brown and Major Ponton, was the next toast. Both of these gentlemen spoke briefly of the organizations with which they are connected. Major Ponton asked the members present to use their influence towards receiving for our old volunteers long service medals.

Mr. John G. Frost proposed the toast of "The City of Belleville," coupled with the names of Mayor Walmsley, Ald. C. Bogart and Ald. N. B. Falkiner.

His Worship spoke briefly referring to the pleasure which the citizens felt in having the privilege of doing honor to the worthy Premier. Belleville was proud to-night and justly so. He referred to the position which the city occupied, and felt certain that brighter days were in store for it.

Ald. C. Bogart said we can boast of having the most beautiful city on earth. We are proud of it. They were pleased to have the privilege of honoring Sir Mackenzie Bowell whose home is here.

Hon. J. J. Curran was called upon for a song and responded.

Ald. N. B. Falkiner said he had known the worthy Premier for 32 years. He was a grand old man. He had proved himself in days gone by to have been a faithful soldier. His past career was evidence that he would in the future do right. He (the speaker) loved a man that loved his country. The day was one which the citizens had every reason to be proud of. He hoped that Sir Mackenzie Bowell would long be spared to hold the position of Premier.

ALD. N. B. FALKINER

At this stage of the proceedings the toast list was handed over to Mr. J. W. Johnson, another vice chairman. He said Sir Mackenzie Bowell was the father of the Board of Trade of Belleville. As far back as 1865 he and the late Thos. Holden were delegates to the convention which was held in the city of Detroit in the interest of commercial men. They were all pleased to have the privilege of doing honor to the distinguished Premier of the Dominion. He proposed the toast of "Trade and Commerce."

Mr. C. M. Stork, Manager of the Bank of Commerce, responded briefly, referring especially to the excellent banking law which was in vogue in Canada. He also spoke in an eulogistic manner of the guest of the evening.

The toast of "The Ladies" was proposed and appropriately responded to by Prof. Denys of the Deaf and Dumb Institute, and Ald. J. H. Starling.

Mr. Thos. Wills, County Treasurer another vice-chairman, proposed the toast of "The Press." This was spoken to by Mr. [illegible] on behalf of the INTELLIGENCER, J. P. McConnell of the Sun, and W. S. B. Armstrong of the Ontario.

This completed the list of regular toasts. Sir Mackenzie Bowell said he wished to propose a toast before the gathering came to a close. It was that of the Chairman, who had presided over the affair with much dignity. Mr. Ritchie was known as a successful business man and was one of the largest importers of the country. The toast was heartily received, after Hon. T. M. Daly had said a few words endorsing what the Premier had said.

Mr. Ritchie spoke a few words in reply thanking the gentlemen for the many kind words which had been spoken. It was a pleasure for him to preside over such a grand gathering. In concluding he complimented the Premier upon the proud position he occupied.

The gathering was then brought to a close by the joining of hands and singing Auld Lang Syne and the National Anthem.

NOTES.

In order to furnish a complete narrative of the demonstration and banquet in one day's issue, we reproduce in other columns that portion of the report which was given yesterday.

Mr. J. J. B. Flint was a thoroughly capable marshal.

Mr. T. S. Carman kindly placed his handsome team and pleasure sleigh at the disposal of the Committee.

Prince Edward sent the following influential delegation: A. C. Miller, M. P., S. M. Conger, J. W. Conger, W. Boulter, J. N. Carter, P. R. Young, R. Hadden, J. C. Wilson, A. H. Baker, W. H. Williamson, W. Moffatt, Wm. M. Owens, Dorland Fox, John Prinyer, D. B. Solmes, Russell Solmes, Wm. Anderson, Jas. Hudgin, Nostrand Sprague, R. Hubbs, John Van Cleaf.

The accommodations and appointments of the Hotel Quinte were favorably commented on by many men who had travelled extensively.

Sir A. P. Caron and Hon. Mr. Ouimet were obliged, much to their regret, to leave the festive board in order to catch the 1 a. m. express.

Mr. George Taylor, M. P., Hon. Mr. Wood, Mr. Jas. Metcalfe, M. P., Mr. Wilson, M. P., and Senator Sullivan left by the 12:45 p.m. train to-day.

The guests who sat down at the banquet numbered 163.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who is accompanied by his Private Secretary, Mr. J. L. Payne, will leave for Ottawa to-night.

The following gentlemen represented the Trenton deputation: Col. Urquhart, President of the West Hastings Conservative Association; Dr. Jaques, M. B. Morrison, Mayor; Rev. W. T. Wilkins, Very Rev. Dean Murray, J. L. Falconer, J. E. Empey, G. W. Ostrom, ex-M.P.P., P. J. O'Rourke, T. H. Bleecker, A. Abbott, Geo. Collins, and D. R. Murphy.

H. Corby, M.P., was a busy man all day, and before the banquet in the evening, he presented many of his friends to the Premier and the Ministers.

Mr. Ritchie made an excellent chairman, and his remarks in prefacing the toasts were pointed and in good taste.

Mr. D. Gunn, station agent, assisted materially at the depot in arranging the conveyances and starting the procession. Chief Newton was also at the right place at the right time.

Mr. John Parker Thomas, Secretary of the Board of Trade, did a large amount of work in an efficient but unpretending manner. He has been Secretary of the Board since its formation in 1865, and is a barrister of thirty years' standing.

Mr. J. P. Thompson has been a busy man since the preparations for the banquet first started, and much of the success of the banquet is due to his untiring exertions.

For Sore Throat, Sudden Colds and Diphtheria, no remedy has ever been discovered so powerful to cure as Davis' PAIN-KILLER. As a Liniment it has no equal in curing Rheumatism or Neuralgia, Burns and Bruises, and wounds of every description. It is the cheapest and best remedy ever offered to the public. Only 25c. for big 2 ounce bottle.

Level-headed lawyers, who generally know on which side to butter their bread; shrewd business men, who know that a dollar saved is as good as a dollar made; pushing clerks, who work hard for every dollar they get and should try to spend it wisely; gentlemen, who have no visible means of support (not tramps), mechanics and farmers all seem to have waked up to the fact that ready-made boots fit better, are cheaper and wear just as well as when ordered, and that Haines & Lockett's new spring stock is simply immense and they will buy there for 1895.

BANCROFT.

Although the winter has been very severe the amount of snow has not been near the common depth. Sleighing has been very good throughout the season, with the exception of a few drifty days.—Business in the woods is now near the finish and has been remarkably active, particularly north of Bancroft. The St. Anthony Lumber Co. have a large cut of logs, which will be manufactured into lumber at their new mill on Long Lake, 40 miles north of us. The whole quantity is already sold out and its transportation will be a large item in the traffic account of the new railroad to Arnprior and Ottawa.—Competing lines to this place will soon be running if report stands good and the first line established is certain to secure the best trade.—Some little time since Mrs. Susanna Plunkett, a monthly nurse, who has practiced in that capacity for many years, and holds a diploma of efficiency from the Royal College of Surgeons as midwife, was informed against and prosecuted before a local Magistrate by the Toronto faculty and fined $25 and expenses for not coming within their regulations. Since then, although she has practiced with marked success, she has declined all calls for her services. Recently in one instance she was sent for in haste to attend a woman in confinement, but had to refuse, as she was not inclined to submit to a further penalty; the result was that a few days afterwards the woman's friends came again and requested a mere friendly visit, and on her arrival at the house she found the woman in the last stage, and near her end from neglect and improper treatment. She, however, advised the attendance of a medical practitioner at once, but it was then too late and the woman died, really a victim of red tape. Politics aside, the bill before the Ontario House to meet such a case, is worthy of consideration.

FACTS WORTH KNOWING.

The After Effects of Acute Diseases Often More Serious Than the Original Trouble—How They Can be Avoided.

The after effects of acute diseases, such as fevers. etc., often produce more disastrous results to the system than the original disease. An apt illustration is the case of Mrs. J. E. Griffin, of White Head, N. B. Mrs Griffin, says:—"Twenty-two years ago I contracted typhoid fever, which left in my system the seeds of disease which all these years have caused me much suffering and inconvenience. The trouble appeared to be mainly in the form of hip disease, making me very lame. This in time produced severe nervousness and frequently I passed sleepless nights. I tried many remedies but always without any marked benefit until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

I have used in all ten boxes of this grand medicine, with the result that my lameness has disappeared, the feeling of nervous despondency is gone and I now always get sound, refreshing sleep. I feel very thankful for what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for me and I now always recommend them to my friends who may be ailing."

Those who are recovering from fevers, la grippe, or acute diseases of any nature require a tonic and blood builder to fully restore the system to its normal condition and in such an emergency no other remedy is so successful as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

They act directly and promptly on the blood, giving it a strong, healthly tone, and in this way brace up the whole system, giving the patient renewed health and vigor. Pink Pills cure when other medicines fail, hence the marvellous popularity of this medicine. Refuse all imitations and substitutes.

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

Reasons for Success.

The success of Norway Pine Syrup as a cure for coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles is due to the fact that it is the best and pleasantest remedy ever discovered, and because its action is prompt and certain.

Chronic Derangements of the Stomach, Liver and Blood, are speedily removed by the active principle of the ingredients entering into the composition of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. These pills act specifically on the deranged organs, stimulating to action the dormant energies of the system, thereby removing disease and renewing life and vitality to the afflicted. In this lies the great secret of the popularity of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills.

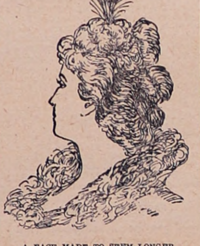
BEAUTY AS A DUTY.

WOMAN IS MORALLY BOUND TO LOOK HER LEVEL BEST.

Few Subtle Hints for Helping Nature—On the Use of Cosmetics—How to Handle the Hair—The Abolition of Crow's Feet and Wrinkles.

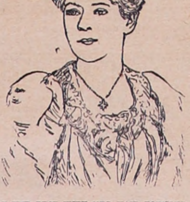
GREAT is the number of women who consider the use of "anything on the face" as one the sign posts along the downward path. At the thought of using cosmetics, brush or pencil to supply nature's lacks, these women stand aghast. But those women whose positions in society bring them into the centre of the social fray think otherwise, and they excuse their indulgence by asserting that a woman's duty is to look attractive, no matter what her physical drawbacks may be. Some go much further and claim the right to enhance their good looks by any means at hand. It is the purpose of this description to urge either the cause or the abolishment of cosmetics, but merely to point out how the skilled manipulator utilizes its trickery. Women follow pretty closely the laws aid down by Dame Fashion for their attire, but as to face and hair, every woman takes the course she deems most becoming to herself. For instance, a lot is said in these days about the central parting and "Miss Prim" style for the hair. Still, the girl with an irregular, vivacious face may draw her hair down over her ears if she thinks it becoming, but discard all other concessions to the Prim fashion, do her locks in all sorts of frivolous little perkles in the back and round it softly from her forehead in the front. such a coiffure is seen beside the initial picture and is the best taste for its wearer, though not in line with the trying smoothness that is demanded from slavish followers of fashion's laws.

Having done as she pleased with her hair and found it improving to her appearance, this same woman will be tempted to dust a little powder over her chin, if she believes that it will make her face seem softer and prettier than as if the skin were not so veiled. If she have pretty red lips and the trace of color she needs in her cheeks, the little dusting of powder is all that is helpful. This she puts on lightly, not in the least like the professional application of "chalk" that is demanded by the footlights.



A FACE MADE TO SEEM LONGER.

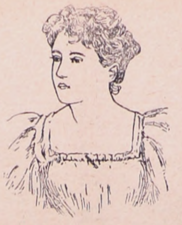
Having gone so far, she will go a little farther if it be needed. Suppose her lips are chapped and rough; she will reason that no one is going to object to an application of cold cream to restore their smoothness and incidentally her beauty. Maybe the color does not come to them as it should, why not then, thinks she, use a pink cold cream instead of a white one? She'll tell you very positively that nothing could be uglier or more vulgar than to paint the lips, but that their own color may be encouraged, as by powder the softness and clearness of the skin is enhanced. If the eyebrows be prettily marked, how foolish it would be to do anything to them, but suppose they are not? Suppose they have ingrowing corners at the inner ends and actually meet over the nose. Many a beauty has been spoiled by this blemish. All that growth of hair that is turned in instead of out is a disfigurement and nothing more. Why leave it there any more than to permit a smooch of soot on the tip of the nose? You have the right to remove it, say these philosophers, and they prove possessed of the courage of their convictions by promptly doing it. With a pair of tweezers they pull out every hair up to the little parting that marks the line where the real eyebrow begins. For a little while the tweezers must be used regularly, but soon the abnormal growth will cease, just as after a while with the legitimate use of powder the roughness of the skin will go away.



AT HER BEST WITH HER HAIR TOWSLED.

So far the steps of progress have been of even length, but the next one is a stride at which many will falter. But the knowing ones take it and claim it is but right, if the eyebrows give out of a sudden at the outer corner, or their arch be interrupted, to finish out what nature intended by shadowing in what is needed with a bit of a burnt match. This is very different from vulgarly tracing a heavy black mark over the arch of the brows, they will tell you; the one is necessary, and therefore excusable for the footlights, the other is as legitimate for all other times as wearing a best gown or putting on a bow of becoming ribbon. And this argument is very often effective. The owner of brows that are perfect is not moved by it, naturally enough, but the other sort thinks it a telling one.

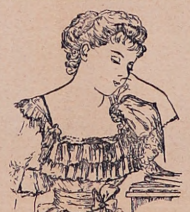
Reurning again to the point where woman is much inclined to make each her own fashion—that is, the hair, it will be found that the style now is to either draw the locks smoothly up very high or to have it in a low knot, parted severely in front and combed down over the ears. But the wise woman whose hair line at the back of the neck is not pretty and whose hair best disposes itself in soft knots at the back of the head, will combine both fashions. What is more, though she may take advantage of the downward side sweep of the hair over the ear tips, she will wear a little bang if her forehead need it, and if the face need length she will raise the hair softly back of the bang. The result of this independence of treatment can be judged from the first picture of full size. It will be seen that to make the face seem longer, a small aigrette is put atop the last mentioned soft puffs.



MASSAGE NEEDED TO PREVENT CROW'S-FEET.

Now supose this woman to be of the dull blond type, whose only natural beauty is a childish mop of soft, corn-colored hair. With such and sallow cheeks and faded eyes she will make no impression for prettiness, in spite of her cleverly arranged locks. Again comes the opportunity for the wavering line of the eyebrows with a pale shadowing of burnt match. Then brilliancy can be given the eyes by—whisper, this is a great secret—just the least application of dust on the upper lid and lower, as it may happen to smudge itself from the rub of the finger. The impalpable grey powder that comes on the tops of picture frames, doors or any other undisturbed place, will do the trick. As much as just sofly attaches to the finger tip is enough for both eyes, and rubbed on carefully, it will give a shadowy setting to the eye that will relieve it of the pale, bluish look of skin that so often spoils the eyes of the sallow blonde. If carefully done there will be not the least suggestion of vulgar "lining" of the eye or painting. If the face need color, the use over all of very dark pink powder will do, giving a rosy look to the general tone of the skin. If a little special color be needed for the cheeks, a pale pink cold cream, not the least like professional carmine or rouge, does good service. This is rubbed softly into the cheeks and dried off, and pinkish powder goes on over it. Neither the one nor the other shows, only a tinge of beautiful rosiness appears when it is all done. The handkerchief can be passed over the face and eyes without disturbing either the spotlessness of the linen or the integrity of the make-up; indeed, any make-up that could not stand this is vulgar and badly applied.

By the third illustration still another type of face that tempts its owner to improving devices is presented. It is the often seen creamy skinned woman, with deep red krinkly hair and brown eyes. If she have any idea of what is becoming to herself, she will need no bidding to let her hair tousle as it will about her forehead, for the closer it comes to the eyes, the more their red-brown color is stt off. What a goose she would be to take her hair off her forehead or to interfere with its vital crinkle by either an effort to brush it glossy or to curl it in soft rings. So much, doubtless, will be granted by anyone, in case her skin is a creamy white without color. If it be marred by an all-over floridness, the believer in improvers will declare it to be her downright duty, to cream her face thoroughly, wiping it dry and applying a dull brunette powder, one that has a deep ivory tone, neither white nor pink. Sometimes a powder largely made of sulphur is not only a becoming color, but is also excellent for the skin. This woman's lips must be red, so she will rub just the least bit of cochineal powder, the merest dust of it, into a thin paste with cold cream, and put this on each lip right in the centre, rubbing it dry before it reaches the corners. It must not show anywhere when it is done, but the lips must have a deep, rosy color. This woman wants no shadowy look about her eyes. She will let the powder rest on the lids, rubbing it from the lashes with a damp finger.



COSMETICS NEED NOT APPLY.

There is yet another thing; why should the pale woman with brown hair allow her cheeks to grow hollow and her eyes to wrinkle just because she has that sort of skin? Massage will prevent it. Rub softly about the corners of the eyes and under them. The droop about the lids of the fourth pictured face is charming, but why take the crow's-feet that come early with that sort of droop? Hair like this, if of dull brown, must be brushed glossy and curled in big soft rings that will gather shadows, no matter what the fashion. These eyes will look well shadowed, and sometimes a very dark ivory powder reddened just the least bit will give a tone to the skin that nature left out.

Of course the woman with smooth, round cheeks and the coloring of youth ought to be spanked if she resorts to these devices. Let her lean her demure cheek on her hand, droop her pretty lids and simply not know there is such a thing as powder in the world. She is sure to be lovely, whether she is dressed in the latest way or not; indeed, she is the loveliest for being a bit old-fashioned. As she appears in the final sketch the little fringe about the forehead gives a suggestion of youth that is almost infantile.

Women who are wont to apply color often make the mistake of putting it on the face when it is not necessary. More often than not the rosy effect can be obtained better in some other way. A little pink cold cream on the tips of the ears just below the eyebrows and on the round of the chin will often "take ten years from the looks." Considerable color can be added there without "showing," while it takes a really skillful hand to pinken the cheeks and secure their necessary blending into the fairer tinting of the rest of the face. If color be applied, it should always go on before the powder. To plaster the face white first and then daub on red is ruinous in effect even on the stage, and only stupidity would attempt it for the parlor. These points are so frequently disregarded that the very believers in such methods do much to build up a bad reputation for them. But despite this and the many women who wil not countenance such tricks at all, there is more of such touching up done now than for many years past. The believers in woman's right to look her best are certainly increasing in numbers.

B·B·B CURES DYSPEPSIA SCROFULA CONSTIPATION

THE SECRET

Of the marvelous success of Burdock Blood Bitters lies in its specific curative power over every organ of the body. The Liver, the Blood, the Bowels, the Stomach, the Kidneys, the Skin, the Bladder, in fact, all parts of the human system are regulated, purified, and restored to perfect natural action by this medicine. Thus it CURES all diseases affecting these or other parts of the system, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Bad Blood, Biliousness, Headache, Kidney and Liver Complaint, Obstinate Humors, Old Sores, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Nervous or General Debility, and all irregularities of the system, caused by Bad Blood or disordered action of the Stomach, Bowels, Liver or Kidneys. Thousands of testimonials warrant the assertion that B.B.B. is the BEST SPRING MEDICINE FOR YOUNG OR OLD.

Jules D'Estimanville Clement. writes from Montreal: "I was suffering from skin disease, and after all drugs failed tried Burdock Blood Bitters, of which three bottles restored me to good health. I recommend it also for dyspepsia."

Beggars are promptly arrested in Vienna if caught begging on the streets.

The Medicine for Liver and Kidney Complaint.—Mr. Victor Auger, Ottawa, writes: "I take great pleasure in recommending to the general public Parmelee's Pills, as a cure for Liver and Kidney Complaint. I have doctored for the last three years with leading physicians, and have taken many medicines which were recommended to me without relief, but after taking eight of Parmelee's Pills I was quite relieved, and now I feel as free from the disease as before I was troubled."

To save life from the ravages of disease is nobler than to win a kingdom. Burdock Blood Bitters cures all blood diseases, scrofula, blotches, pimples, skin diseases, etc., by its cleansing power over the entire system.

Jutland was originally Juteland, or the land of the Jutes, a Gothic tribe.

NORWAY PINE SYRUP strengthens the lungs and cures all Throat Troubles, Coughs, Colds, etc.

Bulgaria was formerly Volgaria, so called om the Volsci who inhabited it.

As Parmelee's Vegetable Pills contain Mandrake and Dandelion, they cure Liver and Kidney Complaints with unerring certainty. They also contain Roots and Herbs which have specific virtues truly wonderful in their action on the stomach and bowels. Mr. E. A. Cairncross, Shakespeare, writes: "I consider Parmelee's Pills an excellent remedy for Biliousness and Derangement of the Liver, having used them myself for some time."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of to-day, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

A MODEL FARM HOUSE.

THIS PLAN SECURED FIRST PRIZE ON ITS MERITS.

The Exterior Can be Simple or Ornate as Desired—Everything is Provided for Including a Tank in the Attic and a Bathroom.

I have made plans suited to our own needs on a farm four miles from Syracuse, N. Y., that is devoted to fruit and garden crops, with a small dairy. We do not care for the conventional parlor, and therefore dispense with it, believing that the hall, dining room and living room afford all the necessary rooms for practical use. The living room may be used for a bedroom if necessary, and will be found exceedingly convenient for either purpose. This house faces to the west, so that all the living rooms have south windows, giving plenty of sun for people and plants in the seven cold months, while the hall is on the north side and the generous verandah at the west, so as to be particularly desirable for summer use. The exterior can be made as simple or ornate as desired. There is a cellar under the whole house, extending under the shed and milk room, the latter space being occupied by a large cistern, to catch the roof drainage, which holds soft water enough for a long drouth. A pipe should connect this cistern with the pump that supplies the tank in the attic. The coal bin is under the vestibule, and the bin for the kitchen coal may open off the large bin; but, to save steps, a small bin of coal can be kept in the shed. The furnace room is directly under the front hall, being tightly boarded or bricked up, to keep the rest of the cellar cool.

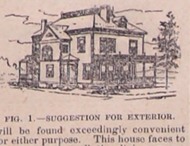

FIG. 1.—SUGGESTION FOR EXTERIOR.

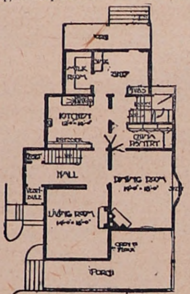

FIRST FLOOR.

A large register directly over the furnace into the front hall utilizes an immense amount of heat that would otherwise go to waste, and by having a sheet-iron jacket extending from the top of the furnace to the floor, and fitting closely about the hot air pipes, very little dust will work through the register into the house. The vegetable and household supplies are stored in the cellar under the kitchen, so as to be handy for the housewife. The rest of the cellar is available for storing fruit, potatoes, etc., that are to be kept a long time. It is eight feet in the clear, well lighted, and perfectly drained, so as to be dry in the wettest weather. The house may be so set up that the rear of the cellar may open level to the landing of the cellar stairs, thus doing away with the ugly hatchway under a snowdrift. The one large chimney accommodates both the furnace flue and the two large fireplaces. The extra cost of these fireplaces is very slight, and, as long as fuel is so cheap, there is no reason why the great majority of farmhouses should not enjoy a fireplace in the sitting-room. It is really a necessity for ventilation in the closely-built houses required by our long winters. Entering the front door, we have a cozy vestibule, with convenient closet. Portieres or a door may shut off this vestibule from the hall in cold weather, tor the hall is well lighted from the double windows on the stair landing. A sliding doors opens into the living room, and a hinged door into the dining-room. The kitchen may be reached from both the front and back of house without going through any room. The dining room can also be reached from both front and rear without going through the kitchen. The door between it and the pantry swings both ways, and so does the door between pantry and kitchen, but an ordinary door closes the pantry from the back hall. But few steps are required to reach the pantry from either kitchen or dining-room and the dresser in the kitchen is handy to the sink. The kitchen is well lighted, and can be kept cool in summer, being on the north side, while the shed is also available as a summer kitchen if desired. Tubs for washing may be set in this shed, with hot and cold water at but little extra expense, and a sink is also provided in the shed, where the men folks may wash without cluttering up the kitchen. The milk room opening off the shed is also convenient, and keeps the milk utensils out of the house. The second-floor rooms are large and convenient. My family believe that the bathroom is worth many times its cost. It is fed from a tank in the attic. In the absence of aqueduct water, a ram, force pump or windmill will keep this tank supplied, and feed the boiler of the kitchen range.

The crabapple is not only a beautiful tree when in blossom, but its fruit is superior to all others for producing jellies and preserves. It is a very hardy tree, and bears a crop when other varieties fail. When the apples are fully ripe they are not inferior in any respect except in size, their acid qualities being considered an advantage by some.

PROFIT AND LOSS ON FARMS.

The Fundamental Principles of a Consistent and Profitable Farm Practice.

Sir John B. Lawes has said that the advantage American farmers had in the present competition in farm products consisted in the stored wealth of their soils, in connection with climatic conditions that enabled them to grow in perfection that king of the cereals, maize or American corn. Admitting this standpoint of advantage for the American farmer, the direction in which he should look in efforts to improve his methods of practice is thus defined by Dr. Manly Miles, of Michigan, through the columns of The American Agriculturist. He says:

Broadly speaking, the returns from his soil, and the outcome of his staple crop, maize, should receive prominent attention to enable him to retain the commanding position in the markets of the world to which he is justly entitled from the conditions with which nature has favored him. The first consideration must be to conserve and make available in the production of useful crops the elements of fertility contained in the soil itself, which should be supplemented with the home supplies of manure. The largest returns from the soil can be obtained by growing a variety of crops in succession, among which corn should have a prominent place from its advantages as a cleaning crop, its large yield per acre of cattle food, and the value of the manure from the crop when fed out, in connection with its influence in conserving fertility during its long period of growth by the appropriation of plant food.

Thorough tillage, drainage, a judicious rotation of crops and the home supplies of manure are the agencies that require attention in this preliminary process of crop growing. Having obtained from the soil the largest return in vegetable products under a rational system of management, the next consideration is the disposition to be made of field crops in order to secure the greatest profit from them. It is difficult to place a fair money value on these products, as they could not all be sold if thrown upon the market in the form in which they are harvested. The coarser products would not pay the cost of transportation from a glut of the markets, as there would be a demand for but a small proportion of them outside of the farms where they are grown. It is evident that these product cannot all be sold to advangtage without converting them into more marketable forms on the farm itself, and as an incident of this conversation should not be overlooked the further advantage of retaining the residue of this process in the form of manure to maintain or increase the soil productiveness. If farm animals are looked upon as machines that are needed for converting unsalable field crops into marketable products of greater value, and for which there is a larger demand, the true principles of the feeding and management of the live stock of the farm will be more readily understood. Animal products of the best quality, that will command the highest prices in the market, will usually be the most profitable.

The nutritive ratios the farmer needs to consider to secure profitable feeding depends upon the relative amount of the several crops he can profitably grow, and their apportionment to secure an appetizing variety in the prescribed rations, so that all can be profitably utilized. This system will determine the available variety of foods, and the farm should be stocked with animals that are the best adapted to the work of manufacturing them all, without waste, into marketable products. The intimate interdependent relations of all departments of farm economy must be recognized and receive due attention, in planning the system of management, in order to obtain the largest profit from the aggregate results. Errors that arise from a too exclusive attention to purely theoretical details of doubtful import will be avoided by keeping prominently in view these fundamental principles of a consistent and profitable farm practice.

To Make a Garden Early.

The "earliest" gardens are those that are most perfectly drained, so that the surplus water of early spring is quickly carried off and the land left light and porous to receive warmth and sunshine. Many gardens, unfortunately, have neither natural nor artificial drainage, and their owners do not "get around" to providing such. There is a way to get one's land into condition for early planting that is practiced by some gardeners, but it is unthought-of by many, and that is to plow the garden into ridges late in the fall, after the manner shown in the accompanying sketch. One can plant in the spring along the tops of these ridges very much earlier than he could have planted had the land been left flat, while a gain is also made by turning up the soil in this way just before freezing weather, in the destruction of many worms that had become snugly tucked away for winter. It is a makeshift method, to be sure, but may serve a good purpose until one can properly drain his garden.

Women With Moustaches.

One of the old fogies who spend their days compiling disagreeable statistics says that mustaches are more common among women now than formerly, and that fully 8 per cent. of the women are thus adorned. This is nonsense. Probably this curmudgeon's eyebrows are so thick and overhanging that everything he sees appears to have whiskers. In the countries of the Latin race—Italy, France and Spain—women with mustaches are plentiful enough. There is the Queen of Spain, for one. She does not mind it, for women with downy lips are admired in those parts of the world. Among nations of the Teutonic race, on the contrary, there is a squeamish distaste for them, probably because they are so rare. Women in England are not usurping mustaches along with other institutions which man has surrendered to or divided with them.

A Delusion and a Snar.

The water-tight compartment is one of the most soothing and reassuring devices which ship builders have put into practical use. Anybody who has ever crossed the ocean on one of the modern steamers, of which the Elbe was a type, cannot have failed to experience a sense of abiding security from the explanations of the officers of the ship about the water-tight compartments. Not only the longitudinal bulkheads but those which run across the ship are so large and firm and so constantly in the way of the passengers that they rapidly learn to feel a great respect for them. There is not an officer on the ship, from the doctor to the captain, who cannot explain to the entire satisfaction of every passenger that owing to the bulkhead and compartment system it is absolutely impossible to sink the ship by a collision with another vessel. The customary wind-up of any discussion on this subject is the statement by the officer: "Why, this ship might be cut in two and so perfectly would these water-tight compartments work that both ends would float independently of each other." The fact that a little Scotch steamer crashed into one of these ships the other day and sunk it in twenty minutes does not seem to have any bearing upon the case.—New York Sun.

PLAIN TALKS ON THEMES OF TIMELY INTERNST.

Getting Ready for Berries—Clover Under the Snow—"General Purpose" Animals—Grafting Grapes.

It is important to set out the runners for the new bed of strawberries as early as it can be done. In this altitude such work is done in April, but it should be done earlier if the ground thaws. The reason is that the young plants get the advantage of the spring rains and become well established before the summer sets in. The young plants have whitish roots, which should be abundant. The old plants have dark roots, and they should never be used for new beds, the young plants from the runners being always preferred. To thrive well the plants should be set out on fine, mellow soil, that has been plowed deep and harrowed down fine. Even then the rake will be found very serviceable in assisting to put soil in fine condition. Make the rows three or four feet apart, or of a distance to permit of the cultivator and place the plants about 18 inches in the rows, as they will soon run together and mat, though some growers prefer to grow plants in single stools when extra large berries are desired, but which requires more labor, as the new runners must be kept back.

FERTILIZERS AND CULTIVATION.

The plants set out this spring will not bear until next, hence the fertilizers need not be applied as lavishly as for a producing bed. About 100 pounds of nitrate of soda, 100 pounds superphosphate, and 300 pounds of sulphate of potash make an excellent combination. The superphosphate and potash may be applied when the ground is harrowed, as they will then be well incorporated with the soil, and the plants should be set out after a good rain. The nitrate of soda may be applied after the plants are well under growth, by being sprinkled along the rows, on each side of the plants. Bearing beds will require twice as much of the nitrate and superphosphate. The plants must be kept clean, not a blade of grass or a weed being permitted to grow. The object should be to keep the young plants growing. If manure is used it should be well rotted, and, also broadcasted before harrowing, so as to have it well worked into the soil.

VARIETIES OF STRAWBERRIES.

Experiments at many different places show that there is no variety suitable for all sections. More seems to depend on the soil than on the climate. Varieties suitable for light soils do not bear profusely on clay land, and the climate also influences the yield to some extent. Beginners should keep in view the fact that some of the best varieties are pistillate only, while others are both staminate and pistillate. This necessitates the use of two varieties if the preferred one is pistillate, every third or fourth row being of some selected staminate (styled double-blossom) variety for fertilizing the pistillate kind. Large berries depend on the variety, but growers have learned that success is met when large applications of fertilizers are given, as much as half a ton per acre being considered not excessive by expert growers, as they thereby secure large yields of extra-size berries, and also receive an extra price per quart when the berries reach the markets.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Attractive Shrubbery—The Asparagus Bed—Notes in Variety.

Shrubbery, unless properly arranged, is not attractive, either on the lawn or elsewhere, but when the trees and shrubbery are placed where they will add their attractions to the best advantage they add hundreds of dollars to the value of a place. Those who own their homes should endeavor to make every square foot a beauty spot. There is no space that will not permit of the growing of some kind of flower. An evergreen hedge is not only a contrast with other plants growing near, but it gives a green appearance to a yard or lawn even in winter.

It is cheaper for the farmer to have a large garden than one that is small. Farmers are not partial to hand work in a garden, always prefering the horse. They will not use a spade, hoe, or rake unless compelled. If the garden contains plenty of room vegetables can be grown so as to permit of the use of a horse hoe, but the manure required for a large area will necessarily be greater than for a small garden.

Crimson clover seem as green and bright under the snow as though ready to start right off. If it is allowed to grow until ready for plowing the land for corn it will be a valuable crop for providing nitrogen, as it will make considerable headway in growth before May.

Whitewash the poultry house inside, so as to make the interior light and cheerful. Poultry have a repugnance to dark quarters and will remain outside, exposed to storms, in preferece to resorting during the day to a dark and uncomfortable poultry house. Ducks must be kept in a house with a board floor, covered with straw. They should be laying now, as they usually begin early in the season.

General purpose animals are not now so much in demand. It is an inferior animal that is "general purpose," as it excels in no particular respect. The farmer who wants a cow for butter or beef can take his choice. He can select mutton sheep from those adapted more for wool, choose a light, quick draught horse in preference to one that is slow and large, and can satisfy his demand among all classes of stock for whatever he may prefer.

Clover and artificial fertilizers will at some day be the indispensables on all farms. Even the manure will be more concentrated in the future by being deprived of many substances which now enter into its composition in order to save labor in its application for uses of crops.

The Belleville delegates were also in attendance.

Last evening the delegates were tendered a reception in the lecture room of the church, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion. The ladies talked over their work and offered helpful suggestions. Light refreshments were served and the evening was most profitably spent.

The annual meeting opened in the body of the church at 10 o'clock this morning, the President, Mrs. Byers, of Gananoque, in the chair. Associated with her on the rostrum were Mrs. Donald Ross and Mrs. Hamilton, Kingston; Mrs. Vankleek, Cooper; Mrs. M. W. Maclean, Mrs. Tannahill, and the Secretary, Miss Fowler, Kingston. The opening exercises were conducted by the President, Mrs. Robt. Tannahill, and Mrs. Ross, Kingston; after which the Secretary read the minutes of last meeting.

Very encouraging reports, showing the amount of work being done by the Auxilliaries and Mission Bands of the Presbytery were read by the following ladies and the President threw out practical hints from time to time that will no doubt be a great help to the ladies who are interesting themselves in this grand work:

Amherst Island, Mrs. McKay; Belleville St. Andrew's, Mrs. Matheson; John st., Miss McKay; Camden and Newburgh, Miss Holden; Consecon, Miss Duncan; Gananoque, Mrs. Bryce. Mission Bands — Belleville, Laborers of Love, Miss McLennan: Gananoque and Thousand Islands, Miss Redmond; Kingston—Chalmers', Mrs Donald Ross; Cooke's church, Olive Branch, Miss Dunlop; Cooke's church, Willing Workers, Miss Dunlop; Madoc Indoor Helpers, Mrs. Harper; Picton Faithful Gleaners, Mrs. W. Ross; Seymour Happy Circle, Mrs. Anderson.

After the singing of a hymn and prayer by Mrs. Vankleek, the election of officers was proceeded with. On motion it was decided to elect only three Vice-Presidents instead of allowing each President of the Auxiliaries to stand, as was done last year. The election resulted as follows:

President,—Mrs. Byers, Gananoque, (re-elected.)

Vice-Presidents,—Mrs. M. W. Maclean, 1st Vice; Mrs. Walter Ross, 2nd Vice; Mrs. Sinclair, Madoc, 3rd Vice.

Treasurer,—Mrs. Clarke, Hamilton, Kingston, (re-elected).

Secretary,—Miss Fowler, Kingston, (re-elected).

Delegate to General Society at Toronto—Mrs. Binnie, McDonald's Corners.

After the election of officers, which was conducted in a most business-like manner, the meeting took up the question of North-West supplies. Mrs. W. B. Robinson of this city gave an account of the work done by the society. They had sent out parcels of clothing for distribution among their workers. Her report was very satisfactory and showed a good work being done. Miss Esther Holden of this city was elected North-West Secretary.

This concluded the business of the morning session and the meeting was closed with devotional exercises.

The ladies are to be congratulated on the thoroughly business-like manner in which they conducted their meetings. They could give pointers to many societies of the sterner sex. In Mrs. Byers the society have a President of whom they may well feel proud, for she is ever ready to say a kind word to the faltering and her counsel is wisdom itself. The proceedings this morning were interesting and all present took a deep interest in them.

This afternoon's session began at three o'clock and was very interesting. The meeting will close this evening by a public meeting, at which Mrs. Howie, of Toronto, will deliver an address on "Mission Work among the North-West Indians."

A Change of Base.

From the Providence (Rhode Island) Sunday Telegram of the 10th inst. we learn that the well known Perry Davis Pain Killer manufactory, which has been established in Providence for fifty-six years, has been removed to New York. The new firm is the Davis & Lawrence, limited, of Montreal. The stockholders include the members of the old company, the heirs of Edmund Davis and of Sarah Davis Dennis. Mr. W. V. Lawrence, of New York, is the President, and Mr. John S. Bates, of Montreal, vice-president and treasurer. When Perry Davis began to dispense Pain Killer a dozen bottles, with labels printed in English, was a gigantic and sufficient stock. To-day the output is by the thousands of bottles daily, and the directions for using Pain Killer are printed in thirty-two different languages.

There is no medicine before the people equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is the standard spring medicine and blood purifier and it possesses peculiar merit which others try in vain to reach. But there is something new in Gough's fine stock of clothing this spring; for instance, there is a boy's three-piece suit, beautifully made and trimmed for $3, that will make you smile all over. Mothers should see this suit—only $3 for coat, pants and vest, at Gough's only.

To the Editor of the INTELLIGENCER.

SIR,—Kindly allow me space to express my surprise at the deceitfully false report of the setlement of the Simpson v. Stevenson case, which appeared in your last Saturday's issue, and which reads as follows:

Friday, March 8.

TRENTON'S CELEBRATED CASE SETTLED.

This now celebrated case was yesterday settled. The plaintiff having secured possession of his wife, which was the real object of the action, and not desiring to drag through the court the sensational matters involved in the trial in which his wife and father-in-law were involved, agreed to withdraw the action, providing Dr. Stevenson would give his written undertaking not to again interfere with the plff. and his wife, which the doctor gave, and all the other cases between the parties being withdrawn, the case was dropped. The Chancellor, in disposing of the case, said he hoped those instrumental in causing this litigation had learned a lesson that would prevent them in the future from interfering between husband and wife. E. Guss Porter for pl'ff. Clute & Williams for deft.

The imputations cast on my client, Dr. Stevenson, in above report, I ask to have contradicted as widely as they have been spread in the INTELLIGENCER. One would conclude from the wording of the above report that Dr. Stevenson had been keeping Dr. Simpson's wife from him, which is utterly untrue, as is testified by the fact that she lived with him about six months after the commencement of this action, and that, so far as her father was concerned, she was at liberty to go where she liked, and do as she pleased.

Then again, the above report reads as if Dr. Stevenson asked for a settlement, acknowledged his guilt, and promised to be a better boy in the future if let off this time. This is also utterly untrue, and a libel on Dr. Stevenson. The facts are as follows: Mr. Lount, Q.C., called Dr. Stevenson and myself into the Judge's room, where we found Mr. Porter. Mr. Lount asked me to try with him to effect a settlement of this case. I asked him what the proposition would be, and he said, "The plaintiff to withdraw his action, pay his own costs, all other lawsuits to be stopped,—Dr. Stevenson to pay his own costs, and to agree not to interfere between Dr. Simpson and his wife in the future." I objected on behalf of my client, and said he had not interfered between them in the past, and he (Mr. Lount) might rest assured Dr. Stevenson would not interfere in the future; that Dr. Stevenson had no other lawsuit with the plaintiff, but that on the contrary it was Mrs. Dr. Simpson was plaintiff in the other actions, which would be dropped with her consent. Mr. Lount said, "All right, then put it in that way, that Dr. Stevenson had not interfered between them in the past, and would not interfere between them in the future." On these grounds Dr. Stevenson, through Mr. Clute, Q.C., and myself, accepted plff.'s proposition of a settlement, as stated to us through his counsel, Mr. Lount, Q.C., and Mr. Porter. Dr. Stevenson was ready for his trial, and made no proposition to settle.

Solicitor for Dr. Stevenson.

A Sleighing Party.

A party of young people from the city last night drove to the residence of Mr. Anson Haight, near Corbyville, where they spent a most enjoyable evening. They were hospitably entertained by Mr. Haight and family, who provided for them a fine spread. The party arrived home at an early hour, being very much pleased with their outing.

Simply Appalling.

So says Chief Justice Armour of a bill of costs, and so says Gough, Belleville's big clothier, at the prices some people pay for their clothing. Fancy paying $20 or $22 for a black worsted suit, when Gough will give you one of his best tailor made for $12. You should see those $12 fine worsted suits at Gough's — only $12, they are beauties.

"Jawn," asked Mr. Dooley, "who is this here Costello?"

"Which one?" rejoined Mr. McKenna.

"Th' wan that marrid th' Gool' girl. He must be one iv' th' Connemara Costellos. They was a whole raft iv thim wint to France durin' th' Faynian uprisin' an' they was a smart family an' out f'r th' rowly-bowly iv'ry wan iv thim. 'Tis like as not this man is a son iv Malachi Costello that shot th' sarghint fa'm behint a stone wall in Clare, where he'd wint to sprid th' fight."

"The lad's name is Castleanne," commented Mr. McKenna.

"Well, Costello or Castleanne or Castle annybody else, 'tis case akel. Takin him by an' large he have a gr-reat head on his chowlders. Two million bucks f'r doin' what manny a man does f'r nothin' but th' throuble he takes in doin' it. Jawn, I'd marry th' best woman that iver lived f'r that much. I would that. I marry her an' give her half to go home, an' thin, by gar, I'd get in a new beer pump an' pay me license two years in advance. Faith, I would, Jawn; I would so.

"Have ye r-read about it? Naw? Who got th' decision in th' prizefight? Griffo. There ye a-are. There ye a-are! Iv coorse ye knew that, ye low man. Ye have a vulgar mind, Jawn. If it wasn't f'r th' likes iv men they'd be no wan in th' Archey road f'r'm Healey's slough to th' mills 'd know annything was happenin' in th' wurruld but prizefights an' th' dances iv th' Hibernyon Rifles that comes to th' same thing. Well, ye see, this here young Costello he was up in th' air. He hadn't nawthin', Jawn-broke, by gar, an' a mortgedge on th' ol' ma-an's house. Well, th' dip'ty sheriffs was goin' f'r to foreclose an' saze th' foldin' bed an' th' rockin' chairs an' th' goat an' th' other furniture whin th' lad ups and says: 'Hould on there, he says; 'hold on,' he says. 'Wait a month an' I'll fix it up with ye,' he says. So he comes over here on th' boat be means iv th' poor law guarjeens an' he goes up to where this here young lady was puttin' up, an' says he: 'Can I see Miss Gool,' he says. 'Step in,' says th' man, 'an' pull up a binch in th' front room,' he says, 'an' I'll call her,' he says. So in th' lad goes an' sets an' they sinds th' young lady to him. Whin they come out into th' nex' room the lad says: 'Here,' he says; 'me name's Costello,' he says, 'an' we're goin' to be marrid, he says. 'Th' 'ell ye say,' says Sir Roderick Cameron —'twas him owned th' house—'th' 'ell ye say' he says. So Costello he wint out 'an sint a tilegram to his papa, 'Malachi Costello, Roo de Roo, Paree: Iverything all right. Stand off the constable.' The raypoorthers seen th' messidge an' they knowed what happined at th' house whin th' marridge come off. Thim dam raypoorthers. They're iv'rywhere. They must have been a slough iv thim at th' widdin'. Gawd knows how anny wan ilse got into th' Gool's house afther all th' raypoorthers an' polismin was there. Thim Gool's must live in th' gashouse.

"Well, annyhow, Jawn, they was marrid. 'Twas no ordinary marridge. It cost slathers iv money. They give each other prisints be th' bar'l. Th' Costellos bein' wise chipped in marble-topped tables an' cake-baskets an' pickle-forks an' pie-knives. But th' Gools give dimon rings an' breastpins an' goold watches till th' house must 've looked like th' front windows iv Doherty's pawnshop on a sunshiny day. An' thin th' dhresses an' th' things in Frinch that that there young woman had to have. Four hundherd thousand pairs iv socks, eleven thousand five hundred and eighty-nine ah-ah-corsets, Jawn, th' Lord forgive me. Sixty-sivin thousand pairs of shoes. Wan hundherd thousand nubias. An' handkerchiefs enough f'r all Bridgeport at a funeral. They are cunnin' people thim, f'r no matter what Costello may do with th' two million bucks, he can niver blow in all thim wipes, Oho!

"Just to show ye how much it costs, Jawn, they was marrid by th' archbishop. Ye can't be marrid be an archbishop, Jawn, ott two f'r a quarther. A justice costs wan dollar, a mayor five, a judge tin, a priest twinty, a vicar general twinty-five, an' lord knows what it costs to have th' archbishop. But they'd 've had a pope if wan'd been handy. Dam th' expinse says they.

"An' th' archbishop was worth what they give. Ivry cint. He made no bad plays. Though 'tis again th' rules iv th' dioceese he made a speech at th' ind. He had an eye to th' furniture. He said he was standin' in a room iv almost oryental magnificence, mind ye now, unitin' in th' bonds iv holy mathrimoney two young people that th' tired eyes iv two continents was ristin' on. In that beautiful mansion which a-art, Jawn, avick, combined with th' long green, had created to charm th' eye it was a plisure to him to pronounce th' blessings iv St. Pether on th' splendid sign iv a noble race. He jollied Costello about his family an' tol' th' audjeence that he come down fr'm wan iv th' saints—Saint Boniface, d'ye mind, Jawn. Thin he wint out an' had th' check certified.

"But he said nawthin' about who th' young lady come down fr'm. He didn't give her pedigree—whether she come fr'm St. Boniface or St. Paul or Wabash or Erie. He didn't tell thim her father was a saint. An' p'raps 'twas bether pol, Jawn. Blood'll tell, as th' paper says, speakin' iv Costello, an' it may tell on thim two millions, Jawn."

Mr. Dooley paused for a moment, then said with a sigh: "'Tis odjos th' way all th' women with money is goin' out iv th' counthry without givin' me a chanst. Th' only wan left seems to be Mrs. Hettie——."

"But she's married," said Mr. McKenna.

"Th' divvle ye say. Well—annyhow th' rint's paid," said Mr. Dooley.

Another Old Resident Gone.

Another of Belleville's old residents passed away this morning in the person of Mrs. Margaret Naylor, relict of the late Thos. Naylor, who died some 12 years ago. The old lady died after an illness of some length at the residence of her son, Richard Naylor, Dundas St., aged 66 years. Deceased was born in Ottawa, and her maiden name was Margaret Bishop. She came to Belleville at the time of her marriage, and has lived here and at Canifton ever since. She leaves two sons, Richard and Edward, and four daughters, to mourn her loss. The funeral will take place at 2:30 p.m. Saturday.

"Fully twelve thousand people attended the evangelistic services yesterday and even then hundreds were turned away. Never have two men created such a furore in this city. In the homes and on the streets it is the chief subject of conversation. Politics and civic affairs are forgotten. Many people who have never thought of going to church have been going regularly, many have been converted and the general tone of the city's morality has been improved."—Daily Record, 11th inst.

ECHOES OF THE DEMONSTATION.

It is Still the Topic of Conversation—What Others Thought of it.

Tuesday's demonstration in honor of the Premier will not soon be forgotten and our citizens are still talking of it.

The Kingston News says: Belleville's Hotel Quinte claims the prettiest waitresses in the Midland district.

The staff of Hotel Quinte are to be congratulated on their efficient services Tuesday evening. They were all in their places, and their courtesy and prompt attendance will go a long way towards making the house popular.

A local paper has given Harry Webb, of Toronto, the credit of preparing the dinner served at the banquet, whereas it was cooked in the hotel by Harry Cussan, the chef, and to him is the credit of its success largely due.

In addition to expressing to the Premier the great pleasure which he enjoyed in visiting Belleville last year, the Governor-General sent by Sir Mackenzie Bowell to Thos. Ritchie, Esq.—whose guest he was during his stay here whilst visiting Belleville—a personal message asking that Mr. Ritchie send him copies of the Belleville newspapers containing reports of the demonstration in honor of the First Minister.

Belleville has done honor to itself by doing honor to the Premier.—Mail and Empire.

A deserved tribute to a man whose public career is a bright example of what may be achieved by industry and application.—Ottawa Citizen.

Through an inadvertence the remarks of J. H. Metcalfe, M.P., were omitted from our report of the banquet. He spoke of the pleasure it gave him to be present, and congratulated the Premier on the recent honor bestowed upon him.

Women's Work for Women.

The quarterly union meeting of the various auxiliaries, mission bands and circles of the Women's Missionary Society of the Methodist church in this city, was held in the Sunday school rooms of the Tabernacle church yesterday afternoon. The attendance was large and the meeting proved one of the best yet held. Mrs. (Rev.) Woodcock, President of the Tabernacle Auxiliary, gracefully presided and surrounding her on the platform were Mrs. (Rev. Dr.) Carman, President of the Bay of Quinte Branch Society; Mrs. Massey, Organizer of the Belleville and Brighton Districts; Mrs. (Rev.) Baker, President of the Bridge St. church Auxiliary and Miss Wilson, President of the Holloway St. church Auxiliary. Brief papers giving a survey of the work being done by women for women in Africa, India, China, Japan and our own North-West were read by different ladies. The reading of these with singing and prayer interspersed completed an hour and a half of profit and blessing.

An Error.

The summer carnival scheme was hatched by the Sun, and the two other papers accordingly are down on it, or at least view it with cold indifference as an unpractical project. Two meetings of citizens have been held, and have signified approval, but it is claimed that those opposed neglected to attend.—Kingston News.

The News is in error. Our opinions in reference to summer carnivals are not influenced by the unworthy motive ascribed to us by our Kingston contemporary, but by the unfavorable experience of Toronto and Hamilton, which cities have tried the experiment and "won't do it again;" also by the fact that no other places have ventured to go into the summer carnival business; and that there are more worthy objects for expending public money on.

Not Crude Material.

SPORTING TALK.

Several of the city cyclists have their wheels out and they say the wheeling is good.

Negotiations have been going on all this week between the Belleville and Trenton hockey teams, the former endeavoring to get the latter to come down and play the final match for the Corby trophy, but they have finally refused to play. The local team offered to give them $10 for expenses, as they had already been down once without playing. As it stands the cup can be held by no one and the Trenton team will never have a better opportunity to win it. Their conduct is considered very unsportsmanlike.

The Sound of Going.

(Hamilton Herald.)

Some of the Reform papers are swearing by all that's blue that they can hear the sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees. They want to take good care that the sound doesn't fool them. It may be the same old sound they heard four years ago.

Why?

(Montreal Gazette.)

If, as the Globe says, Canada felt the trade depression that prevailed on this continent the past two years "with diminished force," why change the fiscal system under which this satisfactory condition showed itself? Why throw away the umbrella that kept us dry?

WOLCOTT'S LUCKY DRAW.

Four Sharpers had a Plan to Worst Him in a Gentlemen's Game, but They Failed.

Washington Corr. New-York Sun.

Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, is the hero among clubmen, as the result of a recent experience in a so-called gentlemen's game of poker which took place at a fashionable resort here. Colorado's junior Senator likes to tickle the pasteboards a little every now and then, and this winter he has been famous at the national capital for the number of quiet but big games of poker played. In a gentlemen's game there is no limit, and pretty high play has been in consequence. At one of these seances it happened that four sharpers had it in for the silver Senator, or, as they termed him, "the sucker from Colorado," and after two hours' play it was patent that Senator Wolcott was no match for his adversaries, for his pile of chips dwindled as perceptibly as though sprinkled with alum from the Thompson-street Poker Club rooms. He was not a very heavy heavy loser, however, and so hung on, hoping that luck would change.

Fortune did favor him, too, in a manner that made four very disconsolate, glum-looking gamblers after the betting had ceased. It was a put-up job, and the cards were stacked to a nicety just as a big jackpot hove in sight. In a deal a straight, running from five to nine, four hearts and a seven of diamonds, was given Senator Wolcott.

In this game straights beat three of a kind, and a straight flush was a lulu hand. Of course, after the jackpot was opened, Senator Wolcott stayed in, but, instead of standing pat, as it was hoped he would, he drew one card. This did not upset the calculations of the sharpers who were trying to skin him, but rather whetted their appetites for such a cinch as they were sure they had on him now.

There was some pretty stiff betting, for there were big hands out, but the Senator was in luck, for in drawing one card he got the seven of hearts, which gave him a straight flush. When the final call was made it was simply because the four other players were out of stuff, and a straight flush, four aces, a king full with queens for siders, four jacks and an ordinary club flush were exposed. The four sharpers are still wondering how on earth they miscalculated about that seven of hearts, and one of them declared that they had been overreached by a man with a bug up his sleeve. At all events, Senator Wolcott is the poker hero of the hour, but he is inclined to be a trifle shy of any more gentlemen's games.

HE WAS AN OLD WHALE.

A Harpoon With the Date 1853 was Found Embedded in His Back.

Boston corr. New-York Sun.

A whale about 75 feet long, evidently an old one, was killed off Nahant yesterday by a picked crew of experienced men made up in Nahant. The whale had been reported several times in the past few weeks, and last nigth two fishermen who were out in their boat were forced to make a hurried retreat to the shore to escape a rush by the whale.

To-day's whaling party sighted the whale about a quarter of a mile off-shore, and proceeding cautiously, were able to get near enough to strike him just behind the head with a harpoon. The whale threw up his huge tail and disappeared in a whirlpool of water. To the harpoon was fastened about 30 fathoms of line, on the end of which was a stout cask. This was drawn overboard, and in a moment it was whisked out of sight.

The whale came to the surface about a mile from where he had gone down, swimming round and round, seeming to have the line wound around him. The hunters lay off and watched his struggles, which made the water boil. After a while he quieted so that the whalers were able to get within 10 yards of him and put a number of bullets into his head from an old-fashioned flintlock and a duck gun, and soon he was floating belly up, stone dead. The body was then towed near Little Nahant Beach. The whale was half-covered with seaweed. Deeply embedded in his back was an old harpoon, badly rusted, with the inscription: "Hiram K. Swain, Nantucket, 1853," still legible.

The Nahant whalers are in high glee, as there has been considerable rivalry between them and their Swampscott brothers over the prospective capture of the big fish.

Spring Poetry.

There was a man in our town
And he was wondrous wise,
Unscrupulous and bad men
He truly did despise.

He went into a store once,
Where, with a pack of lies,
A slick young clerk persuaded him
And swindled out his eyes.

But when he saw his eyes were out,
What did that wise man then?
Why, he patronized the Oak Hall,
And his sight came back again.

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

Marter Wants Goods Purchased by Tender.

LAYING TRAPS FOR THE PATRONS

Opposition Amendment Respecting the Purchase of Supplies—The Subject Hotly Debated—Dr. Ryerson to Ask If the Imperial Privy Council Decision Re Separate Schools Will Affect Ontario

Toronto, March 13.—The Opposition in the Local Legislature are still after the scalps of the Patron party. So well did their tactics work last week in regard to the fees question that yesterday they pursued similar operations, and the followers of Leader Haycock are likely, as a result, to be again placed in a hole. The first attempt of the Opposition failed. Mr. Whitney introduced a want of confidence amendment to the motion that the House resolve into Committee of Supply, the said amendment being one for the abolition of Government House. Mr. Speaker, however, ruled it out of order, owing to the fact that it was on all fours with a motion of which the Patrons had already given notice. But the Opposition were prepared for such a defeat. Mr. Marter had another amendment, containing provisions enumerated among the planks of the Patron platform. The motion formed a text for a protracted debate, which was not ended when the House adjourned at 6 o'clock. The division, when it comes, will be watched with interest.

Mr. Marter's amendment reads as follows: "That in the opinion of this House it is advisable, and would be in the interests of the province, that supplies which may be required for the public institutions of the province should be supplied after public competition, in lieu of the course at present carried out.'" Speaking in support of his motion, the leader of the Opposition argued that this was a most important question. The Provincial Secretary had said that only a matter of $82,000, divided over 12 institutions, was concerned, but he (Mr. Marter) found that there were $88,000 worth of goods bought each year for the Central Prison alone without tender, and he believed he was within the mark when he said that in the neighborhood of $300,000 were spent for our public institutions without tender.

Mr. Marter then proceeded to show that the Ontario Government paid far more for supplies than the Dominion, comparing the prices paid for articles at the Kingston Penitentiary with those given at the Central Prison, amid Ministerial cries of "What quality?" These were the figures:

	Kingston.	Toronto.
Tea	17¼c per lb	25c per lb
Lard	12c per lb	14c and 15c per lb
Vinegar	15c per gal	25c and 30c per gal
Rice	3 7-10c per lb	4c, 4¼c & 5c per lb
Tobacco	49¼c per lb	52c per lb
Coal Oil	14c per gal	20c and 25c per gal
Flour	$4.13 per bu	$4.60 per bu
Sole Leather	17¼c per lb	28c per lb
Kip Leather	30c per lb	50c per lb
Hard Egg Coal	$4.23 per ton	$5.65, $6.50 per ton
Beef	$4.97 per cwt	$5.50 per cwt

Mr. Marter concluded with the statement that the Government did not desire to alter the present state of affairs, because they found it an excellent means of buying their way into power.

Hon. Mr. Gibson replied: In regard to the figures that had been quoted, he could not without preparation make any detailed answer, but he was perfectly certain they were susceptible of satisfactory explanation. He was satisfied that, in connection with the purchase of supplies for Central Prison, they were adopting the best system. The foreman purchased articles from time to time as he required them in the best market, and it was to his interest to purchase at the best advantage. He invited Mr. Marter to bring his evidence before the Public Accounts Committee and substantiate his unfounded charges of corruption against the officers of the Government. The charges were unworthy of the hon. gentleman, and he regarded the motion, at this stage, as a most improper one.

The debate then became general, but nothing startlingly new transpired. The following members took part in the discussion: Messrs. Matheson, McKay, Davies, Crawford, German, Middleton, Conmee and Whitney.

Hon. Mr. Hardy introduced a bill respecting juries and jurors, providing that jurors shall receive pay for Sundays, when they are kept over that day. The bill also requires sheriffs to post up in the jury room a copy of the law with regard to tampering with juries.

The Attorney-General brought in two bills, one for the establishment of standard time, and the other respecting elections under municipal bylaws.

A number of private bills were also introduced and read a first time.

The answer of the Attorney-General to-morrow to this question of Dr. Ryerson's respecting the decision of the Imperial Privy Council in the Manitoba school case will be looked forward to with interest. Dr. Ryerson will ask whether, under the recent decision of the Judicial Committee of the Imperial Privy Council, the amendments to and the changes in the Separate Schools Act in Ontario, passed since Confederation, can be repealed by this Legislature, and whether in the event of the repeal of any such amendments an appeal will lie to the Governor-General or the Governor-General-in-Council under the 93rd cr other section of the British North America Act?

Mr. Willoughby will to-morrow enquire whether the Government have appointed a Clerk of Forestry, and if not whether they intend to appoint one?

Mr. Haycock will to-day ask when the report of the Fees' Commission will be laid before the house.

Dr. McKay has given notice of a bill providing that assessment, loan and building societies shall be inspected by the Government.

Mr. Little will introduce a bill to amend the Assessment Act, providing that the assessment shall, in townships, take place in the summer instead of in the winter.

Mr. Wood has a bill allowing women to become barristers and appear in courts of law to plead. At the present time they can only act as solicitors. Mr. Wood will also introduce a bill to amend the act respecting contracts in relation to goods entrusted to agents.

At the meeting of the Public Accounts Committee Mr. Matheson asked for all accounts in connection with the mining development of 1894, in order that he might obtain further information about the purchase of the diamond drill.

The Government bill for the further protection of children provides that the trustees of any duly incorporated orphanage, children's home or industrial school may transfer children under their care to the Children's Aid Society in the locality, to be placed out in pursuance of the Act for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

WILL NOT RUN IN KINGSTON.

The Premier Has No Intention of Being a Candidate.

Ottawa, March 14.—The Marine Department was notified to-day by the Lighthouse Board of the United States that the lights on Lake Erie and Detroit River will be displayed on and after March 15, as it is expected that navigation between Detroit and Cleveland will be open on that date. This is unusually early in the season. The board requests that the Canadian lights in that vicinity be also lighted, and this will be done.

The Militia Department has been notified of the death of Gen. Ravenhill of the Imperial army, who for some years past has held the position of inspector of remounts. As Col. Ravenhill he visited Canada four or five years ago purchasing horses for the British army.

Your correspondent is in a position to state that there is no truth in the report that the Premier will contest Kingston at the next general election. Sir Mackenzie Bowell has no present intention of running for any constituency.

JUSTICE NOT INTERFERENCE

The Orange Grand Lodge and Manitoba Schools.

LET MANITOBA GRANT RELIEF.

The Grand Master in His Address Urges Non-Interference by the Dominion Unless Remedial Legislation Be Confined Definitely to Roman Catholic Schools in Existence in 1890

St. Catharines, Ont., March 13.—The 36th annual meeting of the Right Worshipful Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario West began sessions in the Court House yesterday. There was a large representation from all parts of the province. Buffalo and the new frontier district were also represented.

The first session opened at 2 p.m., when the Striking and Standing Committees were named. The Grand Master's address, which was a lengthy and evidently carefully prepared document, was read by the R.W.G.M. J. L. Hughes. After referring to matters of general interest to the order, Mr. Hughes reviewed the Manitoba school question concluding by making the following recommendations concerning it:

I recommend that this R. W. Grand Lodge memorialize the Governor-General-in-Council as follows:

1. That this R.W. Grand Orange Lodge heartily approves of the principles embodied in the Manitoba School Acts of 1890, believing, as we do, that a national system of education is the surest foundation for national greatness, and for civil and religious liberty.

2. That while we believe in the use of the Bible in connection with the opening and closing exercises of schools, we would recommend that no form of devotional exercises be used in the public schools of Manitoba or of any other province, if on this condition the Roman Catholic minority be willing to give up separate schools, and unite heartily in supporting the national systems of schools. This would remove the objection raised by counsel for the Roman Catholic minority to the effect that the public schools of Manitoba are Protestant schoils, and that on this account Roman Catholics cannot conscientiously send their children to them.

3. That in case the Governor-General in Council shall decide that the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba is entitled to remedial legislation, the following principles be followed in giving effect to the decision:

1. That the Legislature of Manitoba be first requested to provide the remedy which shall satisfy the just demands of the minority. This will avoid the very undesirable course of interference by the Dominion Government with the Education Acts of a Provincial Legislature; and may prevent possible conflict between the Dominion and Provincial authorities.

2. That no remedial legislation be recommended which would weaken the Manitoba School Law of 1890 as a basis for a national system of schools or establish Roman Catholic separate schools on the same footing as public schools throughout the Province of Manitoba. The Privy Council in its recent judgment was very explicit in stating that it is not desirable or expedient that the Statutes repealed in 1890 should be re-enacted.

3. That in restoring the just rights and privileges held by the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba in 1890, care be taken to confine the remedial legislation to those Roman Catholic schools which were in existence at that time. Sec. 22, sub-sec. 3 of the Manitoba Act of 1870, which is identical with Sec. 93, sub-sec. 4 of the British North America Act, provides that remedial legislation by the Dominion Parliament shall be granted "so far only as the circumstances of the case may require." To deal fairly with the Roman Catholic schools existing in Manitoba in 1890 is a very different thing from extending the right to Roman Catholics to establish new separate schools in other parts of the Province.

After reading carefully the arguments of Mr. Blake and Mr. Ewart, Counsel for the appellants in England before the Privy Council, and of Mr. Cozens-Hardy, counsel for the Province of Manitoba, and the later addresses of Mr. Ewart and Mr. McCarthy before the Governor-General-in-Council, I am of opinion that under our constitution the Roman Catholic minority living in Manitoba in 1890 is entitled to some consideration. They are clearly entitled to as much consideration as Protestants would have been, if the Roman Catholics of Manitoba had increased more rapidly than the Protestants, and had passed school laws objectionable to Protestants. But I protest most strongly against the adoption of a separate school system for Manitoba by any other power but the Manitoba Legislature. The Dominion Parliament may interfere if necessary to do justice to the minority as it existed in 1890, but it would be clearly an outrage to force a system of separate schools on the people of Manitoba against the will of the vast majority of the people in that Province. If the remedial legislation be confined definitely to the Roman Catholic schools in existence at the time the Manitoba School Acts od 1890 were passed, just Protestants could not reasonably object, and just Roman Catholics should be satisfied.

The delegates are now considering the address.

DISSOLUTION AT EASTER

Rosebery Determined to Hand in His Resignation.

London, March 14. — Lord Rosebery owing nominally to the present state of his health, has determined to place his resignation in the Queen's hands. It is expected that dissolution of Parliament will take place immediately after the Easter recess.

Sharbot Lake, Ont., March 13.—Yesterday M. Sliter, engineer in Thomson & Avery's sawmill, had both legs broken and was injured internally by a belt breaking, throwing him among the machinery. He died at 6.40.

SIR DONALD SMITH ACCEPTS.

He Will Again Be the Candidate in St Antoine.

Montreal, March 13.—This afternoon the Messrs. Drummond, Murphy and Ogilvie, with James O'Brien, Richard White, A. F. Galt and leading men of the Conservative clubs waited on Sir Donald Smith at his residence and asked him to again stand for St. Antoine division.

Sir Donald accepted, and made a most important speech. He said three Government leaders had passed away within a short time, but he expressed the belief that Sir Mackenzie Bowell would administer the affairs of the Dominion in a satisfactory manner. Sir Donald said he was not sure what his attitude would be regarding fiscal matters if he were in England, but as a Canadian he did not hesitate to affirm that free trade here would be a national calamity. It would be most unwise, he believed, to disturb the present protectionist system, as a change would have disastrous results.

Sir Donald also made important reference to the Manitoba school question, which he thought should be settled by Manitoba herself. Sir Donald, however, added that when he had gone to that country as a representative of the Canadian Government, and when what was known as the bill of rights was drawn up, he had promised the people that no rights they then possessed would be interfered with, and whether that guarantee would apply to the whole province it certainly applied to all territory within 60 miles of Fort Garry.

Sir Donald will have no serious opposition.

B·B·B CURES DYSPEPSIA SCROFULA CONSTIPATION

THE SECRET

Of the marvelous success of Burdock Blood Bitters lies in its specific curative power over every organ of the body. The Liver, the Blood, the Bowels, the Stomach, the Kidneys, the Skin, the Bladder, in fact, all parts of the human system are regulated, purified, and restored to perfect natural action by this medicine. Thousands of testimonials warrant the assertion that B.B.B. is the BEST SPRING MEDICINE FOR YOUNG OR OLD.

Jules D'Estimanville Clement. writes from Montreal: "I was suffering from skin disease, and after all drugs failed tried Burdock Blood Bitters, of which three bottles restored me to good health. I recommend it also for dyspepsia."

Beggars are promptly arrested in Vienna if caught begging on the streets.

The Medicine for Liver and Kidney Complaint.—Mr. Victor Auger, Ottawa, writes: "I take great pleasure in recommending to the general public Parmelee's Pills, as a cure for Liver and Kidney Complaint. I have doctored for the last three years with leading physicians, and have taken many medicines which were recommended to me without relief, but after taking eight of Parmelee's Pills I was quite relieved, and now I feel as free from the disease as before I was troubled."

Algiers is so called from the Arabic words Al-Jezair, meaning "a peninsula."

To save life from the ravages of disease is nobler than to win a kingdom. Burdock Blood Bitters cures all blood diseases, scrofula, blotches, pimples, skin diseases, etc., by its cleansing power over the entire system.

Jutland was originally Juteland, or the land of the Jutes, a Gothic tribe.

NORWAY PINE SYRUP strengthens the lungs and cures all Throat Troubles, Couhgs, Colds, etc.

Bulgaria was formerly Volgaria, so called om the Volsci who inhabited it.

As Parmelee's Vegetable Pills contain Mandrake and Dandelion, they cure Liver and Kidney Complaints with unerring certainty. They also contain Roots and Herbs which have specific virtues truly wonderful in their action on the stomach and bowels. Mr. E. A. Cairncross, Shakespeare, writes: "I consider Parmelee's Pills an excellent remedy for Biliousness and Derangement of the Liver, having used them myself for some time."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of today, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

MAY GO TO THE JURY TO-DAY

Evidence in the St. Thomas Case all In.

DEFENCE CONFIDENT OF ACQUITTAL

Additional Medical Evidence Put In By the Defence—Also Testimony That the Tree Did Not Fall As Calculated—Peculiar Remark Made By the Dead Man's Father—Evidence in Rebuttal—A Summary of the Case.

St. Thomas, Ont., March 14.—The eighth day of the Hendershott murder trial witnessed the conclusion of the case, in so far as the evidence is concerned, and the head of the dead man was not viewed by the jury.

To-morrow the addresses of counsel will commence, and it is probable that the case will be given to the jury. The man who to-night thinks that a verdict of guilty will be returned against both prisoners would have as difficult a task to find any person in this city who agreed with him as had the wisest man of Athens with his lantern to find an honest man. It is not likely that the jury will be absent more than an hour or two in arriving at their decision.

The trial may be summarized in a few words. Here is what the Crown has endeavored to establish in the case against Welter: That he was alone with Hendershott when he was killed; as against the claim that deceased was struck by the trunk of the falling tree that the wounds could not have been inflicted by a trunk of a tree; the Crown medical witnesses swear the wounds were inflicted with an ax; witnesses for defence admit that all could have been made with an ax; the blood-stained ax concealed in the woods with nicks on blade fitting into nicks on the tree, showing that it was used in felling the tree; the watch belonging to the dead man, which Welter claimed the former was running for when killed, found in Welter's possession after his arrest, and he accounted for it by stating that he had bought it from a stranger; the blood scattered for a considerable distance in the woods, in a pool of water and on the ax, bearing characteristics of human blood.

In the case against Hendershott the Crown's case is that he placed $11,000 insurance on the boy's life, paid the premiums, and was sole beneficiary; that he stated that he intended to place insurance on a number of people's lives and would get rid of one of them; that he said deceased wanted to break a colt for him, and if he broke the colt the colt would break his neck; that he admitted going to the woods with his nephew on the morning of the tragedy and showing him the tree to cut; that he indicated how his nephew was killed before he knew who it was that was dead; that he said there were two axes in the woods, and handed one to the authorities saying it was the missing one three days before the bloodstained ax was found, and that the bloodstained ax was owned by Hendershott.

The claims of the defence are that the tree turned in falling and did not alight where calculated; that the limbs of the tree struck the ground ten feet before the tree; that Hendershott was struck by the branches and thrown under the tree, and the trunk then struck deceased, inflicting the blow on the top of the head which caused death, and that neither the ax nor any other weapon was used.

The court room was again crowded with ladies to-day. The prisoners wore a jaunty air, and are evidently congratulating themselves on the fact that the Crown missed some important points in the case. Welter actually danced a jig in his cell at the conclusion of the Crown's case.

The defence introduced a little additional medical evidence to-day, Dr. Mason of St. Thomas, Dr. Henry Going of Windsor and Dr. Waugh of London testified that they believed the wounds could have been caused by the branches of a tree, but they admitted that an ax might also have produced them.

A.M.McIntyre of Dutton, M.Campbell of Lawrence Station, George Holmes of Toronto and other witnesses deposed that they thought the tree had twisted in falling and alighted in a different spot from that calculated. John Z. Long, the St. Thomas architect examined yesterday, was recalled and exhibited a model of the tree, but as it had been constructed from statements made to him as to the relative position of the branches and the knot, and several witnesses swore that in consequence it was not accurate, it had little bearing on the case.

Mrs. Welter, aunt of the younger prisoner and wife of Charles P. Welter, to whose house William Welter went first with the news of Hendershott's death, was then called. She denied that there was any blood on his face or clothing. John Hendershott called at her place about 10 o'clock on the morning of the tragedy, and then left with his daughter for Eden. To Mr. Osler witness admitted that when Welter came to her place he said that Hendershott was killed by a tree falling upon his head, that it had crushed his head into the ground.

To discredit the story of David Hendershott, the victim's father, that Welter told him of the insurance on his son's life while driving to St. Thomas the day after the tragedy, Hugh McAlpine was called. He swore that he told Hendershott of the $6000 policy after their arrival in St. Thomas, and Hendershott appeared surprised.

John Ketchabaw, brother-in-law of the prisoner John Hendershott, related a number of remarks, which he alleged had been made to him by David Hendershott. The most important of these were: "If I can't get the insurance, John will not. I will send him down. Mrs. Smuck will not swear to the story she first told. I have seen her." This story, which witness also heard Mrs. Smuck tell, was that she saw Welter and Hendershott in the woods laughing and cutting up, that she looked around and saw them both running, soon afterwards she heard a tree fall, and, on going a little further, saw Welter running in the direction of Charles Welter's. Mrs. Smuck swore yesterday that all she observed was two men whom she did not recognize standing in the woods after a tree had fallen.

Rose Hendershott, the youngest daughter of John Hendershott, is a little damsel of 12, and gives evidence of developing into as finely-formed and comely-faced a young woman as her sister Lily. She corroborated the story of Lily and Mrs. Charles Welter as to the length of time John Hendershott remained at Mrs. Welter's the morning of the tragedy, and also as to the arrival of William Welter at the house in the afternoon. She did not see any blood on his face.

Sylvester Swisher said he heard David Hendershott say in the woods before the ax was found, "There is an ax missing; I know where it is; it will turn up at the proper time."

Lily Hendershott was recalled. She had removed her veil, and a little color came into her face, which was more hopeful looking than for days.

Here the defence closed its case.

In rebuttal, Dr. Lawrence testified that the fibrous substance which Dr. van Buskirk found in a wound on the head of the dead man was the thread of an undertaker's stitch. He also said that the doctor had told him, after hearing his report of the post-mortem, that things looked very suspicious.

To controvert the branch theory of the defence, Edward Wardell, Richard Curtis and Richard Saunders were called. These witnesses removed the dead man from under the tree. The knot was eight feet from where the branch was attached to the tree. The top of the branch was fully four feet from the feet of the body and a greater distance from the head. The branch was six inches from the ground, where it projected from the tree and extended upwards. The branch could not have touched the body at all where it lay. There were no roots or snags under the body. Sanders swore that the two sections of the branch produced by the defence had been shortened by some one.

The man who owned the white horse which was buried in a field adjoining the woods, and from which the defence claimed the blood came, was then put in the box. He is Philip Hornby of London. He swore that he left the horse with Hendershott for pasturage. The prisoner had a right to shoot it. Then the man who shot the white horse, Edward Bowlby, was called. The deed was done on Thanksgiving day.

And the great case came to an end so far as the evidence is concerned.

The Begin Murder Trial Ended.

Sherbrooke, Q., March 15.—The Begin murder trial was concluded to-day, the jury returning a verdict of not guilty.

THE AILSA'S EASY VICTORY.

Britannia Beaten 13 Minutes For the Challenge Cup

Cannes, March 15.—The thrice postponed race for the James Gordon Bennett and Ogden Goelet Challenge Cup, No. 1, valued at 8000 francs, for all yachts over 20 tons, was sailed to-day over the old triangular course, from Cannes to a mark boat off the island of St. Honorat, thence to a mark off Point d'Aguille, and back to the starting point, three times around. The total distance about 30 miles.

The starters were the Ailsa, the Britannia and the Corsair, and again the new boat proved her superiority over the Prince of Wales' cutter, this time beating her by 13 minutes and 13 seconds, actual time 12 minutes, corrected time.

The French rules governed the race, and, according to French measurements, the Ailsa allowed the Britannia 1 minute and 13 seconds and the Corsair 19 minutes and 42 seconds. The wind was very light from the southwest, and the sky was clear. When the boats came up to the starting mark they carried all their head sails and working topsails. The Corsair was first to cross the line and head for the St. Honorat mark. The times of starting were as follows: Corsair 11.00.21, Ailsa 11.00.39, Britannia 11.01.07. After crossing the line it was a beat of two miles to the St. Honorat mark boat. The Corsair tacked first and the Ailsa next. The Britannia kept on further and went about 10 seconds after the Ailsa did.

The Ailsa had drawn away from her competitors, and upon reaching St. Honorat clearly showed the effect of her having lessened her ballast since her previous race, in the manner in which she had gained in the light wind. The times of rounding St. Honorat mark were: Ailsa 11.32.27, Corsair 11.33.00, Britannia 11.59.48.

From the St. Honorat mark it was a broad reach of four miles to the Point d'Aguille mark and the Ailsa increased her lead so that on rounding the mark she was 1 minute and 55 seconds ahead of her rival, while the Corsair was far astern. The times of rounding the Point mark were: Ailsa 11.54.55, Britannia 11.56.50, Corsair 12.00.15. From the Point mark the yachts had a long leg and a reach for the club house. On this reach the Ailsa still further increased her lead, rounding the Club mark 2 minutes 51 seconds ahead, the boats turning in this order: Ailsa 12.25.06, Brittania 12.27.57, Corsair 12.34.00.

The Ailsa was now sailing splendidly and on the second run to St. Honorat she still further increased her lead, the yachts turning the mark boat as follows: Ailsa 12.48.30, Britannia 12.52.07, Corsair 1.03.50.

The wind freshened as the racers got away for the Point for the second time and the sea was heavy. The mark boat at the Point was turned as follows: Ailsa 1.07.50, Britannia 1.11.00, Corsair 1.28.00. Thus the Ailsa was 3 minutes 10 seconds ahead of the Britannia in beginning the run home on the second round. The Club mark was reached and the second round completed as follows: Ailsa 1.29.46, Britannia 1.36.19, Corsair 1.56.09. The Ailsa was 6 minutes 33 seconds ahead of the big cutter when she turned the mark boat to make St. Honorat for the third and last time and continued to gain throughout the remainder of the race. The yachts rounded St. Honorat the third time in this order: Ailsa, 1.58.35; Britannia, 2.07.02; Corsair, 2.30.14. The new boat made a splendid run to the Point, which the boats passed as follows: Ailsa, 2.19.19; Britannia, 2.28.34. The run home from the Point was much like the race had been throughout, the Ailsa steadily drawing away from the Britannia and the Corsair hopelessly falling in the rear of the Britannia. The leading boats crossed the finish line thus: Ailsa, 2.47.31; Britannia, 3.00.44. The Ailsa according to these figures won by 13 minutes 13 seconds actual time and by 12 minutes, conceding 1 minute and 13 seconds to the Britannia.

The Spanish Cruiser Reina Regent Four Days Overdue.

Cadez, March 15.—The Spanish cruiser Reina Regent is four days overdue at this port. She left Feb. 10, and has not been heard of since. It is feared she has gone down with her 420 souls in the big storm of Sunday night.

The Reina Regent was a steel deck protected cruiser of 4800 tons displacement and 12,000 horse-power. She was launched in 1887, and was a sister ship of the Alfonso XIII. and the Lepanto. Her speed was 20 1-2 knots.

Tangier, March 14.—No news has been received here of the missing cruiser Reina Regent. A Spanish man-of-war has been sent to search in the straits for the missing ship.

GOING INTO THE INSURANCE BUSINESS.

The Patrons Decide To Add Another Branch To Their Interests—Lecturers Appointed.

Toronto, March 15.—The Patrons yesterday decided to unite commercial interests with politics, and add insurance to the manifold objects of their organization. A committee was appointed to formulate a safe and feasible scheme of life insurance and fire insurance for its members. This will involve a charter for the order, putting it on the same basis as the Foresters and other secret societies.

Twenty-five grand lecturers are to be appointed, to be continually at the call of candidates and others requiring their services. It was also recommended that county lecturers be elected by the various lodges of the province.

At night a joint meeting of the Grand Association and the Patron members was held. Leader Haycock and others delivered addresses. A large number of the Trades and Labor Council were also in attendance.

THE EMBARGO SHOULD GO.

Canada's Report Forwarded to the Home Office.

PLEURO DOES NOT EXIST HERE.

Mr. Angers' Concise and Conclusive Arguments Why Britain Should Raise the Embargo On Canadian Cattle—The House Being Prepared For a Session—A Shipment of Winter Made Butter

Ottawa, March 15.—The Department of Trade and Commerce has been advised of negotiations for a proposed re-arrangement of the direct Australasian steamship service. The New Zealand Government has received an offer from Huddart, Parker & Co. to run a fast connecting steamer between Fiji and Auckland or Wellington. The matter was considered by the Government, and it was thought better to have direct steamers themselves, if possible, to touch at Auckland or Wellington, at the option of the contractors and the Postmaster-General of New South Wales was asked if that colony would be agreeable to allow the steamers to come on to New Zealand. The Government of that colony is in favor of establishing a direct mail service via Vancouver, alternating every fortnight with the San Francisco service. In negotiating for a connecting service it was contemplated to include Samoa as well as Fiji. Messrs. Huddart, Parker & Co. have offered to build a special fast steamer to connect at Fiji for a subsidy of £10,000. The negotiations are still progressing.

Representations have been made to the Government respecting the brave conduct of the officers and crew of the British steamship Iran, Capt. Jennings, who rescued the crew of the U.S. brigantine Prussian in mid-Atlantic on Feb. 12. The brigantine encountered heavy weather and became dismantled, losing her rudder, and the crew were compelled to abandon her when 500 miles from Philadelphia.

The Minister of Agriculture has been closely following up the controversy with the Imperial Board of Agriculture in reference to the scheduling of Canadian cattle. Further evidence of experts is to hand, and this has been embodied in an able report, which has just gone forward to the Colonial Office.

Summarized, the report says: 1. That a disease which appears from lesions in the lungs to have a particular type alleged by the Board of Agriculture to be pleuro-pneumonia has been found in the case of about a dozen animals out of 193,860 slaughtered at the port of landing since the fall of 1892; and it may be added out of a total of 1,393,589 meat cattle shipped from Canada since 1880. 2. That persistent and reiterated demands by the Board of Agriculture of the Canadian Government to furnish further information of such disease, based on expert examination of lungs after the slaughter of the animals, cannot be complied with for the reason that such disease cannot be found in Canada, notwithstanding diligent and repeated veterinary search, this fact leading to the confident belief that it does not exist in Canada, and to the conclusion that it is absolutely impossible to furnish the board with any further information in relation to it by the discovery of cases in Canada.. 3. That lesions stated to have been found in the lungs of animals after landing in England or Scotland, after having been carried in some cases from the Northwest plains of Canada, near the base of the Rocky Mountains, a distance of between two and three thousand miles, to the seaport, subject during such carriage to detention, arising out of waiting for railway connections, the animals being sometimes confined for several days in the stockyards before embarkation, and necessarily packed in close compartments on shipboard, where, sometimes, despite the utmost care under the regulations they are in some weathers subject to insufficient ventilation and other forms of hardship, it being only after animals have endured such trials that the lesions in question can be discovered. It follows, therefore, that further elucidation arising from expert enquiry, as asked for by the board, can only be obtained in the United Kingdom.

4. That such disease, moreover, being found in animals having their constitutions impaired by age, or hardship from confinement in traveling, has for these reasons been called by veterinary experts in Canada "transit pneumonia.

5. The inference of the Board that such disease, being bacterial or germ, must, therefore have been contracted in Canada before embarkation, is not supported by evidence; on the contrary there is nothing to show that it might not be contracted in the conditions and time of transit stated.

6. That the weight of expert evidence as appears in the proceedings of the Board determined such lesions to be of very recent origin, that is, within the period occupied by transit.

7. That there is nothing in present discoveries of bacteriological science to establish an inference of the Board and its officers that a bacterial or germ disease may not be developed during transit such as described.

8. That experience in Scotland and England in the same way as in Canada has shown such disease to be non-contagious from contact of Canadian animals in very large numbers spreading over many years. The contention in the Parkhill-Lindores case in 1892 that one Canadian animal communicated the disease in question is not supported by sufficient evidence in the face of strong improbability.

9. That in all the many thousands of Canadian animals slaughtered in the United Kingdom not a single case of old or encysted pleuro-pneumonia has been found, a condition which it is believed would be impossible if the disease, as alleged, prevailed in Canada.

10. That among 3085 sets of lungs of cattle slaughtered in the abattoirs in November last no case nor trace of the disease in question was discovered. It is believed that if such disease had prevailed in Canada some trace of it would have been found by the test.

11. The conclusion of the Board of Agriculture in their minute that such disaster exists in Canada, and that it is contagious pleuro-pneumonia of a special type, but not different in its "contagious and fatal effects" from the commonly accepted type known in Europe and elsewhere, is altogether irreconcilable with the fact that it cannot be at all found in Canada, and that it has never in any part of the Dominion been known; that no trace of it even has been, nor can be, discovered: This declaration is made after very earnest special search by veterinarians employed for that purpose by the Canadian Government.

12. That the continuing of the restrictive order requiring the slaughter of Canadian cattle at the port of arrival for the reason of the alleged presence of the disease of pleuro-pneumonia in Canada is not supported, and it is believed cannot be, by any proof of its existence.

If the Board of Agriculture should consider it advisable to send one or more veterinarians for any further elucidation of these facts on the authority of the persons employed by themselves, Mr. Angers advises that the offer made in 1892 be repeated, and that he be authorised to pay the expenses from his departmental appropriation applicable to such service.

The Engineering staff of the Public Works Department has prepared plans of proposed further protection works to Toronto Island, with the idea of placing a sum in the estimates at next session of Parliament. Mr. Coatsworth, M.P., was in town a few weeks ago, and strongly urged the Government to do something during the coming season. It is probable that a series of groins will be built on the lake shore of the Island and at right angles to the shore.

A number of shantymen, employed by Mr. George Fraser, on Magnassippi, had a lively experience on Sunday night. A box of sawdust took fire through a match being carelessly dropped into it. In a moment the shanty, in which there were 30 men, took fire. The foreman, William Gendron, jumping from his bunk, seized the burning box and attempted to get out of the door, which was blocked by the excited men. Before egress could be had, four men, Pepin, Desrosiers, Legault and Leon Landriau, all of Ottawa, were fearfully burned. Two were sent to Water-street Hospital.

The Department of Agriculture is advised of the forwarding of one shipment of winter-made butter to England, amounting to 4200 pounds, under the system of Government advances to farmers and dairymen, as outlined some time ago.

The Public Works Department have a staff of men engaged in putting the House of Commons Chamber in order, preparatory to a session of Parliament, whenever it may come.

IN THE IMPERIAL COMMONS.

The Venezuela Boundary Questions—The Armenian Enquiry.

London, March 15.—In the House of Commons, Sir Edward Grey, Parliamentary Secretary to the Foreign Office, said, in reply to a question on the subject, that Great Britain has no diplomatic representative at Caraccas, the capital of Venezuela. British interests there, he said, had been for some time in charge of the German representative. The British Government were ready to take steps for an amicable arrangement of the differences existing between the two countries, and had communicated that fact to Venezuela in [illegible], and again in 1893. The latter communication had never been answered by Venezuela, and Great Britain must, therefore, maintain the provisional boundary settled upon, which, however, does not embrace the whole of the British claim. Venezuela has been informed that Great Britain is willing to submit the question on possession of the territory outside of the Schonberg line to arbitration, but that she could not agree to arbitration in regard to territory which has been settled as part of the British colony.

Sir Edward, referring to the labors of the Armenian Commission sitting at Moosh, said that in consequence of representations made by the European delegates steps had been taken to provide the commission with an additional dragoman. The commission, he said, would have every possible assistance to prevent interference with the enquiry and to secure its efficiency.

BELLEVILLE, FRIDAY, MAR. 15.

CASKEY FOR NORTH HASTINGS.

In consequence of the retirement of Mr A. W. Carscallen, M. P. for North Hastings, from public life, it became necessary for the Conservatives of North Hastings to choose another gentleman to represent them in the next election for the Commons. Accordingly they met, in convention duly called, at Madoc on the 14th inst., and on the first ballot chose Mr. John Caskey as their candidate.

That Mr. Caskey will prove worthy of the confidence thus flatteringly shown by his fellow Conservatives of the riding and that he will faithfully represent them in Parliament we have no doubt whatever. An acquaintance with Mr. Caskey, extending over many years, enables us to speak of him as a man who is worthy of confidence, because he has proved himself thoroughly reliable in public affairs and active and earnest in support of Conservative principles.

Mr. Caskey, who is a farmer, resides in the township of Madoc, and has had a long experience in the Township and County Councils as Deputy Reeve and Reeve, in which positions he served his constituents faithfully and effectually.

The estimation in which he is held in the constituency is evidenced by the proceedings at the convention, and, whilst we have no doubt of his election, we urge every reader of the INTELLIGENCER to give him a hearty support in his candidacy for the high position of M. P. for the staunch old riding of North Hastings.

In Mr. Carscallen, who has occupied the position for two years—succeeding Sir Mackenzie Bowell on his appointment as leader of the Senate in 1892—North Hastings has had a highly efficient representative, and sympathy is felt for him on all hands in the cause of his retirement from public life, and hope for the speedy recovery of Mrs. Carscallen, whom he accompanied some weeks ago to the west, for the benefit of her health.

PROTECTION.

Some farmers have an idea that the aim of the present Government has been to crush the agriculturist. This is due to the Liberal leaders, who have not lost an opportunity to disquiet the farmer—and, in the past, they succeeded in causing some of the yeomanry to leave the farm and go to cities or the United States, where they have invariably fared worse, and are now showing it by returning to their farms.

Protection is also heralded as the ruination of any agricultural country, but let the working of the Conservative protection in Canada, answer. Farm implements are quite a necessary thing on a farm. They are bought as cheaply here as elsewhere, and to prevent combines, which would keep the price up, the Government has reduced the duty on them from 30 per cent. to 20 per cent.

Then comes the farmer's living. Protection does not affect that. Articles which are a necessity, or those which are not produced here, are admitted without a duty. Every one knows this—for the buying capacity of a dollar is double what it was in Mr. Mackenzie's time.

A few years ago Canada had no pork industry. The Armours, of Chicago, supplied the cities and towns with meat, which Canada did not produce. The lumber shanties of Ontario were eating imported pork. Was protection a benefit to the farmer, when the Government protected it to the extent of 3cts. a pound? Let the lucrative pork industry which Canada now has, decide that point.

Then to get a more definite idea of the people's wants, the Cabinet sent the Controllers through the country so as to hold interviews with the farmers and others, and in consequence, the revision of the tariff list saw many more articles on the free list, and a reduction of duty on others.

Apart from the value of protection to the farmer, we find the Experimental Farms of the Dominion doing a grand work, and to such an extent that farming is rapidly becoming a science. The cheese industry has grown rapidly to wonderful proportions, until it may be said to monopolize the British market; and this same Government, which the Liberals claim do not help the farmer, are now trying to induce the English to like the flavor of our butter as well as they do that of our cheese.

Why should Protection give way to Mr. Laurier's new English Free Trade?

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

New Millinery—Colors—Trimmings—Ribbons—Suits—New Silks—Wools.

For the INTELLIGENCER.

In new millinery, rough or fancy straws, especially the former, are the rule, and trimmings are extremely lavish in quantity and reckless in combinations of color. Wide brimmed hats are sometimes extremely wide and the majority in fanciful shapes, with full, high garniture, but as manifestly such styles are unsuited to a large class of persons, there are numerous toques or turbans, which by the addition of narrow velvet strings, do duty as bonnets; strings however being at a discount and not worn by many to whose advancing years they would be very becoming.

COLORS

are extremely bright, since the bright pink shades of the winter are repeated, with a liberal quota of green and these two are sometimes united with quite a glare. The bluet shades are seen again, but hardly with a former distinction. In ribbons there is an extraordinary range and choice is afforded in satin that may be double-faced, gros grain, taffeta, gauze, crepon with satin stripes or plisse, that is woven in folds, of which the inner one is a contrast or a lighter shade of the same hue as the outer fold and in either case is shown in glimpses, as the ribbon is made into loops. Taffeta ribbon stamped with chene patterns of small flowers, is extremely fashionable, because such styles lead in summer silks and narrow stripes for a similar reason, are popular.

IN SILKS

chene patterns are generally enclosed within narrow stripes and other varieties of silk show stripes, because such style is especially adapted to fancy waists. Much attention also is given to black silks, because skirts made of them are a chosen contrast to independent silk waists and among a large line at Lord & Taylor's, mention may be made of brocade in enormous patterns on satin or gros grain surfaces. Brocades of less size are seen of course and there is great choice in satin, moire and gros grain.

SUITS

of two or three pieces, skirt and jacket, or skirt, jacket and waistcoat, are to be worn and with waistcoats, the jacket is cut away to show them and fastened by one or three buttons. Great use will be made of these fancy vests, to give color effects and rich silks for the purpose, are in Paisley or Oriental mixtures. Skirts are close fitting in front and at the sides, with fullness massed at the back and as they are untrimmed, the finish at the foot is of great importance. The best is given by S.H. and M. skirt bindings and being on a true bias, they are easy to put on, the first step being to baste smoothly on the material, with both right sides together. A quarter inch seam should then be taken, after which, the binding must be turned over on the wrong side, until both edges are exactly even. The binding should then be basted again and lastly hemmed down on the upper edge. Finally press the binding with a warm iron, protecting it by a bit of crinoline and when the bastings are taken out, the binding will extend very slightly below the edge of the skirt, thus affording complete protection and giving an elegant finish.

LOOSELY WOVEN WOOLS

harmonize with loosely woven rough straws and some are so open as to require a light weight silk lining. Mixed wools are subordinate to plain black, because the latter are best suited to fancy waists, and nothing is more stylish than crepon, though of course, there must be choice among other goods.

LUCY CARTER

An Absurd Policy.

If we had a foreign market that took from us every year over a hundred million dollars' worth of agricultural products, a market that preferred our produce above all others, what would our farmers think of a political party that should propose to drop it? They would think that party mentally unfitted to be trusted with the public business of this country, and would throw the whole weight of their votes against it at polls. Now it is not our good fortune to have a foreign market so partial to our exports, but we have a home market of at least this magnitude. We have also a political party that proposes to give it up. The actual situation is the same, therefore, as in the supposed case. Our farmers have a $100,000,000 market which the Liberal party means to throw open to the farmers of all other countries. If we had a foreign market of equal capacity our farmers would have to pay freight and more or less foreign to get our stuff into it, and ocean freights, according to Mr. Mulock, are apt to be put up high on some heavy farm staples. The home market also costs the farmers something for protection, though certainly less than it would cost them to place the same quantity of produce in foreign markets, with the tariffs of the world as they are now. Markets are not to be picked up every day. They are in fact the great want of our time, coveted by all exporting nations, and jealously guarded by all countries but Great Britain. To get them by treaty is a matter of hard bargaining, in which one side always wants as much as the other. There are no markets lying around unclaimed or unoccupied. If the Liberals were in power they would surely be on the watch to find new markets. But why should they look for that abroad which they gave away at home? Having given it away they would have nothing to offer as an equivalent for trade privileges in the foreign countries to which they look for the sale of our farm products. The protective barriers would, therefore, be maintained against us by the United States, South American countries, and the nations of Europe. In the face of the tremendous competition that now disputes the foreign markets, our farmers could not hope to sell abroad a quantity of produce equal to that now sold at home, except at prices ruinously low. The Liberals lightly propose to bring the farmer to this pass. They want him to make an unconditional surrender to outsiders of a market that buys most of his surplus produce. This he is to do for nothing. He is to dispossess himself of his customers and get nothing for his goodwill. But he is expected to stay in business, embrace a life of poverty, and be borne up by his self-approval at having made shipwreck of his affairs for a principle. The Liberals must take the farmers to be a meek and simple type of person. The farmers have a market that they hold, not by the uncertain tenure of a treaty, but by their votes. They will be pretty certain to renew their hold on it at next election. They will not do as the United States farmers did, vote first and rue afterwards. Yet the loss of farmers across the line, as a result of the last tariff revision there, was a paltry thing compared with the disaster that free trade would bring upon Canadian Farmers.—Mail and Empire.

A Sure Remedy for Neuralgia.

Neuralgia is one of the most common and distressing complaints incidental to this climate. It is not confined to any particular season, for whilst most general in the winter seasons, yet many suffer its excruciating agony in the heat of summer. In late years this form of disease has become better known, and consequently the means of relief have become greatly increased in numbers, as well as in efficacy. Among the most powerful and penetrating combinations placed within the reach of the public for the relief of neuralgia, we can mention no remedy equal to or more certain than Polson's Nerviline. Its power over pain is something wonderful, and we advise a trial for neuralgia, or any other painful complaints.

THE LOCAL LEGISLATURE.

Two Important Resolutions by the Patrons

TOUCHING TWO OF THEIR PLANKS.

Appointment of County Officials By Direct Vote of the Electors — Reduction of Judges' and Local Masters' Fees Proposed—Bills To Amend the Municipal and Assessment Acts.

Toronto, March 15.—The Patron Party in the Legislature placed on the notice paper yesterday a batch of resolutions, which will in all probability give rise to some interesting discussions and close voting when they come before the House. Mr. McNichol has a motion favoring the election of all county officials except county judges by a direct vote of the municipal electors. Mr. Haycock will move that the commutation to the judges and local masters should be reduced so as not to exceed the revenues derived from the fees in respect of which the commutation allowance is paid. Mr. Caven will bring in a resolution that registry offices should be inspected in a manner to afford a better safeguard against fraud in regard to the proportion of the revenue payable by the registrar.

The session of the House yesterday was dull and uninteresting. For several hours the estimates were discussed in Committee of Supply, but nothing important transpired.

Mr. Haycock introduced a bill to amend the Municipal Act, providing that when a municipality pays 40 per cent. of the cost of a granolithic stone, asphalt or brick sidewalk, under the local improvement plan, those who pay the other 60 per cent. shall be exempted from only 60 per cent. of their portion of the general rate of the municipality for sidewalks within the municipality.

Mr. Richardson brought in a bill proposing several changes in the Municipal Act, as follows: That in the qualifications of candidates for members of councils the incumbrances upon the property under which qualification is claimed shall not be considered; that township councils shall have the power to remunerate their presiding reeves; that by a by-law the head of a municipality may be empowered to detain an indigent in a House of Industry for a term not greater than a year.

Mr. Richardson also introduced an amendment to the Registry Act, requiring registrars to send to the clerks of municipalities a yearly list of all transfers of land.

Mr. Little's bill to amend the Assessment Act and Mr. McKay's bill respecting the inspection of building societies were read a first time.

At the meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, Mr. Noxon, Inspector of Prisons, was instructed to prepare a statement showing the goods that are at present purchased by tender and otherwise, and to suggest what, if any, articles might be purchased by tender which are not at present secured in that way.

A deputation from Albemarle and Teeswater waited upon the Commissioner of Crown Lands for the purpose of asking for a grant for a road to connect, through the township of Albemarle, the two leading highways running north and south in the Bruce Peninsula.

The Speaker gave his second dinner last night.

Mr. Howland will ask whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce during the present session acts for the prevention of sales of merchandise, stock in trade, with intent to defraud creditors, and for amending the Registry Act by reuniting the Toronto Registry Offices and abolishing the office of registrar of East Toronto.

Mr. Whitney will enquire whether the Government has decided upon the establishment of a Normal School at London.

DESTROYED A $20,000 NOTE

Which Was Obtained By Alleged False Pretences.

Montreal, March 15.—Considerable excitement was this afternoon caused in the Stock Exchange by the forced liquidation of telegraph, cable, and gas stocks, held by the Quebec Bank as security for advances made to the broking firm of Meredith & O'Brien, who had in turn secured them from small brokers as security for loans and margins. However, no great break in prices occurred, and the firm passed the clearing house all right.

The Stock Exchange Committee held a meeting, but look on it as a matter of mutual adjustment between the parties. Most of the stock was bought low down, and the advance may clear the bank and the brokers.

The sale was caused by the non-payment of a $20,000 note of the firm's.

James O'Brien, jr., a son of James O'Brien, sr., the well-known wholesale merchant, has been arrested at the instance of Thomas McDougall, general manager of the Quebec Bank, on a charge of false pretences in regard to this note. Mr. O'Brien, jr., was released on bail and the enquete set for Monday, but a settlement is probable. The note was signed by the firm, endorsed by James O'Brien, sr., and has been overdue since March 4.

O'Brien, jr., got possession of the note on a promise that his father would re-endorse or pay the cash, but Mr. McDougall alleges that instead of doing so Mr. O'Brien, sr., destroyed the note. The complaint alleges that it was false that Mr. O'Brien, sr., had promised to re-endorse, and hence the arrest and forced liquidation.

Snider in North Waterloo

Elmira, Ont., March 15.—The Reform convention for North Waterloo met here this afternoon. I. E. Bowman, the present member, declined to stand, and E. W. B. Snider, ex-M.L.A. for this riding, was nominated.

Toronto Markets.

Flour—The market is firmer, owing to higher prices of wheat. Holders are asking $2.75 to $2.85 for straight rollers, Toronto freights.

Bran—A car offered at $15.50 west, with $15 bid. Small lots are $17 here and shorts $18.

Wheat—Offerings very light and prices firmer, owing to strength of outside markets. White wheat sold at 62 1-2c on the Northern, and holders generally asking 63c. There is a good demand for No. 1 Manitoba hard, with sales at 81c west, and at 83 1-2c, grinding in transit. The quotations at North Bay are 82c to 82 1-2c.

Barley—Trade is quiet and prices unchanged. No. 1 is quoted at 50c to 51c, No. 2 at 46c to 47c and feed at 43c to 45c.

Oats—The demand is good and prices rule firm, there being sales outside west at 35c for white, and east at 35c. Cars on track quoted at 38c.

Peas—Offerings small and prices unchanged, exporters paying 58c and local dealers 59c to 60c.

Rye—There is little or nothing offering and prices are quoted at about 45c east.

Boy—Shovel off your snow? Lady—No. I've got a husband who can do it. Boy—My goodness, you look too young to be married. Lady—Ahem! Well, you can do it.—Harper's Weekly.

MOUNTAINEERING.

FATAL ASCENT OF THE GROSS-GLOCKNER ON CHRISTMAS.

How Three Members of the Austrian Alpine Club Lost Their Lives—Experience of a Member of the English Alpine Club.

The three young Viennese mountaineers, Dr. Cohn, Dr. Patzau, and Herr Robert Pick, who lost their lives on Christmas Day while attempting to make a mid-winter ascent of the Austrian Matterhorn, as the Gross-Glockner is often called, have added three more victims to the already formidable list of fatalities that have occurred on that mountain, the number of which forms another point of similarity between the two giant peaks of Switzerland and the Austria Tyrol. In summer the Austrian peak is a comparatively easy climb, but in winter the risks from avalanches as well as those arising in consequence of the length of the tramp through deep snow, bad weather, and from the steepness of the last bit of ice-work are very considerable. The three members of who were all trained mountaineers, lost their lives, there is little room for doubt, in consequence of their vainglorious attempt to "do" the peak without guides, which, while quite possible in summer, is far too riskful in winter, when intimate knowledge of the weather and snow conditions is essential. The three climbers were in an exhausted condition long before they reached the dangerous parts of the expedition, and they were presumably swept from the face of the ice slope, which is the only approach to the main peak from that side, by the first gusts of the snowstorm which burst over that part of the Tyrol on Christmas Day. Two of them half fell, half slid, some six hundred feet, while the third went down double the distance. Their bodies were recovered and brought back only on the fifth day by the intrepid guides from Kals, the little village from where the ascent was attempted. Quite a pathetic incident is connected with the death of Dr. Cohn, for the Veinnese lady to whom he was engaged died of the shock which the news gave her, and the two were buried on the same day. The last serious accident on the Glockner occurred in the summer of 1886, when a well-known Austrian mountaineer, the Marquis Pallavicini, and three companions lost their lives by falling down some of the immense precipices which form the northern face of the great peak, and which are among the highest in the Alps.

The first successful winter ascent of the Gross-Glockner was carried out by the well-known English mountaineer Mr. Baillie-Grohman, with four guides, on the 1st and 2nd January, 1875. This member of who, as his book, "Camps in the Rockies," shows, has also done a good deal of mountain exploration in the Alps of North America, recently wrote a letter to a London morning paper giving not only the particulars of the last accident, but mentioning incidentally some details of his own ascent nineteen years ago, which so far has remained the only successful one at that season. Mr. Baillie-Grohman writes: "Leaving Kals on New Year's Day at 2 p. m., we reached the top of the Klein-Glockner, after a weary tramp of eleven hours through three feet and four feet of snow and some subsequent stiff ice work, between eight and nine the following morning. The top of this peak is ordinarily a sharp cone, from which a knife-like ridge runs towards the adjacent summit of the Gross-Glockner, which is only a trifle higher. Towards the north the Klein-Glockner falls off in one of the most profound precipices to be found anywhere in the Alps, for a stone flung by giant hand from this spot would first touch terra firma on the Pasterzen glacier.

NEARLY 400 FEET BELOW.

To our surprise we found on getting to this point, instead of a sharp rocky point, a broad platform of snow some 60 ft. long and from 12 to 16 ft. wide. Being anxious to show ourselves to the people of Helligenblut (a rival village from where several attempts had been made to gain the top in winter), who, we knew, were on the look out for us, the leading guide and I, forgetting for the moment the most ordinary precaution, stepped almost to the very edge of the platform. Sticking my bergstock into the snow with some force, so as to make a rest for my telescope, it almost slipped through my hands, and looking down through the hole it had made, I saw the Pasterzen Glacier straight below me. We had been standing for some seconds, or perhaps minutes, on a snow cornice jutting out into space, which the wintry gales had drifted against the brink of this stupendous abyss. By a side view we subsequently obtained from the ridge connecting the lower with the higher peak, we saw that where the cornice joined the rock it was only about three feet thick, while where I stood it seemed no more than a third, or at most, half that thickness."

Collector—You say that you are not liable to income tax? Why, you must be spending $25,000 a year! Jack Dashing—Very likely; but what has that to do with my income?—New York Sun.

Nocturnal Animals.

The true nocturnal animals are those which can find their food only at night. With the exception of the owls and bats, lemurs, lorises and nightjars, opossums, which are partly insectivorous, they are nearly all insect eaters, and though the last, like the owls, do move with rapidity and some precision when once disturbed, the others might be distinguished from those creatures which are only nocturnal by necessity by the absence of that wakefulness in sleep which the latter possess in such a marked degree. The bats, lemurs and lorises are, during the day, steeped and drugged with slumber.

If once discovered, they make no effort to escape; like the opossums, which let the "black fellow" chop them out of their holes in the hollow trees without moving from their sleeping places, it does not seem possible for them to awaken. Light benumbs their faculties like freezing cold, and they seek darkness with the same instinct that a human being, with senes benumbed by sickness demands more light. Bats, the only purely nocturnal animals in this country, show this charcteristic in its completest form. Their daylight sleep paralyzes them, though not because they are unable to see and fly with safety in the sunlight, for they can do both. But if handled and disturbed, they make no effort even to spread their wings, and seem unable to shake off the drowsy influence.

Not even the great night-flying moths are so completely the slaves of this unyielding habit of diurnal sleep. Contrasted with this deep repose, the slumber of the great body of herbivorous animals is so light and broken that it may be doubted whether their senses are ever so completely at rest as to deserve the name of sleep at all. In human sleep the sense of hearing is that which remains awake longest, and to which the brain most readily responds. But in sound and heavy sleep hearing often suggests a long train of thought in dreams before the brain awakens to a sense of reality. In most sleeping animals its warning is instantaneous, and the faculties obey the call for action with no apparent interval of inertia.—The Spectator.

FRIDAY IS NOT UNLUCKY.

The Abused Day Has Been Quite Prolific in Happy Events.

In spite of superstition, Friday is not an unlucky day. In fact, it can be proved by the most important happenings in the history of this and other countries that Friday is the most fortunate day in the week. For thirteen years past I have been collecting important events that have happened on Fridays, writes Marvin R. Clark. I venture to say that stronger proof cannot be submitted and ask you to cut it out and paste it in your scrap-book, where you may find it when your heart weakens with an attack of superstition.

On Friday, August 21, 1492, Christopher Columbus first sailed upon his great voyage of discovery from Palos, in Spain. On the 11th day of September, which happened upon a Friday, while in mid-ocean, to the consternation of his officers and men, the needle of the compass fluctuated and fell off in an unexplainable manner, and it was then that all but Columbus lost faith in the enterprise. It was on Friday, October 12, 1492, that Columbus first discovered land. On Friday, January 4, 1493, he sailed on his return to Spain, where he landed in safety on a Friday. On Friday, November 22, 1493, he arrived at Hispaniola, on his second voyage to America. It was on Friday, June 13, 1494, that he discovered the continent of America.

On Friday, March 5, 1496, Henry VIII. of England, gave John Cabot, his commission which led to his discovery of North America. This is the first American state paper in England.

Friday, September 7, 1505, Melendez founded St. Augustine, the oldest town in the United States by forty years.

Friday, November 10, 1620, the Mayflower, with the Pilgrims, made the harbor of Provincetown, and on the same day signed the august compact, the forerunner of our present constitution. On Friday, December 22, 1620, the Pilgrims made their final landing on Plymouth Rock.

George Washington was born on Friday, February 22, 1732, in Westmoreland Co., Va., near the banks of the Potomac river.

The first Masonic lodge in America was organized on Friday, November 21, 1721.

Bismarck, Gladstone and Disraeli were born on Friday.

Friday, April 8, 1646, the first known newspaper advertisement was published in The Imperial Intelligencer, in England.

Friday, July 1, 1825, Gen. Lafayette was welcomed to Boston and feasted by the Freemasons and citizens and attended at the laying of the corner-stone at Bunker's Hill of the monument erected to perpetuate the rememberance of the defenders of the rights and liberties of America.

The Hudson river was discovered on Friday, March 25, 1609.

On Friday, March 18 1776, the "stamp act" was repealed in England.

Friday, November 28, 1814, the first newspaper ever printed by steam, The London Times, was printed.

On Friday, January 13, 1785, Gen. Winfield Scott was born in Dinwiddie Co., Va.

Friday, May 14, 1586, Gabriel Fahrenhet, usually regarded as the inventor of the common mercurial thermometer, was born. It was he who first noticed that water boils at different degrees of temperature, according to the weight of the atmospheric column resting upon it—that is, it requires less heat to make it boil on the summit than at the foot of a high mountain. Wherever the English language prevails the graduation of Fahrenheit is generally preferred.

Friday, December 25, 1742, Sir Isaac Newton, the illustrious philosopher, was born.

Martin Luther, was born on a Friday, November 10, 1543, at Elseben, in the county of Mansfield, in Upper Saxony.

George Stephenson, the father of railways, was born on a Friday.

The Great Eastern left the Irish coast to lay the Atlantic cable on Friday, and reached Heart's Content on Friday.

Queen Victoria was married on a Friday.

The battle of Waterloo was fought, the Bastile destroyed, Moscow was burned and the battle of New Orleans was fought on Fridays.

On Friday, January 1, 1808, the importation of slaves into the United States was prohibited by Congress.—New York Advertiser.

Girls Coasting on Palm Leaves.

Wellesley College girls are having gay times nowadays, and if you see any of them in town with battered cheeks, skinned noses, and bruised hands you need ask no questions, for they have been coasting! Splendid opportunities there are for coasting at Wellesley; there are plenty of hills and plenty of room right there on the grounds. I was greatly amused when they told me about sliding down that hill exactly in front of the college on dustpans! It all came about this way:

One inventive genius did not have a sled and did not know where to borrow one; but the crust was perfection and of short duration, so while she stood, with her task of sweeping just concluded, with dustpan in hand, the thought, "Why not use the dustpan?" came like an inspiration, and out she skipped to the top of the hill, and down she sped, seated in state in her dustpan. The news spread and the craze grew until every dustpan on the premises was well worn out. After that, palm-leaf fans were pressed into service, and it is whispered that pillows have now and then proved the most agreeable and satisfactory of conveyances.—Boston Advertiser.

Preferred the Real Thing.

Whether real kissing shall be allowed on the stage is the question that is now agitating Vienna. In a play given lately at the Raimund theatre a good deal of kissing was required in the most important scene; the actress subjected to it held out for ten performances, when her husband interfered and insisted that the kissing should be make believe. The manager refused to yield and dismissed the actress, who is pretty and popular. Thereupon the Freudenblatt collected the opinions of all well-known German, French and Hungarian actresses and found that nine-tenths of them were in favor of the real kiss. The men were not asked.—New York Sun.

Mrs. Ashpen—I found it almost impossible this morning to get a man to shovel snow. Mrs. Dustbin—Poor fellows! I suppose they're all too busy looking for work.—Roxbury Gazette.

Old Skrooge—Do you think, young man, you could support my daughter in the style to which she has been accustomed? Her suitor—I could, but I'm not mean enough to do it.—Chicago Record.

Buggins—How do you, being a bachelor, know so much about women's bonnets, and so little about the drama? Muggins—Oh, I spend a great deal of time at the theatres.—Philadelphia Record.

CONSERVATIVES IN COUNCIL.

A GRAND GATHERING AT THE NORTH RIDING CONVENTION IN MADOC.

Hearty Expressions of Confidence in the Government—Sir Mackenzie Bowell Complimented on the Honors Conferred Upon Him—Mr. John Caskey Chosen as the Candidate for the Commons—Excellent Speeches by Hon. A. R. Dickey and Others at a Grand Meeting in the Evening.

The Conservatives of North Hastings met in convention at Madoc on the 14th inst., for the purpose of selecting a candidate for the House of Commons at the next election. The convention was called to order by Mr. F. J. Thompson, chairman. The Hall was filled in a very short time. The delegates occupied the centre of the Hall. Before a vote was taken, the following resolutions were proposed and carried:

Moved by Mr. J. Earl Halliwell, seconded by Mr. James Duncan, and resolved, That this convention, representing as it does the Liberal Conservative party of North Hastings, express its warm appreciation of the honors conferred upon its late representative, the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, K.C.M.G., recognizing, as they do, the valuable services rendered his country in Parliament, and as a member of the Government for nearly thirty years, twenty-five of which he was the representative of this Riding in the House of Commons, and also to convey to Sir Mackenzie Bowell their strong confidence that in the high and responsible position to which he has been called, as Premier of the Dominion of Canada, he will discharge its duties in a way that will be creditable to his past record and in the best interests of Canada, irrespective of classes or creeds.

Moved by Jas. Montgomery, Reeve of Rawdon, and seconded by John Tanner, Deputy Reeve, That this Convention of Liberal Conservatives of North Hastings, put on record its confidence in the policy inaugurated in 1878 and styled the "National Policy." That they are deeply impressed with its success, in not only being a great factor in promoting the prosperity of Canada, but also as one of the most effectual safeguards against the present world wide depression of trade.

That though leaders may fall and the country mourn the loss of such eminent statesmen as the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald, Sir John Abbott and the Right Hon. Sir John Thompson—yet we have full confidence in the ability and patriotism of the present Government under the leadership of Sir Mackenzie Bowell to maintain and successfully carry out the policy that has so unmistakably been such a success in the past.

Moved by Mr. J. Earl Halliwell, second by Mr. W. S. Martin, and resolved:

That the selection of a candidate be the first order of business after the opening of this meeting.

That the candidate be selected by ballot without nomination or discussion.

That a majority of all the votes cast shall be necessary for an election.

That if there is no election on the first ballot the names of all the candidates for which ballots have been cast shall be read to the delegates in the order of votes received for each. The candidate having the greatest number of votes first and so on down in rotation.

That after the names have been read out any candidate may rise and request that his name be dropped, but no discussion or comment shall be allowed until an election is reached.

That in case of no election a second ballot shall at once be taken and dealt with as before, and if necessary a third or any number of ballots until some one candidate receives a majority of all the votes cast.

That at the close of each ballot, after the first, the number of votes cast for each candidate shall be announced to the delegates together with the names of the candidates.

A letter was read from the present member, Mr. A. W. Carscallen, who is on his way to the far west for the benefit of his wife's health. He thanked the party for the honor conferred upon him by electing him to Parliament, and assuring them of his hearty support of whomsoever the party selected as their candidate.

Balloting for candidates being in order, and before the vote was announced James White moved, seconded by D. E. K. Stewart and resulted, that this Convention stand by the nominee and work for his return as M. P. for the North Riding of Hastings.—Carried.

There were 116 delegates present and the vote was as follows: John Caskey, 89; James Duncan, 19; James Montgomery, 6; Matthew Robinson, 2.

Moved by J. Duncan, seconded by Jas. Montgomery, that the nomination of Mr. Caskey be made unanimous. — Carried. (Great applause and loud cheers for Mr. Casky to speak).

Mr. Caskey, on coming forward, received an ovation. He made a short but excellent speech. He paid a glowing tribute to Sir Mackenzie Bowell, and thanked the electors for the honor conferred upon him. He took his seat amidst a storm of cheers.

Mr. J. E. Halliwell was called upon and made a short address. W. S. Martin, Warden, also spoke for a short time and was followed by Mr. W. B. Northrup, M.P. Hon. A. R. Dickey and W. C. Mikel.

The evening meeting was a great success. The hall was filled to overflowing. Addresses were delivered by the candidate, Mr. John Caskey, D. E. K. Stewart, James White, W. S. Martin, Hon. A. R. Dickey, N. B. Falkiner, Henry Corby, M.P. Mr. Burrows was present and favored the audience with a couple of songs, "The Old Flag," and "Jack's Come Home."

Mr. Dickey made the speech of the evening and was listened to with the closest attention. He made a good impression.

The meeting broke up a little after eleven by singing "God Save the Queen."

Around the walls of the hall were hung a number of mottoes. One was a ladder. On one side of the ladder Sir Mackenzie Bowell, our old representative, on the first round of the ladder as printer's devil, 2nd, reporter; 3rd, editor and proprietor; 4th, 1867, M.P.; 5th, 1878, Minister of Customs; 6th, 1892, Minister of Trade and Commerce; 7th, 1894, Premier of Canada.

A telegram was read from Mr. A. F. Wood, ex-M.P.P., who was called to Montreal, stating that whoever was their choice would have his hearty support.

A Happy Evening.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS

In the Case Between Jas. A. Chisholm the Spencers.

About two weeks Alva B. Spencer, of Huntingdon, was arrested and fined for removing goods from his farm held under mortgage by the Freehold and Loan Company, of Toronto, of which Jas. A. Chisholm of this city is local agent. Mr. Spencer was also to return the goods removed and this he claims he has done.

It appears, however, that Mr. Chisholm was not satisfied that all the property was returned, and in company with Constable Garratt he went on Wednesday to the farm of Almon Spencer, a son of Alva B. Spencer, living in Sidney, and it is alleged, broke open the stable door and took therefrom a set of harness and two cows after having been forbidden to do so.

This morning Mr. Chisholm and Constable Garratt appeared in the police court on two charges, namely trespass and removing goods and converting them to their own use. The case was in progress all the morning and is still on this afternoon. A. R. Dougall, Q. C., appeared for Almon Spencer on behalf of the crown and S. Masson acted as counsel for the defendants.

Mr. Chisholm justifies his action by the fact that property on which his company held a mortgage had been removed and he had a right to look for it without a search warrant. The Magistrate did not concur in this opinion.

SONS OF ENGLAND.

Election of Officers—Peterborough Selected as the Next Meeting place.

WOODSTOCK, March 14.—After routine business, the election of Supreme Grand Lodge Officers was proceeded with. Supreme Vice-President George Clatworthy was elected Supreme Grand President by acclamation. Past Grand President Thos. Elliot, Brantford, was nominated, but declined. For election for Supreme Grand Vice-President, Mr. J. W. London, Belleville, and Mr. J. Hook, London, were nominated, Mr. London was elected by a majority of nineteen. Supreme Grand Secretary J. W. Carter, of Toronto, was re-elected by acclamation for his fourteenth term in in that office. Supreme Grand Treasurer, Ben Hinchcliffe, was re-elected by acclamation. For Supreme Auditors, Messrs. George Clark and T. P. Williams, of Toronto, were elected; and Messrs. Thos. R. Skippon, Dr. J. S. King and J. C. Swait, of Toronto, were elected Supreme Trustees. Mr. T. A. Dyer was elected District Supreme President for South Africa. An adjournment was had at 11.30 to allow the scrutineers an opportunity to count the ballots for the Beneficiary Board and General Committee.

Peterborough was selected as the next meeting place of the Grand Lodge by a large majority. Sarnia, Brantford, St. Catharines, Rosseau and Ottawa were also suggested.

WAS FATALLY INJURED.

Engineer Sliter in Thomson & Avery's Mill Tossed by Belting.

SHARBOT LAKE, March 13.—Yesterday afternoon M. Sliter, engineer in Thomson & Avery's sawmill, while watching J. Thomson adjust the belting on machinery in the sawmill, had both legs broken below the knee and injured internally by the belt breaking and throwing him into the belting working the bull wheel. From the effects of the injuries he died at 6:40 p.m. Mr. Sliter leaves a wife and three small children, besides numerous relatives and friends. He was a charter member of court Little John, No. 442, I.O.F., in which he was insured for $1,000. He held the position of Court Deputy of the High Chief Ranger, and was held in high esteem by all who knew him. His funeral will take place from the Presbyterian church at 2 p.m. Thursday.

SPORTING TALK.

The Limestone hockey club, of Kingston, will be here to-night and will play a match with the city team. Following will be the city team: Jamieson, Hulme, Phippen, Powell, Wolever, Kelso and Weller.

Peterborough is after the C.W.A. meet this year, and if there is anything in good reasoning they should get it. The town has a large club, a good fast track, and good hotel accommodation. The other competitor for the meet is Waterloo and the matter will be decided at the annual meeting on April 12th.

Mrs. William Willard Howard, wife of the noted American canoeist, has challenged Miss Constance Bennett, the winner in a ladies' race last summer off the south coast of England, in which Mrs. Howard was second, to a race on the Solent this coming season. Mrs. Howard will sail the new half-rater to be built for her husband, and Miss Bennett, who has accepted the challenge, will probably sail in a new boat, Spruce IV.

The new British yacht Ailsa seems to be a flyer. The yacht that easily beats the Britannia, which beat the Vigilant so often, must be a very fast boat. The Ailsa again beat the Britannia yesterday—this time by 13 minutes. Her two victories have been won in Britannia weather—light winds and smooth water. Her performance in high winds and heavy seas will be awaited with great interest. It is pretty certain now that Great Britain will be represented by a faster yacht than the Vigilant in the next America's cup races.

Big Purchasers of Cattle.

Messrs. J. A. Hathaway and Jos. Gould, export cattle dealers of Boston and Chicago, were in the city yesterday and were guests at Hotel Quinte. Their object in visiting the city was to purchase 300 head of cattle in the stables at Mr. Corby's distillery. They looked over the animals and made an offer. They have just come from Hamilton and Windsor, where they purchased about 3000 head of cattle at, we understand, 5½c. At any rate the purchase will amount to at least a quarter of a million dollars. They left this morning for Prescott, where they will try to buy Mr. Wiser's cattle. It is not yet known whether their offer for Mr. Corby's cattle will be accepted or not.

The Weather.

Up to the present, the month of March has rivalled the record of February as being far below the average temperature. During six nights out of the fourteen that have passed since the month opened, there have been no less than six in which the mercury has marked below zero. Last night it was 6 below zero; at 8 a.m., 1 above; and at noon, 22.

PROBABILITIES.

Fair weather; slowly rising temperature, followed by some snow, mostly in southern portion.

KINGSTON PRESBYTERIAL W. F. M. S.

WHAT WAS DONE AT THE AFTERNOON AND EVENING SESSIONS.

The Secretary's and Treasurer's Reports—The President's Address—Greetings From Other Societies of a Similar Nature—Three Topics for Discussion—Mrs. Harvie's Address at the Evening Session.

The afternoon session of the Kingston Presbyterial W. F. M. S. opened at 3 o'clock yesterday with a large attendance of ladies. The President opened the meeting by reading a chapter of scripture and Mrs. M. W. Maclean led in prayer, after which a hymn was sung.

The following ladies were upon the platform: Mrs. Byers, President; Miss Fowler, Secretary; Mrs. York, Mrs. A.G. Northrup, Mrs. Harvie, of Toronto; Mrs. Mowat, of Kingston, and Mrs. Hamilton, Kingston.

The General Secretary, Miss Fowler, of Kingston, read her annual report, which was most satisfactory. The report stated that on the whole the past year had been one of marked progress, and most of the reports speak of increased interest, and greater willingness to take part in the meetings and a general desire for missionary intelligence. Thanksgiving services have become a prominent feature of the work and are generally found of great value in stimulating the interest. One new Mission Band was organized and one new life member, Miss Holden, of Belleville, was added. Miss Dr. Oliver and Miss Baker, the Society's Missionaries, have visited several of the societies during the year, but Miss Baker, on account of ill health, had been unable to visit Belleville and other places in this locality. Eight hundred pounds of clothing, valued at $528, including complete outfits for nine girls and fourteen boys, had been sent to the North-West. This clothing was shipped from Belleville under the direction of Miss Holden and the ladies of the committee. The thanks of the Society are due to Mr. Thos. Stewart for valuable assistance rendered in many ways. Four hundred and fifty-eight copies of the letter leaflet were subscribed for. Prayer cards and literature was also distributed. In a few societies the Scattered Helpers Scheme was used successfully. The society acknowledged the following annual donations: Mrs. Shibley, of Harrowsmith, $25; Ladies' Missionary Society, of Deseronto, $20; two ladies in Pittsburgh, $2. There has been an increase in the contributions and a sign of increased prosperity.

The Treasurer, Mrs. Hamilton, of Kingston, read her report, which is as follows:

The Society raised during the year $1,356.63, an increase of $32.52 over last year. Of this amount St. Andrew's church of this city contributed $113.15, and John St. Presbyterian church, $130.00. The Belleville Laborers of Love Mission Band gave $100. The Society also raised for the North-West—$528.22, of which St. Andrew's gave $24, John St., $17.48, and the Laborer's of Love Mission Band, $4.50.

Both reports were received and adopted.

Mrs. Harvie, of Toronto, was called upon and addressed the meeting. She said all the lady members of the church should join either the Auxiliary or Mission Band. In reference to the question of sending clothing to the North-West, she said all goods sent should be sent at one time and that they should be carefully looked over before being sent.

After some discussion on minor points the President, Mrs. Byers, gave her annual address, which was full of encouragement and helpful hints. She warned her hearers that as the opportunities for doing good increased, so do the adversaries of their work. She spoke of the terrible suffering of their heathen sisters, whom their society set out to help. She hoped the outcome of this annual meeting would be to send us home with a greater idea of our responsibility and an increasd desire to do the Master's work. She said some church workers thought this society was taking from ther missionary work, but such was not the case. Let everyone know that we are working solely for heathen women and children only, and that our funds cannot be used for supporting an ordained missionary. She was pleased to note the increase in the contributions from the many Auxiliaries. She had not been able to do as much visiting among the Auxiliaries as she would have liked. Let us never grow impatient or anxious to take one step faster than our Father would have us.

Mrs. Woodcock, on behalf of the Tabernacle Auxiliary, wished the Presbyterial W.F.M.S. every success and God speed in their work.

Mrs. (Dr.) Carman, of the Methodist Mission, also greeted the Society and gave a short address on the work of her own society and warmly greeted the delegates to the city.

Miss Wilson of the Holloway st. Church Auxilliary, spoke glowingly of the work the Society to which she belonged was doing and wished the Presbyterial God speed.

Mrs. (Dr.) Tracy, of the Baptist Missionary Society, and Mrs. (Rev.) E. N. Baker, of the Bridge St. Auxiliary, spoke in a similar strain.

Miss Eva Rose York read a paper entitled the "True Chord of Missionary Work." In missionary work two essentials are necessary—consecration and faith—and she defined carefully what these two terms mean. Years ago prayers of christian people prayed for the opening up of the world and God has answered their prayers and now all that is needed is missionaries to go abroad and do His work. Christian missionaries are giving their best energies in this work, but what little encouragement we give them. The paper throughout showed great thought and careful preparation and the President said she was sure all present had been delighted and benefitted by its contents.

Next followed a conference on the following subjects: (1) "How shall we increase membership and interest?" (2) "What is the best method of conducting devotional exercises?" (3) Methods of conducting Mission Bands." Several ladies took part in the discussion that followed and many helpful points were brought out and explained.

After singing a hymn Mrs. Harvie, of Toronto, answered the questions in the question drawer and Mrs. Mowat, of Kingston, conducted the closing exercises.

EVENING SESSION.

John st. church was crowded last evening with an enthusiastic audience to listen to an address by Mrs. Harvie, of Toronto, on Mission Work among the Indians of the North West. Rev. M. W. Maclean opened the meeting with prayer, and Mrs. Harvie was introduced.

In her opening remarks she said: I count it a very great pleasure to be in the John st. church this evening. I had this privilege about ten years ago and was greeted with a very attentive and helpful audience. I will try to-night to interest you in speaking of the great North West and tell what we saw while there. Continuing, she asked that the prayers of the women of the Kingston Presbytery be earnestly offered up for the improvement and christianization of the Indians of the North West. The Western Section of Ontario is specially interested in three fields, namely, China, including Formosa and Honan, Central India and the North-West. The contributions from women last year amounted to sixteen thousand dollars, besides many thousands of pounds of clothing.

She left Toronto on August 1st last summer for a trip through the North-West and was absent seven weeks, returning on September 18th. They visited all the mission stations in the North-West, arriving first at Winnipeg. They had letters of introduction to the missionaries and preparations were made to receive them at every point. From Winnipeg they went to Portage La Praires, and here they would travel miles and miles without seeing anything but earth and sky. They met a band of Sioux Indians at Portage La Prairie and they were much more comfortable than any tribe they met on their trip. They cultivated a few acres of land and had a school which was started eight years ago. There are at present twenty-two pupils in the school, the youngest being two years of age and the eldest seventeen. The Sioux, she said, are very loose in their morals. The speaker described the boarding and industrial schools and the tepees or huts. The religion of this tribe is all pagan. They next arrived at Minnedosa, which is a pretty town built as if sitting in the middle of a cup, it being surrounded by hills. The instructor here has not yet been ordained, although he has asked to be. He is a clever missionary. They crossed the Riding Mountains on a buck-board, travelling eighteen miles, and they encountered a terrible storm while crossing. The fires at the mission house were extinguished, and they had to sleep in the loft, making their stay there very uncomfortable. The Indians at this point at first opposed the missionary, Mr. Wright, but now they are firm friends. The Indians came early next morning after their arrival to see the great white squaws from the east. The speaker said she named a baby Joseph and gave a pound of tea for the privilege. Since our visit, she said, seven houses have been built at this point and thirteen more are in course of erection. The women looked very savage in their red paint, as they had not yet learned to put it on as artistically as their white sisters in the east. At Rolling River there is a very good day school, but but no boarding school. They have beautiful gardens at this place. They were welcomed by the Indians upon their arrival. The Chief, after a long silence, addressed them as follows:

"I am very glad to welcome the great white mothers from the east. We thank them for the schools they give us and the clothing they send us. We love the Great Spirit and now we welcome you." Another Chief regretted that he could not send a piece of venison to her husband. He wished they would try and have the game laws of Manitoba changed and he asked them to intercede with the Government for them. They also visited Yorktown, Wallace and Birtle. The Indians are very fond of hand-shaking and they had to shake hands from 150 to 200 times a day.

The address was very interesting and Mrs. Harvie was cordially thanked for the information it contained.

The choir contributed largely to the pleasure of the evening, while Mrs. Walter Ross, of Picton, rendered a beautiful anthem, which was much appreciated by the audience.

Broken in Health

That Tired Feeling, Constipation and Pain in the Back

Appetite and Health Restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Mr. Chas. Steele
St. Catherine's, Ont.

C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"For a number of years I have been troubled with general tired feeling, shortness of breath, pain in the back, and constipation. I could get only little rest at night on account of the pain and had no appetite whatever. I was that tired in my limbs that I gave out before half the day was gone. I tried a great number of medicines but did not get any permanent relief from any Orphaned at Ninety-two.

At the Home for Aged and Infirm Colored People, Girard and Belmont Avenues, on Wednesday, the oldest man in Pennsylvania, John Gibson (colored), died after a lingering illness. He was buried at Olive cemetery yesterday afternoon. He was better known as "Father" Gibson, and when he entered the Home eleven years ago, he said he was 119 years old, which would make him 130 at the time of his death.

Other testimony as to the colored patriarch's age varies as follows: An adopted daughter says he was 123, having been born at Snow Hill, Maryland, January 26, 1772. Others say he was about 117 years old. Until the war of the rebellion, "Father" Gibson was a slave; but during the struggle he escaped and came to Pennsylvania, subsequently settling in North Penn village, in 1886. In that section of Philadelphia he founded the first colored church, and was long one of its exhorters. He has a son 92 years old in the South.—Philad'a Record.

Fun From the Boarding-House.

"I have one objection to Mr. Longfeeder," said a Texas landlady to a friend. She was referring to one of her boarders.

"What's the matter with him?"

"There is nothing the matter with him. I only wish there was."

"What do you complain of?"

"My dining hour is at 12, and he's always an hour late. But that is not the worst. Instead of coming at 12 and eating for one, he comes at one and eats for twelve, and I'm being shoved into bankruptcy."—Texas Siftings.

"Have you boarded long at this house?" inquired the new boarder of the sour dejected man sitting next to him

"About ten years."

"I don't see how you can stand it. Why haven't you left long ago?"

"No other place to go," said the other dismally. "The landlady's my wife."—Le Figaro.

Samples of Grain.

To the Editor of the INTELLIGENCER.

During the past eight years, samples of those varieties of grain which have succeeded best on the Experimental Farms, have been distributed on application in three-lb. bags to farmers in all parts of the Dominion, free through the mail. The object in view in this distribution has been to improve the quality and character of these important agricultural products throughout the country. This work has met with much appreciation, and a considerable degree of success.

Last year I was instructed by the Honorable Minister of Agriculture to forward, as far as practicable, two samples to each applicant, but the applications received were so numerous, that on this basis of distribution all the available stock had been promised by the middle of February, and all later applicants could not be supplied.

This year my instructions are to send one sample only to each applicant, with the hope that with this limitation every farmer in the Dominion who so desires may share in the benefits of this useful branch of the work of the Experimental Farms.

The distribution now in progress consists of some of the most promising sorts of oats, barley, spring wheat, peas, field corn and potatoes. Already more than 7,000 applications have been filled. All farmers desiring to participate in this distribution should send in their applications early, and state which of the above named samples they would prefer, and their wishes will be met as far as practicable, until the available stock is exhausted. The grain can be sent early, but the potatoes will not be distributed until the danger of being injured in transit by frost is over. Letters addressed to the Central Experimental Farm may be sent free of postage.

Director Experimental Farms.

A Pertinent Question.

(Hamilton Spectator.)

Of Sir Mackenzie Bowell it may be said that, more than any other man now in political life, he has applied to the affairs of government that most uncommon of virtues, common sense, and has sought to administer his department as he would administer a great manufacturing or mercantile business, by industry, integrity, prudence and steady application. The printer's boy began life by rolling forms as well as he could; he has since done all his work to the best of his ability, conscientiously, energetically and thoroughly; and his system has made him Premier of the Dominion of Canada.

We are not unwilling to point a political moral with the non-political event at Belleville. The people of Canada will in a few weeks or a few months at furthest, be called upon to say whether they will retain this prudent, honest, capable, efficient, well-tried apostle of common sense at the head of the Government, or whether they will turn him out and put a mere juggler with words in his place. Party principles and party prejudices will guide many electors in casting their votes. To a greater or less extent religious feeling, sectional feeling and race feeling will have their effect. It is unnecessary at present to deal with these. But it is worth while for the man who has material interests at stake—the manufacturer who has his industry to guard, the merchant and the banker, whose fortunes may be blown away at the first tempest, and the workman whose interests are involved with those of the manufacturer—to ask whether the industries and commerce of the country will be safer in the hands of a practical man like Sir Mackenzie Bowell or in those of a theorist like Mr. Laurier, who cannot even state the principles on which the fiscal policy of the Government should be framed, and who gives evidence in every speech he delivers that he does not even understand the policy he strives to expound. If a great ship were at sea in dirty weather, the captain would not try the experiment of turning a skilled engineer out of the engine room and putting in his place a passenger with a mere smattering of mechanical knowledge and a trick of framing polished sentences. Nor would it be safe to try a like experiment in the engine room of the Dominion of Canada.

HEAD AND SHOULDERS above every other blood-purifier, stands Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. See the evidence of it. It's sold in every case, on trial. If it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

In restoring your strength, when you're "run-down" and "used-up;" in cleansing your blood from every impurity, whether it's a simple eruption or the worst scrofula; and in building up wholesome flesh, when you're thin and weak—there's nothing to equal the "Discovery." In every disease caused by a torpid liver or impure blood, it's the only guaranteed remedy.

MRS. ELIZABETH J. DUSHWAW, of Sidney, Ohio, writes: "My little boy was so afflicted with liver trouble and other diseases that our family physician said he could not live. In fact, they all thought so. I gave him Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pellets and they saved his life. We have used the 'Discovery' for throat and bronchial trouble, and found such perfect relief that we can recommend it very highly."

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

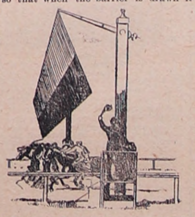
AUSTRALIA'S STARTING MACHINE.

A Description of the Affair With a Couple of Illustrations.

The Australian starting machine is said to be a success. It is described as being constructed of two posts, planted firmly on either side of the track in as many places as there are distances for races. These posts are braced in the direction of the track, with wire guy ropes running from the ground to their tops, very much after the manner in which the center poles of circus tents are held in place. The wire braces on the side on which the start is to be made form a sort of inclined plane. The barrier is attached to these braces at the ends by means of ground pulleys. These pulleys are attached to the top of the posts by means of strong rubber bands, so that when the barrier is drawn it will be on a level with the heads of the horses in waiting for the start.



AUSTRALIAN STARTING MACHINE AS THE HORSES GET AWAY.

When ready to be released the barrier is carried to the top of the posts almost instantaneously with the touching of the button. The barrier itself is formed of eight tight ropes stretched parallel to each other at intervals of two or three inches. The barrier is released by means of an electric button attached to the post alongside of the starter's box, whose whole duty is to see that the horses are up close to the screen. The whole machine is exceedingly light and simple in construction.

In a recent number of The Argus of Melbourne the following account of a practical test of the starting machine is given:

In the Nursery Handicap, which was the first race selected to supply an opportunity of testing the machine, twenty two-year-olds faced the screen, the only horse which give the slightest difficulty being Messrs. Baily & Orr's chestnut colt Onward. With a little coaxing, however, and the assistance of a bystander to lead him, he was brought up to the screen. Mr. Watson touched the button and shouted the word "Go," and before the monosyllable was well out of his mouth the screen had shot up high in the air with a snapping sound, and the horses were off at full speed,

HORSES WAITING FOR A START,

So even was the start that it was hard to see whether any horse had the best of it, but it seemed as though Mr. S. Miller's Gale, one of the dead heaters at the finish, was a shade quicker off the mark than anything else in the race. The trial was repeated in the last race on the card—the Windsor Handicap—and resulted in an almost equally satisfactory manner. Walwa was a little unruly and kicked Atlas twice, but after a very few secands' delay Mr. Watson released the spring and seventeen of the twenty horses shot away at once. The three others, Arlas, the Merry Girl and Badoo, were left at the post for a fraction of a second, but got away without losing many lengths.

In trotting races it might possibly be placed at the distance stand, and there line the horses up, so that an even start could be secured from that point and then with instructions from the starter to bring the horses up to their gait, it might help to expedite a start.

THE PYRAMIDS OF EGYPT.

How Were They Reared and How Was the Material Gathered.

The pyramids of Egypt, for long and to this day included among the world's wonders, are to be regarded as marvellous triumphs of mechanical skill. Of these there are many scattered over the Nile Valley, some of brick, some of stone and of varied height. The two largest are in the neighborhood of Cairo. They are, and have been for thousands of years, the most colossal monuments in the world.

The largest, that of Cheops, in its original state is said to have been 800 feet high and the length of base on each side the same. It is built of huge stones, ranging from two to four feet in height. It is now rugged and has the appearance of a four-sided great stairway. The hollows between the steps are believed to have been filled in with white marble which would shine like snow under the bright Egyptian sun. The pyramid is now much reduced in height, not being more than 500 feet. It is generally admitted that the pyramids were built for tombs, and on certain astronomical principles.

There is an inner chamber where the sarcophagus was placed. When a monarch began to reign he commenced to build his tomb. When he died his body was placed in the sacred chamber prepared for it and the opening which led to it was closed. The pyramid was then completed. If the monarch's reign was long the pyramid was large. If short, the pyramid was small.

How those great structures were reared, how those huge masses were brought together and put in their places—is a question which has never been satisfactorily answered. Of mechanical forces some of the early people seem to have had much more knowledge than there is any direct record of.—Chicago Record.

Not to Be Expected.

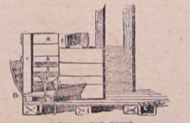
"Put up or shut up," said one pugilist to another.

"I'll put up," was the latter's reply. "But surely you do not expect me to violate the tenets of our profession by shutting up?"—Puck.

A STALL FOR COWS.

An Arrangement by Which the Cattle Will Keep Clean and Comfortable.

A correspondent of The Ohio Farmer gives this description of a stall for cows. The main secret of construction is the fencing of the animal back to the edge of ditch by making the upright fencing (at E) at such distance from the drop as will allow her to stand with her hind feet quite close to the edge of the ditch and her nose against the bars to eat hay. Thus her movements are confined to side motion, which is perfectly free when chained with the ordinary T and swivel chain attached at a. She can lie down and rise with perfect ease, the feed trough being of such height as to give her head room for complete comfort when lying down.



A STALL FOR COWS,

The manger d is 18 in. wide at top, and can be made of such height as best suits the builder and made withou partitions except at g, so that any kind of roughage can be fed, especially fodder. The feed trough is 18 in. wide, with a front board 6 in. or 7 in. high, raised from the platform by two 3x3 scantling running lengthwise of the stable, and is calculated to accommodate any class of feed, such as meals, cut hay, fodder, straw and ensilage, also as a receptacle for the roughage dropped by the cow while eating from her rack at a.

The platform is 6 ft. from b to c, and can be made to suit the maker, either of wood, clay or cement. The one in our stable is made of oak boards with broken joints, laid on three 4 x 4 scantling, with a plank ditch 16 in. wide and 9 in. deep at platform and 7 in. at rear.

The stalls are 3 ft, 3 in. wide and 4 tt. high, and the sides 8 ft. 6 in. long from posts e to posts h. Posts e are made from 3 x 3 studding and are 4 ft. 10 in. high from b to f, and the length of stalls is regulated by putting the bars a on either side of the posts or at any distance to suit the length of cow, or can be made movable if one desires to construct them so as to suit young heifers. The first stall has the siding left off in the illustration, to give the reader a better idea of the arrangement, but should be closed up from upright post to the edge of the hay manger at b and d. I am so confident of the success of this stall that I can at this date, in its second winter in use, in our stable, recommend. Our cows are perfectly clean and comfortable.

Prepare for the Garden.

A correspondent of the Ohio Farmer urges early preparation for the summer's gardening. He says that little can be done during the next two months in the way of garden work, but preparations may be made to be ready when the times comes to plant that no delays will interfere with the work. It is a good time to study the seed catalogues and make selections of seeds. The novelties of last year have been tried and if they appear in any considerable number of the catalogues it is fair to presume that they are of value and though the price may be a little high a package or two may prove a good investment. I was one of the few who invested in dwarf lima beans the first year they were offered and I sold all I grew to a seedsman at 25 cents a quart and he would have taken more at the same price. It is time well spent to study catalogues pretty closely for most of them give cultural directions and information about varieties that are of value in practical work. The garden tools may be put in order and made ready for instant use and the hot bed sashes and frames made so as to take advantage of the first warm days. The plan of the garden should be decided on and will go on smoothly. I have found that the great difficulty in growing garden stuff is the large amount of hand work that is necessary when the gardens are made up as they usually are in a patchy manner so as to make it impossible to take a horse into them to do any of the cultivating.

My garden is four rods wide and 20 long, containing half an acre. In this everything is planted in rows that run entirely across the garden north and south. Of these sorts that a row would be too much for our own use, I put different things in a row. I will have one row of peas but there will be several varities in the row. And it made that onions, lettuce, radishes and beets will be all in a single row, but the rows run across the lot so a horse can be taken in to cultivate it. It is not good economy to plant a garden so as to make it necessary to do all the work by hand as experience has taught me that when this is done there is always more or less neglect observable, and a good many times the indications point to an abandonment of the whole garden to weeds. If this plan of planting in rows is adopted there is a great saving of time and labor and more thorough cultivation is possible. If land is high priced and one has but small space to spare, such vegetables as onions, lettuce, beets, radishes, etc., may be sown in beds as usual on one side of the lot and cultivated by hand, while corn, squashes, sweet potatoes, early potatoes, etc., may be planted in rows. Do not be afraid to manure the garden heavily nor of working it too much, as stirring the soil frequently is one of the secrets of a good garden.

Dehorning.

Many considered dehorning cruel when it was first mentioned, but when Mr. J. F. Bean explained the advantages derived and that the "cruelty" was mostly imaginary, then the people looked at it with a greater degree of favor, Wherever it has been tried, it has been found to give the best of satisfaction. The dairy cows become quiet, and the hides of beef animals are much better, because they are not injured by the horns of other animals. Some use clippers, others a saw, but in either case it is done quickly and all goring is at an end. Some remove the embryo horns when the calves are a few days old, others apply a caustic, and so kill the horn of the young calf. Sometimes horns grow if dehorned under a year and a half old, but after that age they do not. The horn should be taken off as near the head as possible to obtain good results.

A Lake With a Lead Bottom.

Dubuque county, Iowa, boasts the possession of the most unique subterranean lake in the world—an underground body of water with a bottom formed throughout of pure crystals of lead. The farm upon, or rather under, which this curious lake is situated is near the city of Dubuque, in the heart of the lead regions which made that portion of the Northwest Territory famous before the opening of the present century. The prospectors who discovered the cavern in which this lead-bottomed lake, is situated had sunk a shaft 250 feet before striking it. They attempted to drain the lake or pump it dry, so as to get at the lead, but were disappointed to find it connected with the Mississippi river.

Jules D'Estimanville Clement. writes from Montreal: "I was suffering from skin disease, and after all drugs failed tried Burdock Blood Bitters, of which three bottles restored me to good health. I recommend it also for dyspepsia."

Beggars are promptly arrested in Vienna if caught begging on the streets.

The Medicine for Liver and Kidney Complaint.—Mr. Victor Auger, Ottawa, writes: "I take great pleasure in recommending to the general public Parmelee's Pills, as a cure for Liver and Kidney Complaint. I have doctored for the last three years with leading physicians, and have taken many medicines which were recommended to me without relief, but after taking eight of Parmelee's Pills I was quite relieved, and now I feel as free from the disease as before I was troubled."

As Parmelee's Vegetable Pills contain Mandrake and Dandelion, they cure Liver and Kidney Complaints with unerring certainty. They also contain Roots and Herbs which have specific virtues truly wonderful in their action on the stomach and bowels. Mr. E. A. Cairncross, Shakespeare, writes: "I consider Parmelee's Pills an excellent remedy for Biliousness and Derangement of the Liver, having used them myself for some time."

Zanzibar, more correctly Zanguebar, signifies "the coast of the negroes."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of today, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

COMMITTEE WORK.

Front st. Sewer to be Built to McMahon's Livery—As to Market Fees.

The joint committee of the Executive and Special Sewerage Committee decided last evening to accept the tender of Walter Alford for building the Front st. sewer from Hotel st. to a point a few feet above the water tank at McMahon's livery.

The Executive Committee have received from W. H. Biggar, M.P.P., a copy of a bill introduced by Mr. Richardson, Liberal M.P.P. East York, which will, if made law, abolish all market fees. The Market Committee will be called together to take steps to oppose the passage of the bill.

The Premier's Special Menu Card.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell was greatly delighted to find by his plate at the banquet a special card, executed in pen and ink by Miss Maclean, daughter of Rev. M. W. Maclean, containing a central portrait of himself as Premier, and surrounded by sketches representing him as Printer's Imp, as Publisher INTELLIGENCER, as addressing the electors of North Hastings, as Captain at the front, as Minister of Customs, &c. The whole was surmounted by his crest and motto, "Fortis cadere non cedere potest," and entwined around it was the appropriate quotation, "A man he seems of cheerful yesterdays and confident to-morrows." On the back were some humorous parodies, and an adaptation of Oliver Wendell Holmes' "The Silver Bowl:"

"I tell you there was generous warmth in good old English cheer;
I tell you 'twas a pleasant thought to bring its symbol here."

Pinafore was also utilized.

"He set the type with a smile so bland,
And copied all the leaders in a big round hand;
He copied all the leaders in a hand so free,
That now he is the Premier of this fair countree."

Both in execution and design the artistic work was excellent and the bits were appreciated by the Premier's colleagues as well as by himself.

Mrs. Richardson's Death.

We referred a few days ago to the death at Prescott of Mrs. Richardson, mother of Miss Richardson of the C.P.R. Telegraph office, and now we clip the following from the Prescott Journal of the 14th inst.:—"There has been no death in our town of late that has caused such a shadow of sorrow, a pang of regret, a feeling of sympathy and anguish, more than the loss of that estimable lady, Mrs. Richardson, which occurred on Sunday evening last. Her genial and loving disposition made her a great favorite with all classes who had the pleasure of her acquaintance. As a wife none better, as a dutiful and loving mother none to excel. As a Christian woman, she was beloved by God and His followers. We extend our deepest and heartfelt sorrow to the affectionate husband and the sorrowing and afflicted daughters."

George Kinch Dead.

George Kinch, who has for a number of years been engineer for Jas. Wallace, baker and confectioner, died at his residence on Bridge St. this morning, after an illness of eight months. Deceased was a son of Jno. Kinch, sr., who was for many years engineer for the INTELLIGENCER Co'y, and who, with two brothers and a sister, survive him. Deceased, who was 49 years of age, was married to a Miss Glenn, who, with two sons, aged 16 and 10 years, survive him. He was a member of the Church of England and a quiet, unassuming man. BELLEVILLE 4 KINGSTON 2.

That's the Score of the Game Between Those Hockey Teams Last Evening.

The fastest game of hockey witnessed here this season was that played between the Belleville and the Kingston or Limestone teams last evening. On this latter point there seems to be some mistake, the defeated team claiming they were not the Limestones, but the Kingston team. Notwithstanding their statement to the contrary, the correspondence for the game was with the Limestone team and there were at least three Limestone men on last night's team. Send up the Limestones, then, and let us see what they look like.

There was the largest number of spectators present that has witnessed any match here this season when the game was called at 8:30 and very few of them expected to see our boys win, owing to the highly flattering reports that had come here of the Kingston team. The teams took their positions in the following order:

BELLEVILLE.	POSITION.	KINGSTON.
Jamieson	Goal	A. Savage
Hulme	Point	Rigney
Phippen	Cover Point	Metcalfe
Wolever Powell Weller Kelso	Forwards	Sutherland Thompson Reyner Murphy
Nash	Goal Umpire	J. Wilmot

F. M. Doyle—Feferee

The game started with both teams doing fast work and it at once became apparent to the home team that they would have to keep their eyes on young Reyner, who was doing some nice individual work. After sixteen minutes play Thompson scored for the visitors. Then Weller, Kelso and Wolever did some fine combination work and Weller scored for the home team in seven minutes. Kelso did the trick for our team again in three minutes, and one minute after Sutherland tied the score. No more goals were scored up to half time.

After ten minutes rest they began play again and it only took Kelso one minute to score. There was a hard fight for the next goal and in a scrimmage Weller got a bad cut over his right eye, which caused six minutes delay. He showed his pluck and ability, however, by scoring the next goal in twenty-four minutes. The Kingston team with despair on their countenances made some terrible onslaughts on the home defence, but Hulme, Powell (who had replaced Phippen, who went forward) and Jamieson repulsed them as often as they charged and they were unable to score up to the call of time. Score 4 to 2.

Following are the goals, by whom scored and the time:

TEAM.	SCORED BY.	TIME.
Kingston	Thompson	16 m.
Belleville	Weller	7 m.
Belleville	Kelso	3 m.
Kingston	Sutherland	1 m.
Belleville	Kelso	1 m.
Belleville	Weller	24 m.

NOTES.

Wolever did some effective work on his wing, as he had a hard man to check, but was unfortunate in not being able to score himself, although he fed the other forwards in centre with some nice shots.

Powell plays a much better game at cover than on the forward line, and the team was stronger with Phippen on the forwards.

Hulme and Jamieson did some clever work in their positions, they being called upon to stop some hot ones.

Rigney played a beautiful game for the visitors, as did also Reyner, Thompson and Sutherland, but the Weller-Kelso combination, as usual, was too much for them.

The Kingston team are very gentlemanly and no disputes of any consequence took place.

Frank Doyle's decisions as referee were highly satisfactory to both teams.

It was by long odds the best game of the season.

The visitors stopped at Hotel Quinte while in the city.

The Kingston team said after the game that the Belleville boys know how to play hockey and they would like to see them play Peterborough.

STOLE EXAMINATION PAPERS.

A Grand Trunk Brakeman Known Here Under Arrest for the Act.

It is alleged that some of the students of Trinity College, Toronto, have purchased the papers for the forthcoming examinations in order to work up the subjects beforhand and thus ensure success.

This week a student was approached and was told that he could buy the examination papers. His sense of honor and justice prompted him to go to the University authorities, to whom he told the story. Inquiry followed and it was ascertained that a student had actually purchased the fellowship and final examination papers. He was taken before the board and confessed all. He stated that he bought them for $75 cash and was to pay another $200. William Terry, a G. T.R. brakeman, was the man who had sold them to him. The detective department was communicated with and Detective Black put on the trail of Terry, who runs east on the G.T.R. passenger service between Toronto and Belleville. Black arrested Terry yesterday and conveyed him to headquarters where a charge of stealing examination papers was registered against him.

When arraigned in the dock he declined, through his counsel, H. H. Macrae, to either plead or elect and was remanded until Monday. The theory is that Terry either stole the papers from the printing office where they were printed or was in league with one of the printers.—Toronto News.

Nothing can be just as good as perfection. Thus it is that all other baking powders are inferior to Dr. Price's.

Well Done for Albert.

Albert College sent five students to try the March medical matriculation examination and following is their record:

Examined and approved—J. H. Curts and W. H. T. Peake. To be examined again in Latin.—F. H. Gowman and R. J. Quay. To be examined again in Latin, English and Euclid.—J. E. Caldwell. This is a good record for that institution.

Buying Horses.

Mr. Silver, of the firm of Silver & Smith, Toronto, who own Grand's Repository, was in the city to-day buying horses for their spring show. The show will be held in the drill shed in that city and will be after the style of the New York horse show held at Madison Square Garden annually. He purchased some good animals to-day.

Special Music.

There will be a special musical service at St. Michael's church to-morrow evening in which Mrs. James Grant, soprano; Mrs. E. Dudley Gough, alto; Mr. J. J. Petty, bass, and Mr. J. N. Doyle, baritone, will assist the choir. Miss Mabel Wilson will also assist. A silver collection will be taken up.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Special Meeting Held—The Governor-General's Medal and a New High School Building Brought Forward.

A special meeting of the Board of Education was held last night.

Present — S. A. Moore, Chairman; Messrs. T. Wills, W. Johnson, W. Tennent, S. S. Moore, W. P. McMahon, W. Kemp, H. Walker, W. C. Reid, J. H. Mills, W. W. Chown, R. Bogle, J. Richards and A. T. Petrie.

The minutes of the last meeting were readand confirmed.

A report was read from the Inspector, Mr. Seath, on his visit to the High School. He says that a number of important improvements had been made since his last visit. Probably the ventilation is now as good as it can be made with the present building. The equipments are good. The library is valued at $261.35; apparatus, $443.19; maps, globes, etc., $129.75. The attendance is large enough for an additional teacher, and if it continues the Board will be required to appoint one. In one form there are about twice the number of pupils there should be. Departments 1 and 2 would be graded if some defects were absent. Mr. Taylor, the last appointed teacher, has not had much experience, but has made an excellent beginning. I have no doubt that he will prove successful. In the various forms the work is of a satisfactory character.

So far as the staff and the pupils are concerned the school is in excellent condition. Mr. Milburn, who long ago established his reputation as an able teacher, has proved himself to be an efficient manager and organizer. The staff as a whole is a good one and the pupils are orderly and diligent.

As to the building, the Board has now probably made the best of poor accomodations. The desirability of erecting a new and suitable High School should become a live question in Belleville. Other places in as poor a financial condition have Collegiate Institutes with all the modern improvements.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Communications were read from Geo. Halloway and Geo. Clapper asking to be appointed scavenger in place of the late A. Halloway.

From H. G. Wells asking to be appointed teacher when a vacancy occurs.

From Wm. Williamson, Sec-Treas. of the Separate School Board, stating that Mr. W. P. McMahon had been appointed upon the Board as a representative from the Separate School Board.

From Messrs. A. McFee & Co. in reference to testing the eyes of the pupils in the High School.

The Finance Committee reported recommending the payment of a number of accounts.

Mr. W. P. McMahon, the representative from the Separate School Board, was warmly received by the members.

Mr. Wills moved that Mr. McMahon's name be placed on all the committees on which Mr. J. Doyle was formerly placed. —Carried.

On motion the Board went into Committee of the Whole on reports. Mr. R. Bogle in the chair.

The report of the Finance Committee was adopted without discussion. The Committee rose and reported, Report received and adopted.

Mr. E. F. Milburn, Principal of the High School, presented his monthly report which showed the school to be in a satisfactory state.

MOTIONS.

Mr. Wm. Johnson moved, seconded by Mr. J. H. Mills, that the medal promised by His Excellency the Governor-General to the Board on his visit to the city, be awarded to that pupil who, being the youngest in years and shortest time in the fourth book, received the highest number of marks at the last entrance examination to the High School. That the Inspector be requested to enquire who the pupil is, and on his informing the Sec.-Treas., that he communicate with His Excellency.

Mr. Wills moved in amendment that a trustee from each of the schools be a committee to decide the matter.

A short discussion ensued, but it was finally decided to withdraw the above resolution and leave it to the committee which had previously been appointed, consisting of the Chairman of the Board, Chairman of School Management, Chairman of Central and High Schools, Chairman of Finance, Rev. Canon Burke and Rev. M. W. Maclean.

The communication of A. McFee & Co., in reference to the testing of the eyes of the pupils, caused some discussion.

Mr. Wills said that Mr. Muir, a practical optician, had examined the eyes of the pupils of the Public Schools and found but few who were near-sighted.

Mr. Wm. Johnson thought in this matter the Board was going outside of its duties. Some of the parents were not in accord with the tests made.

Mr. Wills said it was done in other schools.

The matter was not discussed further, but Mr. McFee will be allowed to test the eyes of the pupils of the High School.

Mr. Geo. Halloway was appointed scavenger at a salary of $100 per annum.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Mr. Wm. Johnson gave notice of a motion that at the next meeting of the Board it will be moved that it be recommended to the Committee of Sites, Building and Repairs, to report to the Board not later than the end of April on the advisability of erecting a High School building.

The notice of motion of Dr. Tracy in reference to the building a new school at the station was allowed to stand in the absence of the Doctor.

The Board then adjourned.

Like Tennyson's "brook" the increase of sales of Dr. Price's Baking Powder promises to "go on forever."

R. T. of T. Social.

The Royal Templars held another of their socials last evening in their hall, and it was a great success. The hall was comfortably filled with an appreciative audience. Mr. F. E. O'Flynn occupied the chair. The Harris brothers, with organ, violin and cornet elicited most enthusiastic applause, Miss Morin gave an excellent recitation, Miss Fretz delighted everybody with her whistling, accompanying herself on the harp, which harmonized well with the sweet birdlike notes which she produces in her whistling. Mrs. Dulmage, Select Councillor, gave an address. Little Miss Violet Howe gave a recitation in a charming manner, Miss Lena Lazier recited with fine effect a difficult selection entitled "Herod," while Mr. W. T. Watt, in his usual impressive manner, held the audience spellbound by his rendition of "Jugurtha in Prison," Mrs. J. F. Dingman and Mr. J. T. Burns gave a duet and responded to an encore. A chorus by members of the Order brought the programme to a close, after which an abundance of cake and coffee were served.

Several fox hunters from the city were out in Sidney one day this week with their dogs and had a fox wounded. They were waiting for the dogs to bring him around a hill, when a farmer walked out of his house and shot Reynard and took him inside. The hunters were quite wrath to have their sport thus cut short and vowed vengeance on the next farmer who shoots a fox in front of their dogs.

The Napanee Express of this week upholds the defeat of their hockey team by saying that they scored two goals which the referee would not allow, and also that they did not play the game they knew how to play. The first statement is false and was evidently inspired by a sore head. As to whether the team played their best game or not we are not prepared to state, but one thing is certain the Quinte's had the easiest thing they have struck this winter.

All the members of the Royal Yacht Squadron agree that the Ailsa is a wonderful boat, and that she is superior in all points to the Britannia. The Field, commenting upon the performances of Mr. Walker's new cutter, Ailsa, says that the new Valkyrie has a big task before her. Such a craft as the Ailsa would have won the America's cup in 1893, and if the Valkyrie proves superior to her, Valkyrie ought to stand an exceedingly rosy chance of defeating the cup defender.

The Bancroft Times says: "Deerhunters can sometimes be mean, and a peculiar instance of it came under our notice lately. A hunter a few miles west of our town, had the good fortune to succeed in killing a deer, but while gone for assistance to take it home, a rival, who had been watching, lugged it off; and the fun of it is, that neither of them dare squeal on the other, as it was out of season and both are liable to a fine." It it to be hoped that both of the offenders will be punished as they deserve —the one for killing the deer out of season; the other, under the game law, for being in possession of game out of season and, under the criminal law, for stealing the deer from the people, to whom it had been forfeited by its slaughter during close season.

Albert College News.

The "Mock Parliament" last evening was one of the most interesting and best attended sessions we have had for some time.

The first part of the programme consisted of music and recitations, all of which were very good. Then came the debate, Messrs. H. B. Reddick, J. F. Chapman and Prof. Osborne defended the question and Messrs. S. L. Toll, F. A. Carman and R. A. Facey opposed it.

The question,—"That Imperial Federation should be considered by Great Britain and her Colonies" was well discussed on both sides and on the yeas and nays being called for, it was found that the bill was sustained by a majority of four.

We were glad to see a goodly number present from the city and trust that next Friday evening the chapel may be filled to its utmost capacity. There will be only two or three more meetings, so don't miss the opportunity of attending them.

A meeting of the executive of the College was held this week at which important business was considered.

Another student expected at the College this week. Still they come.

A number of our students were in Toronto last week writing on an exam. We have not received the report of that exam. yet.

Mr. F. C. Stephenson, a former student of Albert, who is now attending Trinity Medical College, Toronto, spent Thursday evening with us. F. C. is quite popular among the old students and we were pleased indeed to have him with us. He is on his way to Montreal in connection with Missionary interests.

The Y. M. C. A. Meetings.

A crowded hall greeted Rev. W. W. Weeks as he addressed the meeting last night, on the subject of "What then shall I do with Jesus?" After a short song service, when were sung "Oh! what will you do with Jesus?"; "Man of Sorrows"; "There shall be Showers of Blessing," the reverend gentleman requested that brief prayers be offered for the Spirit's presence. Then followed one of those addresses which are peculiar to Mr. Weeks. He has to be heard to appreciate his words. Some lives are like the meteor flashing across the darkness and disappearing only to make the darkness more intense. Such a life was Pilate's, just when we expect to see a manly, ennobling example of kingly grace, he miserably fails and finally sinks into a suicide's grave. Many failures are made to-day, but none so signal as he who coming face to face with this question of accepting Christ, reject him and are externally lost. He spoke at length of the issues involved in this question meaning either the joy and security of one who accepts, or the misery and defeat of those who reject.

The Association are pleased to announce that Mr. Weeks will continue his services next week, commencing Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock, and every afternoon and evening following.

The meeting this evening at eight and to-morrow afternoon at four will be for young men only. All young men are invited.

Always in the Family.

Mr. L. B. Russell, of Albury, in renewing his subscription for the year in advance of the time it expired, says: "My father took the first INTELLIGENCER issued and it has been in the family ever since." Mr. Russell said the house would not be a complete house without the INTELLIGENCER.

HEAD AND SHOULDERS above every other blood-purifier, stands Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. See the evidence of it. It's sold in every case, on trial. If it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

In restoring your strength, when you're "run-down" and "used-up;" in cleansing your blood from every impurity, whether it's a simple eruption or the worst scrofula; and in building up wholesome flesh, when you're thin and weak—there's nothing to equal the "Discovery." In every disease caused by a torpid liver or impure blood, it's the only guaranteed remedy.

Mrs. ELIZABETH J. HUSHAW, of Sidney, Ohio, writes: "My little boy was so afflicted with liver trouble and other diseases that our family physician said he could not live. In fact, they all thought so. I gave him Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pellets and they saved his life. We have used the 'Discovery' for throat and bronchial trouble, and found such perfect relief that we can recommend it very highly."

(From the Canadian Mute.)

There is now a clean health bill on the boys' side of this Institution. Not one of the 144 boys now in attendance is on the sick list. This is most gratifying.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Watson, who are well known in Belleville and now connected with the Washington State school for the deaf and feeble-minded, are being freely praised for the good work they are doing for the afflicted ones under their care.

Miss James, after being treated in the Belleville Hospital for three weeks, has so far recovered as to be able to return to the Institution again. She is still very weak, and too much indisposed to take charge of her class, which has been in Mr. Nurse's care during her absence, but all hope for her a better established state of health shortly.

On the 12th inst., there was a grand celebration in the city in honor of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Premier of Canada. His grandson, Charles Holton, went to town to see him. He said he was very glad to meet his grandfather again. We heard that Sir Bowell, Sir Caron and others intended to visit the Institution, but they did not. We would like to see him.

Tuesday, the 12th inst., was Mr. Coleman's birthday and he was the recipient of many hearty congratulations and kind wishes. Mr. Coleman has been connected with this Institution for twenty-five years, and it has been a quarter of a century of earnest, faithful, successful work, as can be testified to by hundreds of pupils who have graduated from his class and gone forth to take their places as useful, intelligent and progressive citizens. Despite his long term of service he is apparently as young as ever he was and of him it may well be said that "age cannot wither nor custom stale" his genial disposition and unfailing good humor.

BETWEEN SCYLLA AND CHARYBDIS

BY MRS E. LYNN LINTON

Pretty girls with good fortunes and susceptible temperaments need careful guardianship in smart hotels where society is mixed and credentials are not always forthcoming. Harpies of both sexes abound; and more than one good bag has been made for the benefit of the fowler and the ruin of the victim—always under cover of fine manners and high-sounding names. This being so, it was a little doubtful if Mrs. Brand was the right kind of guardian for Ida Maynard. A ladylike woman, who had less self-respect than complaisance, and whose capacity for belief was as large as her power of discrimination was small, had a burden of responsibility rather heavier than she could bear in the charge of a pretty young person of romantic tendencies and a handsome income. And more than one of Ida's old family friends lamented the chain of circumstances which had driven her into Mrs. Brand's nerveless hands as the sole guardianship she had. So far, however, no harm had come to the young heiress with a chaperon who never thwarted her, but also who never knew when the ice was thin or when there were rocks ahead.

The hotel was crowded, and the company was of the gayest. Butterflies sporting with one another among the flowers best expressed their general condition, and, because the place was so overflowing and the salle-a-manger had not space for universal segregation, the small tables usually given up to two or three were perforce tenanted by five or six. Whence resulted intimacies which were sometimes dangerous even when most delightful.

The hotel was crowded, and there was not space for segregration in the salle-a-manger. Owing then to this congestion the maitre d'hotel, with bows and apologies, begged to be allowed to place three charming people at the table of the young heiress and her chaperon. They were all that he had of most comme il faut on his list; and he was sure that in asking this accommodation he was doing nothing that would be displeasing to madame or mademoiselle.

That evening, then, at dinner, three strangers were at Ida's table, and the mental stock-taking began.

Imprimis, a tall, handsome Englishman about thirty-two or three, with fine features, a good carriage, good manners if somewhat overbearing, and the unmistakable look of one who has seen service of some sort. Secondly, a soft-voiced young Italian, with the caressing eyes and soft seductive ways of his country; accompanied by, thirdly, his mother, a typical southerner, graceful, indolent, astute and fascinating. The Englishman was Gerald Frobisher; the Italian was Il Barone di Siena; his mother was la Principessa di Certosaria. They were all noticeable because of manner, dress and general appointments; and soon this special table became the cynosure of the room, as rumor magnified the fortune of the young heiress and the social standing of her company.

THREE STRANGERS WERE AT IDA'S TABLE.

In the sweetest ointments lurks at times that intrusive fly. Through the most harmonious combination of circumstances strikes the jarring note of unpleasant friction. And this little coterie, formed by chance, was no exception to the rule. The jarring note came from the Englishman. From the first he seemed to have translated his condition as a compatriot into the privileges of a friend and the duties of a guardian. He drew an invisible line of possession round Ida and Mrs. Brand and before they well knew that he had cast his shoe over them he was the master of the situation. He made no over-demonstration of authority, such as the world could see and comment on. He simply gave them to understand that they must not do such and such things, and that it would be better for them—indeed it was imperative—that they should follow his advice.

As his strong will coerced Mrs. Brand's weaker mind he had things on the whole pretty much his own way, which was not always Ida's. Yet somehow, willing or unwilling, she had to go as Gerald Frobisher ordained, and bit by bit she felt her liberty slipping from her without ever coming to the moment when she could make a stand and say: "I will not."

On the other hand, the young baron and his mother, the princess, were the very heart and soul of complaisance. They seemed to live simply for Ida's pleasure. They had not a wish which was not la signorina's—not a thought extra to her service. Whatever they might propose had but one object—the pleasure or convenience of la signorina, for whom, had they the power, the very elements would be ruled to render service and tribute. Always suave and aimable, they made a decided contrast with Gerald Frobisher, who was generally the very reverse of amiable, with a certain arbitrariness of manner—a certain subacidity of accent, that was less reassuring than threatening—less enticing than compelling. 'The bear," the princess used to call him in her pretty Italian way—her very distaste more caressing than Gerald's praise; and—"Ah! he is your typical Englishman who does not understand love and would beat his wife or sell her for so much and so much"—as the young baron would say, with that little shudder which expresses so much, generally adding: "Per Bacco! that is not the way we Italians treat our women! We Italians know how to treat women as they should be treated—with love and gentleness and courtesy and indulgence, but, most of all, with love."

And when he said this his velvet-brown eyes would look into Ida's with something behind and within which made that erstwhile frank and half-unconscious young woman drop hers to the floor, overpowered by she knew not what. All that she did know was—it was something pleasant, yet something that made her feel part afraid and part ashamed, and especially desirous that Gerald Frobisher should not see.

The day was glorious. A day when youthful spirits were not to be confined within the four walls of a house, nor yet between the hedges of a hotel garden. It was a day for amusements, expeditions, adventures, what not. One of the kind which holds the promise of some undeclared joy like the secret perfume lying within the closed bud of the lily; one of those when Prince Charming is on his way, and the princess is setting forth in her golden chariot to meet him—when the young feel and the old remember, and the joy of living has no flaw from either regret or despair.

He spoke with the manner of command rather than suggestion—ordaining for the others according to his own ideas of fitness, without reference to their wishes.

"Just!" said Mrs. Brand, complaisant as usual.

"It would be rather jolly," said Ida, not caring to agree too enthusiastically, but secretly charmed with the idea. "What do you say, princess?" she added, turning to the Italian as if it were a forgone conclusion that those two, who were her table companions, should also be their comrades in the day's pleasures.

"Five is an impossible number," he said, as if to himself, but everyone heard, though no one took up the challenge.

"It will be lovely," said the princess, smiling in her sweet way. Her eyes and her smile took in the whole company. "Giulio had already suggested this little journey to me. I am glad that Mr. Frobisher has fallen in with the idea so amiably."

"Pardon me, I have fallen in with no idea from the baron or anyone else," said Gerald, ill-temperedly. "I was not aware that the baron had any ideas—on the subject," he added, as a rider to the original proposition, and when he he thought the sarcasm had had time to strike.

The young man laughed and showed his small, white, pointed teeth, like a row of little shark's teeth gleaming beneath his silken mustache.

"Ah! my friend!" he said, gayly. "A life spent in shooting rhinoceroses and bears is not the best school for the knowledge of mankind. We who live in cities have the advantage over you men of sport and the chase. We have humanity as our books. You study only the habits of bears and buffaloes."

"We learn a little about men, too," said Gerald, slowly. "We have to deal with slaves and thieves, cowards and adventurers of all kinds. We learn their ways pretty accurately, I assure you."

"No doubt," said the baron, retreating in good order, but adding, as his last shot: "This, however, proves my point. These slaves and cowards, etc., do not make up the general society of ordinary European drawing-rooms. Hence you must allow us stay-at-home citizens to have some advantages—and among them you must grant us the knowledge of our own world of gentlehood and the best traditions of good breeding and social diplomacy."

"What time shall we start?" said Ida, to create a diversion.

These dangerous fencings and bitter double-meanings were always going on between the two men—a duel as yet with the foils only; (but the young heiress was beginning to fear a more serious collision, as the animosity between them was daily growing more apparent and more extreme). How long it would continue restrained within the due boundaries of courtesy remained to be seen. As things were it continually looked as if it would break loose like a flood and carry devastation and destruction into the little settlement they had formed among themselves.

Gerald looked at his watch.

"Be ready in half an hour," he said, shortly.

"That will be a little too quick for me, Mr. Frobisher," said the princess, again smiling as if the very soul of sweetness were lodged in her handsome body. If they could have read her heart and thoughts! "I am not so energetic as you English I want a margin for deliberation."

"If your margin throws us too late we cannot go at all," said Gerald, unpleasantly.

"We must not inconvenience my mother," said the baron, with a fine air of filial duty and conventional courtesy.

"Of course not," said Ida.

Whereupon the young Italian leaned over to the pretty girl, and said: "Thank you, signorina!" with effusion, holding out his hand as one under the influence of strong emotion. Looking into the flushing face of the girl with a world of tender meaning in his eyes, he said, speaking to his mother, but still looking at Ida: "The signorina always does and says exactly the right thing at the right moment and in the right way. Is it not so, my mother?"

"Assuredly! She is a saint!" said the princess.

Gerald rose abruptly from the table.

"Very well," he said, holding his head straight and high, "I will give you a quarter's grace, princess. I will order the carriage for the half hour, when I shall expect you all to be ready."

"If our proceedings inconvenience you, my friend, I will take command of the party," said the Italian, with a manner suggestive of the heathen Chinee, it was so bland and so childlike.

Gerald disdained to reply, save by a look that was decidedly contemptuous—as contemptuous and as essentially insulting as a blow would have been. Then he strode out of the room, and worked off a little of his spleen on the unoffending hall-porter, who chanced to cross his path.

Mother and son exchanged looks.

"Are all English gentlemen like that?" queried the princess. "And yet—correcting herself—"how foolish to ask such a question, when I know so much better! Who, indeed, knows so well as I the charm of the English character? Was not my own dear mother an Englishwoman?"

"They are adorable," said the baron, with fervor. "Who that knows them would not love them?—for the sake of one!" he added, in a low voice, those velvety eyes looking into Ida's with the love and softness, the passion and the prayer he knew so well how to throw into them—"for the sake of one, loving all!"

"Had we not better go and get ready?" said Mrs. Brand, with the fear of Gerald Frobisher before her eyes.

"Yes, let us go," said Ida, in a half-relieved, half-embarrassed kind of way.

And again mother and son exchanged glances, and the smile that just lifted the corner of each well-shaped but over-fleshy mouth meant "Good so far." "Winged if not yet bagged" would have been an Englishman's formula.

The morning had passed into the early afternoon without untoward accident of any kind—unless Gerald Frobisher's temper might be called untoward. Never remarkable for amiability, to-day it was of the vilest kind to be found. His rough life and adventurous experiences seemed to have hardened him to so much granite—granite abraded at all four corners and full of jagged edges and wounding spikes. It served, however, to bring out into greater relief the sweet courtesies and graceful plasticities of the baron, whose whole energies seemed devoted to the one desire to please and entertain the signorina, to do as she desired—to anticipate her unspoken wishes and make her feel that she was the main object of his thoughts and the—as yet undeclared—mistress of his heart and life. His gentleness, his unfailing good humor, the skill with which he parried Gerald's rougher onslaughts—but in the parrying inflaming the Englishman's anger still more, thus putting him for ever more and more in the wrong—his caressing eyes and musical voice, his subtle tenderness, all stole over Ida as some irresistible charm, so ao powerful spell spoken by a potent magician. For one of the few times in her young life she contemplated her wealth with a glow of pride and delight, and rejoiced that she was free, rich and the mistress of her own destiny.

All this Gerald saw and understood. And the feelings which this knowledge roused in him were akin to those with which he had defied a savage chief at the head of his tribe, stalked a rogue elephant, circumvented a man-eating tiger, fought single-handed with a cobra, or looked for whipsnakes in the grass that he might crush them before they had power to sting. In the baron he recognized his enemy, whom yet he despised; and forthwith set himself to destroy him with the same feelings if not by the same methods as those with which he had destroyed those others in the jungles and the wilds.

The object of the expedition had been accomplished. They had seen the Schloss and heard the legends; peered into the dungeons and admired the view from the battlements; eaten their luncheon spread on the trestled table of the courtyard; talked platitude with an air of profundity; skirted by intense feelings with an air of indifference; and done all that people in these circumstances are wont to do. And now it was time to return. Ida always between the two men who were battling together for her possession with as much fierceness, and to the same purpose, as if they had been fighting with clash of steel, not mere fire of words. Fortune hunters both of them; they were the Scylla and Charybdis of the girl's perilous voyage. Into whose hands soever she might fall she would fall to her enduring sorrow.

CHAPTER II.

They were not adventurers of the vulgar type—that is, adventurers in the sense of holding a different social position from that which they assumed. They were gentlemen of good family, but fortune hunters to whom the income was of more account than the woman, and who made pretense of a love they did not feel. For Gerald's somewhat brutal attitude of command was love-making in his way—a way analogous to that of the savage who first knocks his intended wife senseless and then carries her off to his own hut in the bush—his conquest, lover, wife and victim all in one.

She had her choice then between the two. In Gerald she would find a spirit of domination that would crush her to the earth—a materialistic, unpoetic kind of nature that would leave her soul as arid as the parched sands of the Libyan desert—a tyrant, a master, a conqueror. In Giulio di Siena she would have infidelity, intrigue, jealousy, and what to an Englishwoman, accustomed to much open-air exercise and absolute freedom of movement would be practically incarceration. In the princess she would have a mother-in-law who would rule her with a rod of iron, and never take her to her heart as a daughter—who would persecute her to become a Catholic; who would ridicule her English ways and decry her nationality who would make up for her husband's neglect by a system of espionage which would not leave her one shred of spontaneous freedom, and who in all of whose persecutions here, and glacial barriers there, would be joined by her married daughter, La Contessa Maria del Sole (who would repeat and exaggerate all that her mother might say and do). Of the two the balance of unhappiness would be on the side of the Italian, but neither man would treat her well, and in a marriage with each alike would be her misery.

HE REVENGED HIMSELF BY TURNING ROUND

The two aspirants had nearly come to that duel, with the buttons off, which seemed as if it must eventually take place, over the fifth seat in the carriage, which meant who should sit outside with the coachman. The friction had been so great, and the courtesy disguise so thin, that the princess had half-laughingly proposed drawing lots for the chance. But, perhaps because she had proposed it, perhaps because he disdained to put himself in any sense on an equality with the despised Italian, Gerald had rejected this arrangement. With as much haughtiness as sullenness he had flung up the contest by mounting the box, where he revenged himself by turning round and engrossing, so far as he could, Ida's whole attention by his persistent talk. He spoke to no one else. If the princess or the baron cut into the conversation, he ignored each as if neither party existed; save when obliged to answer a question directly addressed to him, and then he answered in a monosyllable, and his voice was more like a bear's growl than even before. If it were the baron who spoke to him, on any subject independent of the matter in hand, he contented himself with a reply that effectually put a stop to all such advances, for this time, at least. He was more unpleasant than could have been believed, as the princess said in her pretty broken English, and, so far as he could, he spoiled the day's pleasure for all concerned, anxious as he was to punish all and sundry for the infliction of that undesired association. For this, too, as for some other things, the baron owed him, more than one; and in his own mind resolved to pay his debt with interest. The only difficulty was: How could he pay that debt? The Englishman was stronger than he, and braver. And stabbing him in the back, in the dark, was not apparently very feasible.

The way from the Schloss led down to the valley by a road cut in the side of the mountain. A mass of rock and unscalable escarpments rose sheer from the path above—a precipice with eternity at the bottom fell sharply down below. The road was full of these acute angles and hazardous curves so well known to continental travelers—angles and curves which were veritable deathtraps and where the marvel was that anyone should escape with his life. Two half-broken loosely-harnessed horses, mainly guided by the voice of a voluble and vociferous coachman, who held his reins as slack as a bunch of ribbons in a cotillon, were the locomotive agents of the carriage, in a transit where the chances of disaster were as innumerable as there were flowers on the broad ledges of inaccessible rocks. Yet tragic occurrences were as rare as the passing of a herd of chamois or a flight between an eagle and a vulture in the sky. Rains had washed away some of the edges, both of the cliffs above whereby the road was strewn with stones that rolled as the horses stepped on them, and of the outer line against the sharp decline below. Still, they had gone up in safety in the morning and they supposed they should come down in safety in the afternoon. The horses, if loosely handled and not broken according to our ideas, were familiar with the road, and the coachman, for all his outlandish methods of driving, knew his work.

HE STOPPED HIM IN THE PLUNGE.

Something startled them. The horses used to the road as they were, sure footed and as a rule trustworthy in their own wild way, suddenly broke loose and took matters into their own keeping. Disdaining bit and bridle they tore down the steep incline, the shouts of the terrified driver maddening them still more, and the hand of Gerald Frobisher on the rein of no avail. They had taken the bit between their teeth, and their teeth were strong. The danger was imminent. They were close to the worst bit of the road, where the most careful driver, doing all he knew, could never be quite sure of safe steering. Now as things were destruction seemed inevitable.

The princess shrieked and flung her arms abroad, calling on the saints and adding to the horror of the moment by her ungovernable terror. The young baron was in a state of collapse. Almost fainting, speechless, motionless, his eyes closed, his form drooping, he lay as if half dead. Ida sat perfectly still, her eyes wide open as if she were watching how things would go; and Mrs. Brand, looking into vacancy, moved her lips in silent prayer. The carriage swayed from side to side and one wheel hung over the abyss, when Gerald leaped from the box and at the risk of his life somehow managed to secure the bridle of the off horse, and by sheer force of strength stopped him in the plunge and flung him back on his haunches. His grasp missed would have sent them all to the bottom of the abyss together. As it was they were safe, through his gallant action gallantly performed; and however unpleasant his temper might have been he had undoubtedly saved them all from destruction.

But the contempt with which he grasped the baron by the shoulder and shook him as a terrier shakes a rat!—the driver meanwhile having got to the head of his horses, with whom he was reasoning and arguing, pointing out the error of their ways and the folly as well as wickedness of which they had been guilty; the superb tone of disdainful superiority with which he said: "Come, baron, pull yourself together like a man! Your precious life is in no danger—no thanks to you for yourself or the others. You were not too frightened, I can see," he added, turning to Ida and speaking with more genuine admiration than he has ever yet shown to her. "You are English and know how to face danger with courage!"

"It is well to be without nerves," sobbed the princess. "We southerners have susceptibilities which you cold northerners want."

"They are inconvenient things at times," said Gerald, significantly.

By now the baron had recovered and could take part in things as they were.

"I can face a bullet," he said, quite as significantly. "Where my mother and la signorina are concerned I confess I lose my head. Had I been alone you would have seen a different man."

"Possibly," said Gerald with a sneer. "Meanwhile the man we have seen has not contributed much to the safety of the ladies for whom he professes so much regard. We can judge of the unseen only by the seen."

"We will speak of this again," said the baron, lightly touching his own breast.

"At your pleasure," said Gerald, measuring him from head to foot with eyes that spoke more than lips could have done. It was as if they had said: "Reluctant to meet you? I, the crack shot of the African wilds and the Indian jungles, afraid to face a nerveless coward like you?"

All that evening the Englishman waited for the challenge which never came. When dinner was over he strolled about the hotel gardens and made love to Ida in his domineering, trenchent way. But the baron and his mother did not appear. They had been at the table d'hote dinner where Gerald had almost insulted the young man—where Ida had been now cool and now sorry as her mind dwelt now on her young lover's cowardice and now on his charms. But after dinner they had vanished into space, and no message came to any of the group. Ida was restless and of uncertain mood. She sometimes laughed almost hysterically and sometimes was near to tears. The brutal strain in Gerald's character had never rasped her as it rasped her to-night, and in her heart she hated him as if he had been a murderer. When she saw that, for sure the Italians would not come back this evening, she too slipped away with an aching heart and a temper nearly as bad as Gerald's.

"The one a brute and the other a coward," she said to herself, "and the coward the best of the two!"

The next morning mother and son had gone, and a sweetly-worded note to Ida from the princess told the reason of this sudden flight. They went, it said, because they saw how things were between her, la signorina and Mr. Frobisher. He was her lover and she loved him. The baron's heart was broken; he loved the signorina to distraction; but he was too delicate to interfere in a thing already arranged—and his only duty was flight. Might all the saints bless the sweet young English girl whom they would never forget!

When he heard of this sudden flight Gerald laughed aloud.

"That cur! that coward!" he said, contemptuously. "He has shown his true colors at last, and we are well rid of him. Now, Ida, we can be happy, and you will be my wife before the year is out."

On which strength came to the girl through her very terror.

"Your wife?" she said, her large eyes wide open and full of horror. "I would rather die first! If I cannot marry the baron I will marry no one else, and certainly not you who treated him so ill!"

So there it was. The fortune-hunters were balked of their bag, and the young heiress escaped the Scylla of brutality and the Charybdis of deception; she went home a sadder if not a wiser woman, free to bestow herself and her fortune on whom she would—as, when the right man came along she would certainly do.

DISEASE NEGLECTED AT THIS SEASON BRINGS FATAL RESULTS.

In Spring the Wise and Prudent Use Paine's Celery Compound.

A Montreal Lady Speaks About Paine's Celery Compound—Her Doctor Failed to Cure Her—Her Sufferings from Indigestion, Headache and Nervousness, banished by the Great Medicine—She Says: "I am Completely Cured."

Miss Bridges, 22 Dorchester Street, Montreal, actuated by a sincere desire to do good to suffering humanity, gives public testimony regarding Paine's Celery Compound, which raised her from a condition of suffering, alarming and dangerous, to complete health and increased bodily vigor and strength.

She tells us of his disappointments with patent medicines and her failures with one of the best city physicians.

In her hour of peril, Miss Bridges' attention was directed to that never-failing spring medicine, Paine's Celery Compound, the great disease-banisher and health-giver. She joyfully and gratefully tells of her success, and gives unstinted praise to a medicine that is blessing thousands every day.

Sufferer, do not, for a moment, delay the work of purifying the blood and strengthening the system. The Spring season with its variable weather, demands that you look after your health.

Miss Bridges writes as follows regarding her cure by Paine's Celery Compound:

"I consider it a pleasure as well as a duty to put on record what Paine's Celery Compound has done for me. I suffered for years from indigestion, headache, pains in the back and side, and from a nervous tired feeling. I used many patent medicines without any good results. I was also attended by one of the best doctors, and used his medicines, but could not get cured.

"I saw Paine's Celery Compound advertised and decided to try a bottle. It gave me such good results that I used six bottles, and I found myself altogether a new person. I have used it both Spring and Autumn since 1890, and I can say with pleasure that all my troubles are banished; my nerves are strong, my sleep is good and appetite splendid.

"I would therefore strongly recommend Paine's Celery Compound to all who suffer as I did; they are sure and certain of good results."

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so PALATABLE that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

MULOCK'S TIRADE

Party is Everything -- The Country of no Account.

THOROUGHLY EXPOSED.

Hon. W. H. Montague Shows up the Tactics of the Member for North York in Connection With the Cattle Embargo Question—Desparate Men Who Will go Any Length to Get Into Power.

The Hon. W. H. Montague at Waterloo thus exposed the tactics of Mr. Mulock in connection with the cattle embargo. He said:

"I wish, sir, for a few moments to allude to some recent utterances of Mr. Mulock as to the conduct of the Government in connection with cattle quarantine. That gentleman has recently, for effect in the campaign, dragged out before a public audience, where no one was present to refute them, his utterances of a year ago in Parliament, utterances that were shown at the time to be most groundless, and to have been prompted by a partisanship that knew no regard for the public weal; utterances that were condemned most severely by those interested in the cattle trade as the act of a political assassin. (Cheers.) Mr. Mulock's charge is that by laxness in regard to the quarantine against the United States the Goverment of Canada was instrumental in having the embargo placed up again against Canadian cattle.

DESPERATE MEN.

I wish to show you, using this charge as an instance, to what lengths men like Mr. Mulock, desperate in their unreasoning struggle for office, will go, and I must ask you therefore to allow me to give you a brief history of the matter. By most vigorous and painstaking efforts the Canadian Conservative Government secured in 1879 the removal of the British embargo against our cattle. (Cheers.) In consequence of this we enjoyed the privilege of sending our fat cattle alive to the British market towns, and our stockers to the British pastures, there to be fitted for market, while the cattle exported from the United States had to be slaughtered almost immediately upon their arrival at British ports. This was of immense advantage to Canadian cattle raisers, indeed an independent authority, the agricultural statistician of the United States, declared it to be worth from five to ten dollars a head. As a consequence our trade grew greatly, with correspondingly great gains to Canadian producers. You must remember, sir, that this concession was only secured after the greatest and most faithful and persistent effort.

THE AGREEMENT.

It was necessary first to demonstrate that our herds were free from pleuro-pneumonia. This was done. And, second, it was necessary to agree to keep up a rigid quarantine against the United States, whose herds were well-known to be affected. This was agreed to, and it has been faithfully carried out. Indeed, so faithfully was it carried out that time and again we have been violently attacked by Mr. Mulock's associates in Parliament because, in thus enforcing the quarantine regulations so severely, we were creating hostility to Canadians among the people of the American Union. (Cheers.) I need not tell you that the concession granted to us by the British Government was never popular among British cattle raisers, and year after year the feeling against it grew more bitter and intense. Do you ask me why? Well, because it interfered with profitable home production. (Cheers.) British farmers were never free traders so far as farm products were concerned.

FREE TRADE NOT A FARMER'S FIGHT.

Mr. Laurier tells you that free trade there was a farmers' fight. He is wrong there in his history, as he usually is. Free trade was carried by the British manufacturers, with the money of British manufacturers, and in spite of the struggle of British farmers. (Cheers.) The embargo, however, was a kind of remnant of protection against free importation of cattle and it was justly popular among the cattle producers of the Mother Land. (Cheers.) Indeed, so popular was it, and is it, that the Mark Lane Express has recently suggested the advisability of discovering some disease in Canadian sheep in order that they, too, may be scheduled. (Laughter.)

BRITISH PROTECTION FEELING.

Well, against this feeling, against this pressure for protection for the British producer, for such it was, the British authorities had constantly to contend, and after some years they yielded. About three years ago the embargo was put up, the reason given being that two bullocks had been taken from Pilot Mound, Manitoba, in the steamships Hurona and Monkseaton affected with pleuro-pneumonia. Once more vigorous action was taken. The herds in the neighborhood were all examined and found absolutely healthy. All the evidence went to show that the disease did not exist there. Even British expert opinion was divided, and to this day part of that opinion is very strongly against the contention of the British Board of Agriculture. Indeed, I have no hesitation in saying that the facts and evidence were our way, but the interests of British cattle raisers, and, consequently, the pressure upon British authorities, were the other way. But the essential point to remember is that the case of these two bullocks was the sole and only reason ever advanced by the British authorities for withdrawing from us the privilege we enjoyed. In all the voluminous correspondence upon the question no other reason was even hinted at. (Cheers.)

THE STUBBORN FIGHT.

The fight of the Canadian Government, assisted by our able High Commissioner, Sir Charles Tupper, has, for the reasons I have given, been a stubborn and up-hill one, but we have faithfully kept it up, and have met the contentions of the British authorities at every point, and I have no hesitation in saying that we have shown beyond a possibility of contradiction our herds to be healthy and free from the dread disease. (Cheers.) Well, sir, we had so far won our case that in the spring of 1894 the Marquis of Ripon, Secretary of State for the Colonies, had reported in favor of allowing our spring importations in without hindrance, and if they were found healthy he was in favor of the embargo being altogether removed. (Cheers.) Then it was that Mr. Mulock's unpatriotic act was committed. Success seemed to have been assured, and Mr. Mulock felt that the Government could secure, as they deserved, the gratitude of the people of the country. (Cheers.) This would injure the Grit chance for office, and even at the expense of the cattle trade Mr. Mulock was bound to prevent that.

SIR RICHARD'S LETTER.

When Sir Richard Cartwright wrote his infamous letter to The London Economist he was willing to injure the Conservative party at the fearful cost of ruining Canadian credit abroad. When Mr. Mulock made his attack upon quarantine he was anxious to injure his opponents at the expense of so important a Canadian industry. (Cheers.) We had met and answered the contention of the British authorities. We had left them without a reason; but Mr. Mulock suggested to the British cattle raiser a new reason to press upon his Government, viz., that of carelessness of quarantine—a reason they had never thought of and never mentioned. What do you think of that act? Was it the act of a man who desired his country's weal? Supposing his charges had been true, though they were false, would it not have been the act of a patriot to have refrained at that supreme moment from making the charge? (Cheers.)

A GRAVE CHARGE.

I charge now that, in making it, Mr. Mulock was serving the meanest party ends at the expense of our farmers and cattle raisers, and that he knew what he was doing, and why he did it. (Cheers.) And, now, to show you how anxious he was to do this dastardly work, I wish to call your attention to two facts. First—the cattle said to be affected with pleuro-pneumonia were shipped from a point, viz., Pilot Mound, Manitoba, more than a thousand miles from Point Edward, the point at which the carelessness with which Mr. Mulock charged the Government, was allowed. (Cheers.)

A DISEASED IMAGINATION.

What possible connection, except in the diseased imagination of such a man as Mr. Mulock, could there be between the one and the other? Next, the bullocks said to be affected with pleuro-pneumonia were shipped in 1892, while the carelessness which was charged occurred, according to Mr. Mulock's own statement, more than eight years previously. (Cheers.) Just eight years and a thousand miles and more apart—(cheers)—and during those eight years the British authorities never mentioned in all their correspondence any carelessness. And yet Mr. Mulock now tells the Canadian electorate that the embargo was put up because our Government was guilty of the carelessness he charged. I leave you to judge of the desperate condition of a party who are driven to such straits in order to find a cry against their opponents; but before I conclude I must read to you, from a source that will at once be accepted by you as a good one, an opinion upon Mr. Mulock's course upon the question.

CONDEMNED BY THE CATTLE DEALERS' JOURNAL.

It is the opinion of The Butchers' and Cattle Dealers' Journal. The article is headed, "Mr. Mulock again on the Rampage," and reads as follows: "Mr. Mulock has again been indulging in his loquacity, and treating the members of the Federal Government to one of his harangues on the question of the Canadian cattle embargo, if indeed it may be called a treat. He occupied the time of the House on Wednesday afternoon for nearly four hours with a bitter tirade against the Minister of Agriculture and the Deputy Minister, interspersing his speech with copious extracts from the regulations respecting the transportation of cattle in Canada. While pretending to try and benefit the Canadian cattle trade, he has done more harm to this industry by his meddlesome interference than if he had been specially retained for the purpose of advocating a continuance of the embargo. It is quite evident that Mr. Mulock has never paid any attention to the study of pleuro-pneumonia in cattle and how it is likely to be communicated from one animal to another. He has, however, studied the spirit of opposition for the pure love of it, and he made the occasion one for indulging in that same to a most unpardonable extent. Nothing could be more calculated to injure the cattle trade of the Dominion, or to play into the hands of its opponents in Great Britain, than the speech of Mr. Mulock. Canadian cattle exporters have suffered recently from American competition and just now, when there is a chance of their realizing good profits owing to the short shipments of American cattle caused by western railroad strikes, it is undoubtedly hard to think that a prominent Canadian M.P. should so ruthlessly rush in and try to stop the progress of this once promising industry." (Cheers.)

The Lyttel Boy.

Sometime there ben a lyttel boy
That wolde not renne and play;
And helpless like that little tyke
Ben allwais in the way.
"Goe, make you merry with the rest,"
His weary moder cried;
But with a frown he catcht her gown
And hong untill her side.

That boy did love his moder well,
Which spake him faire, I ween;
He loved to stand and hold her hand
And ken her with his een;
His cosset bleated in the croft,
His toys unheeded lay—
He wolde not goe, but, tarrying soe,
Ben allwais in the way.

Godde loveth children and doth gird
His throne with soche as these,
And he doth smile in plaisaunce while
They cluster at His knees;
And sometime, when He looked on earth
And watched the bairns at play,
He kenned with joy a lyttel boy
Ben allwais in the way.

And then a moder felt her heart
How that it ben to-torne—
She kissed each day till she ber gray
The shoon he used to worn;
No bairn let hold untill he gown
Nor played upon the floore—
Godde's was the joy; a lyttel boy
Ben in the way no more.

Many animals cease to thrive, simply because they require a food more succulent than the continued diet of grain and hay. A few carrots, a mess of potatoes or turnips, cooked, or even ensilage, occasionally, will make quite a difference in the appetite, and, consequently, do much to promote thrift. Medicine is frequently given when a succulent mess would accomplish all that may be desired.

THE PATRON FLOP.

MR. HAYCOCK AND HIS FOLLOWERS SUPPORT THE FEE SYSTEM.

This is Done to Save Sir Oliver Mowat—What is the Meaning of the Change of Front—The Liberals Are the Patrons Thinly Disguised—How the Trick Has Been Played on the Farmers—An Attempt Will be Made to Repeat It.

Both in the Provincial and Dominion arenas the Patrons of Industry have entered the field of politics, with distinct promises that they propose to act independently of either party, and to bring about reforms which they declare have called their organization into existence. This is the declaration adopted by their leaders at a meeting in Toronto on July 3rd, 1894:

"Resolved that we pledge ourselves to vote and act unitedly on all questions declared by the Patron members to be Patron questions, and we hereby declare our determination to resist all attempts at coalition or affiliation with either of the existing parties."

Here we have a promise of loyalty to the Patron platform and independence of either of the existing parties. For months the country has been waiting to see how the pledge would be carried out. It follows just as surely as day follows night, that if the Patrons make themselves in provincial matters the donkey engine of either party, they will when the proper time comes be used for the same purpose in the large and more important struggle that is approaching.

THE BROKEN PLEDGE.

At the same meeting at which the Declaration of Independence was made the Patron party declared its policy on a question likely to be dealt with by the Ontario Legislature. This question was discussed a few days ago and hence it is well to recall the pledge of the Patrons regarding it made ten months ago. Touching the fee system of remunerating officials the Patron platform then adopted "that the amount retained by officials should be fixed by a fair remuneration for the services rendered and that the balance of fees be paid into the treasury of the municipality and treated as general revenue." It is well to remember that the principle of a reform of the fee system was asserted by the Patrons as long ago as 1893. In the bye election in North Bruce in November of that year the Patrons scored a victory by declaring among other things that they were opposed to the fee system. This arrangement which enables Sir Oliver Mowat to keep his son in an office from which he draws annually sums ranging from $7,000 to $8,000 a year in fees has long been supported by the Liberals of Ontario. Against it the Patrons arrayed themselves both on the hustings and in their own conventions. It was in fact the one question above all others on which unity of action between the Patrons and the Liberals was with a due regard to Independence impossible. Yet what are the facts that have been disclosed during the last few days?

THE MASK REMOVED.

In almost the same terms as the Patron platform above quoted was the resolution moved by Dr. Willoughby in the Legislature in amendment to the motion that the House go into a committee of supply. It declared "that in the opinion of this House the present mode of paying registrars of deeds and other county officials is unsatisfactory; that said officials should be paid by salary, such salaries to be commensurate with the duties performed, and the surplus fees if any should be funded for the benefit of the municipalities." This was a declaration directly in line with the Patron policy. Indeed, their leader Mr. Haycock admitted the resolution was almost a copy of the Patron plank, but significantly enough he added that the Patrons would vote against it, for "we are not here to make or break governments." The result of this utterly inconsistent declaration was that in spite of their previous pledges all the alleged Patrons in the Ontario Legislature attached themselves by their solemnly recorded vote to the Liberal party. This is done in spite of the declaration that no coalition will be attempted with either of the existing parties and in defiance of the promise that the Patrons would seek to reform existing evils.

A SHALLOW EXCUSE.

For this act of political perfidy two excuses are offered. The first of these is that the subject has been referred to a Royal Commission, and the second that the organization does not propose to make or unmake governments. Regarding the first it has all along been clear to everyone that the fees commission was merely a political dodge intended to shelve a troublesome question. Indeed, the commission was denounced as such on more than one Patron platform. It was appointed on March 23rd, 1894, and since then has had ample time to report its findings to the Legislature. Moreover it was well known to the Patrons when they made their declaration on the fee system that such a commission was in existence, and yet they made no reservation in favor of waiting until the report of the commission had been received. It is an open secret that when the commission does report it will find in favor of the present system. It follows, if the Patrons are determined to wait until the report is received, that they propose to be guided by the conclusions the commissioners arrive at. Otherwise what is the object of waiting for the report? The pretence that they cannot make up their minds upon a subject, regarding which they have already formally declared themselves, until they get the opinion of somebody else is as transparent as it is ridiculous. There is some other reason than anxiety to read a report by which Patrons do not propose to be guided that prompts this extraordinary consideration for the Liberal party. As to the declaration that a reluctance to make or unmake governments compels Mr. Haycock and his followers to support Sir Oliver Mowat it is scarcely creditable to a body of men who are taking a real part in politics. Every representative of the people who is professedly independent should be prepared to cast his vote regardless of whether it will help or defeat the government of the day. If he is not able to do this of what service is he to his constituents. Are we to believe that so childish a reason as dread of turning out a government is going to make the Patrons support evils they condemn? That in fact they will only vote according to their convictions when there is no prospect of their votes having any value? To suppose this is to suppose an absurdity. There must be some other reason for the allowance between the Patrons and the Liberals which the former have hastened to cement with their votes.

A LIBERAL CONSPIRACY.

On the eve of the last general election a great Liberal conspiracy was exposed by Sir John Macdonald. Happily for Canada it was not the plot of the whole Liberal party, but sufficient of the leaders were implicated to cause the people of Canada to condemn most emphatically the Liberal party. It was a conspiracy to give Canada a fatal stab and hand this country over to the United States. At that time Mr. Edward Farrar, the agent of the conspirators, and the bosom friend of Sir Richard Cartwright, declared that the Liberals were wearing a mask, that in fact they were prepared to act the part of Judas and when the proper time came "a leader will be forthcoming." The conspiracy then was to sell the country to win power; the conspiracy now is to dupe the farmers to win power. We have seen that after a solemn declaration of independence the Patrons in the Ontario Legislature have by voice and vote allied themselves to Sir Oliver Mowat, though in doing so they have sustained a system which they have most emphatically pledged themselves to reform. The only possible explanation of this is an explanation which confirms suspicions entertained by thousands of Canadians. Again the Liberals are wearing a mask. This time they are disguised as the farmers' friends. They have to a great extent taken possession of the Patron organization, and turned it, so far as lies in their power, into a Liberal conspiracy. At the Legislature a few days ago the mask was for a moment removed, and behind the Patron whiskers the Grit conspirators were seen. What has been done in Provincial affairs will be attempted in the Dominion struggle. The Liberals as Patrons will try to dupe the farmers. They will declare they have a mission to perform apart from either party, and as in the Ontario Legislature, when the supreme moment comes for performing that mission, they will fall quietly back into the party ranks and laugh behind their masks.

NO SATISFYING THEM.

When the Patron-Liberal conspiracy was started the declaration of the new organization was for tariff reform and upon those lines it invited the government to act. At the last session of Parliament the tariff was thoroughly revised. Reductions were made on five hundred items and over a hundred were added to the free list. The result are that so far as the necessaries of life is concerned the tariff is lower to-day than ever the Liberals were willing to make it. Here was tariff reform with a vengeance. Here was precisely what the Patrons were asking. But Sir Richard Cartwright declared in Parliament that the revision of the tariff was a fraud, and nothing short of the most abominable wickedness. So the Patrons, or many of them, have since been telling the country. They stand to-day ready to do the will of their Grit masters just as they have done it in the Ontario Legislature. Their declaration of independence is worthless. Will the farmers of Ontario be deceived by this masquerade? This is the question which lovers of Canada are anxiously asking. The Patron-Grit conspiracy is very like a twin brother to the Farrar-Cartwright conspiracy. While the latter proposed to throw away our national life, the former is going to sacrifice our commerce and our industry to benefit the United States. The Liberals proposes to shut down our manufacturers, who furnish the farmers with their best customers and to admit the farm products of the world into the country to drive out our own beef, pork, mutton, flour, etc. This is their policy of free trade as it is in England, a policy which is ruining the farmers there. It will give the rich cheap living at the expense of the farmers. This will suit capitalists like Sir Richard Cartwright who lives on the blood money extracted by means of mortgages from the toilers of this country. But the farmers will be the losers if ever such a policy is inaugurated. Yet this is the policy for which many Patrons are now blindly working at the crafty dictation of political tricksters. It is well for the farmers of Ontario to be warned and to understand that the Patron-Grit conspiracy is as much a blow at this country as the traitorous conspiracy that was traced to the Liberals in 1891.

The Doctor's Escape.

"The worst I was ever frightened," said Dr. E. D. Lucas, "was when called at midnight to attend a man reported to be in a dying condition. When I reached his bedside he was dead and had been for several hours. His wife stood near seemingly calm, and when I told her that he was dead, she said:—'He is not dead—you are a physician and you must cure him. If you do not I will kill you.' I looked at her, and saw that I was alone with a maniac. In her hand she grasped a pistol, and it was evident that she was determined to use it if I did not restore life to her husband. I knew if I didn't keep my self-possession or all would be lost, and I felt his pulse, leaned over him as if listening to his heart beats, and finally said: 'You are right. He is not dead, but must not be disturbed; he will awaken in the morning. As soon as he awakens give him this medicine,' and I poured some drops into a glass of water. Fortunately the woman was satisfied, and allowed me to leave. It was a very narrow escape, and I felt relieved when the woman was taken to an insane asylum."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Robert Louis Stevenson used to tell this story of his early days.

He was entering, in an absent-minded way, the famous second-hand book shop of James Stillie, when he ran into a fuming old gentleman who was leaving the establishment. The latter ejaculated in an angry tone: "Man, can you not look where you are going!" Stevenson apologized for his awkwardness to Mr. Stillie, who was also excited. The bookseller exclaimed: "The craitur has been trying to make out that an old book I sold him is spurious! He may be able to write, but he knows nothing about black letter books. He's the most disagreeable customer that ever entered my shop!" "Who is he?" asked Stevenson. "Oh, that's Mr. Thomas Carlyle," was the answer.

RELIGION OF GHOSTS.

NECROMANCY IN THE PAST AND SPIRITUALISM NOW.

Consulting the Spirit of the Dead—The Witch of Endor and Her Latter-Day Imitators—Dr. Talmage's Arraignment.

"Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at Endor. And Saul disguises himself, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night; and he said, I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up, whom I shall name unto thee."—I. Sam xxviii, 7, 8.

Trouble to the right of him, and trouble to the left of him, Saul knew not what to do. As a last resort, he concluded to seek out a spiritual medium, or a witch, or anything that you please to call her—at any rate, a woman who had communication with the spirits of the eternal world. It was a very difficult thing to do, for Saul had either slain all the witches, or compelled them to stop business. A servant one day said to King Saul: "I know of a spiritual medium down at the village of Endor." "Do you?" said the king. Night falls. Saul, putting off his kingly robes, and putting on the dress of a plain citizen, with two servants, goes out to hunt up this spiritual medium. It was no easy thing for Saul to disguise himself, for the tallest people in the country only came up to his shoulder, and I think from the strength of the man and the way he bore himself, he must have been well-proportioned. It must have been a frightful thing to see a man walking along in the night eight or nine feet high. I suppose, as the people saw him pass, they said: "Who is that? He is as tall as the king"—having no idea that in such a plain dress there really was passing the king. Saul and his servants after a while reach the village, and they say: "I wonder if this is the house"; and they look in and they see the haggard, weird and shriveled-up spiritual medium sitting by the light, and on the table sculptured images, and divining rods, and poisonous herbs, and bottles, and vases. They say, "Yes, this must be the place." One loud rap brings the woman to the door, and as she stands there, holding the candle or lamp above her headd, an peering out into the darkness, she says: "Who is here?" The tall king informs her that he has come to have his fortune told. When she hears that she trembles, and almost drops the light, for she knows there is no chance for a fortune-teller or spiritual medium in all the land. But Saul having sworn that no harm shall come to her, she says; "Well, who shall I bring up from the dead?" Saul says: "Bring up Samuel." That was the prophet who had died a little while before. I see her waving her wand, or stirring up some poisonous herbs in a cauldron, or hear muttering over some incantations, or stamping with her foot, as she cries out to the realm of the dead: "Samuel! Samuel!" Lo, the freezing horror! The floor of the tenement opens, and the gray hairs float up, and the forehead, the eyes, the lips, the shoulders, the arms, the feet, the entire body of dead Samuel, wrapped in sepulchral robe, appearing to the astonished group, who stagger back and hold fast, and catch their breath, and shiver with terror. The dead prophet, white and awful from the tomb, begins to move his ashen lips, and he glares upon King Saul and cries out: "What did you bring me up for? Why did you break my long sleep? What do you mean, King Saul?" Saul, trying to compose and control himself, makes this stammering and affrighted utterance, as he says to the dead prophet: "The Lord is against me, and I have come to you for help. What shall I do? The dead prophet stretched forth his finger to King Saul and said: "Die to-morrow! Come with me into the sepulchre. I am going now. Come, come with me!" And low! the floor again opens, and the feet of the dead prophet disappear, and the arms, and the shoulders, and the forehead. The floor closes. Nothing is left in the room but Saul and the two servants, and the spiritual medium, and the sculptured images, and the divining rods, and the bottles, and the vases, and the poisonous herbs. Oh, that was an awful scene!

I learn first from this subject that Spiritualism is a very old religion. It is natural that people should want to know the origin and the history of a doctrine which is so widespread in all the villages, towns and cities of the civilized world, getting new converts every day—a doctrine with which many of you are already tinged. Spiritualism in America was born in 1847, in Hydesville, Wayne county, New York, when one night there was a loud rap heard against the door of Michael Weekman; a rap a second time, a rap a third time; and all three times, when the door was opened, there was nothing found there, the knocking having been made seemingly by invisible knuckles. In that same house there was a young woman who had a cold hand passed over her face, and there being seemingly no arm attached to it, ghostly suspicions were excited. After a while Mr. Fox and his family moved into that house, and then every night there was a banging at the door; and one night Mr. Fox said: "Are you a spirit?" Two raps answering in the affirmative. "Are you an injured spirit?" Two raps answering in the affirmative. And so they found out, as they say, that it was the ghost or spirit of a pedlar who had been murdered in that house, many years before, for his five hundred dollars. Whether the ghost of the peddler had come there to collect his five hundred dollars, or his bones, I cannot say, not being a spiritualist; but there was a great racket at the door, so Mr. Weekman decleared, and Mrs. Weekman, and Mr. Fox and Mrs. Fox, and all the little Foxes. The excitement spread. There was a universal rumpus. The Hon. Judge Edmonds declared, in a book, that he had actually seen a bell start from the top shelf of a closet, heard it ring over the people that were standing in the closet; then, swung by invisible hands, it rang over the people in the back parlor; and floated through the folding doors to the front parlor, rung over the people there, and then dropped on the floor. N. P. Talmage, United States Senator, afterwards Governor of Wisconsin, had his head completely turned with spiritualistic demonstrations. A man, as he was passing along the road, said that he was lifted up bodily, and carried towards his home, through the air, at such great speed he could not count the posts on the fences as he passed; and as he had a handsaw and a square in his hand, they beat, as he passed through the air, most delightful music. And the tables tipped, and the stools tilted, and the bedsteads raised, and the chairs upset, and it seemed as if the spirits everywhere had gone into the furniture business! Well, the people said: "We have got something new in this country; it is a new religion." Oh, no, my friends. Thousands of years ago we find in our text a spiritualistic seance. Nothing in the spiritualistic circles of our day has been more strange, mysterious and wonderful than things which have been seen in the past centuries of the world. In all the ages there have been necromancers, those who consult with the spirits of the departed; charmers, those who put their subjects in a mesmeric state; sorcerers, those who by taking poisonous drugs see everything, and hear everything, and tell everything; dreamers, people who in their sleeping moments can see the future world and hold consultation with spirits; astrologers, who could read a new dispensation in the stars: experts in palmistry, who can tell by the lines in the palm of your hand your origin and your history. From a cave on the Mount Parnassus, we are told, there was an exhalation that intoxicated the sheep and the goats that came anywhere near it, and a shepherd approaching it was thrown by that exhalation into an excitement in which he could foretell future events and hold consultation with the spiritual world. Yea, before the time of Christ the Brahmins went through all the table-moving, all the furniture excitement, which the spirits have exploited in our day; precisely the same thing, over and over again, under the manipulations of the Brahmins. Now, do you say that spiritualism is different from these? I answer, all these delusions I have mentioned belong to the same family. They are exhumations from the unseen world. What does God think of all these delusions? He thinks so severely of them that He never thinks of them but with livid thunders of indignation. He says: "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." And lest you might make some important distinction between Spiritualism and witchcraft, God says, in so many words: "There shall not be among you a consulter of familiar spirits, or wizard, or necromancer; for they that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord." And He says again: "The soul of those who seek after such as have familiar spirits, and who go whoring after them, I will set myself against them, and he shall be cut off from among his people." The Lord Almighty, in a score of passages, which I have not now time to quote, utters his indignation against all this great family of delusions. After that be a Spiritualist if you dare!

Still further: We learn from this text how it is that people fall into Spiritualism. Saul had enough trouble to kill ten men. He did not know where to go for relief. After a while he resolved to go and see the witch of Endor. He expected that somehow she would afford him relief. It was his trouble that drove him there. And I have to tell you now that Spiritualism finds its victims in the troubled, the bankrupt, the sick, the bereft. You lose your watch, and you go to a fortune-teller doctor to find where it is. You are sick with a strange disease, and you go to a fortune-teller doctor to find out by a lock of hair what is the matter with you. You lose a friend, you want the spiritual world opened so that you may have communication with him. In a highly-wrought, nervous and diseased state of mind, you go and put yourself in that communication. That is why I hate Spiritualism. It takes advantage of one in a moment of weakness, which may come upon us at any time. We lose a friend. The trial is keen, sharp, suffocating, almost maddening. If we could marshal a host, and storm the eternal world, and recapture our loved one, the host would soon be marshalled. The house is so lonely. The world is so dark. The separation is so insufferable. But Spiritualism says: "We will open the future world, and your loved one can come back and talk to you." Though we may not hear his voice, we may hear the rap of his hand. So. clear the table. Sit down. Put your hands on the table. Be very quiet. Five minutes gone. Ten minutes. No motion of the table. No response from the future world. Twenty minutes. Thirty minutes. Nervous excitement all the time increasing. Forty minutes. The table shivers. Two raps from the future world. The letters of the alphabet are called over. The departed friend's name is John. At the pronunciation of the letter "J," two raps. At the pronunciation of the letter "O," two raps. At the pronunciation of the letter "H," two raps. At the pronunciation of the letter "N," two raps. There you have the whole name spelled out. J-o-h-n, John. Now, the spirit being present, you say, "John, are you happy?" Two raps give an affirmative answer. Pretty soon the hand of the medium begins to twitch and toss, and begins to write out, after paper and ink are furnished, a message from the eternal world. What is remarkable, the departed spirit, although it has been amid the illuminations of heaven, cannot spell as well as it used to. It has lost all grammatical accuracy, and cannot write as distinctly. I received a letter through a medium once. I sent it back. I said: "Just please to tell these ghosts they had better go to school and get improved in their orthography!" Now, just think? of spirits, that the Bible represents as enthroned in glory, coming down to crawl under the table, and break crockery, and ring tea-bells before supper is ready, and rap the window shutter on a gusty night. Is there any consolation in such poor, miserable work compared with the thought that our departed Christian friends, got rid of pain and languishing, are in the radiant society of heaven, and that we shall join them there, not in a stifled and mysterious half-utterance, which makes the hair stand on end and the cold chills creep up the back, but in an unhindered and illimitable delight.

"And none shall murmur or misdoubt,
When God's great sunrise finds us out."

Yes, my friends, Spiritualism comes to those who are in trouble and sweeps them into its delusions. Saul, in the midst of his disaster, went to the witch of Endor. The vast majority of those who have gone to spiritual mediums have been sent there through their misfortunes.

I learn still further from this subject that Spiritualism and Necromancy are affairs of the darkness. Why did not Saul go in the day? He was ashamed to go. Besides that, he knew the spiritual medium, like all his successors, performed her exploits in the night. The Davenports, the Fowlers, the Foxes, the spiritual mediums of all ages, have chosen the night or a darkened room. Why? The majority of their wonders have been swindles, and deception prospers best in the night.

You have all seen strange and unaccountable things in the night. Almost every man has at some time had a touch of hallucination. Some time ago, after I had been ever tempted to eat something indigestible before retiring at night, after retiring I saw the president of one of the prominent colleges astride of the foot of the bed, while he demanded of me a loan of five cents! When I awakened I had no idea it was anything supernatural. And I have to advise you, if you hear and see strange things at night, to stop eating hot mince pie and take a dose of billous medicine. It is an outraged physical organism, and, not to deceive the very elect after sundown, does nearly all its work in the night. The witch of Endor held her seances at night; so do all the witches. Away with this religion of spooks. Spiritualism is a curse to its disciples.

Still further: I learn from my text that Spiritualism is doom and death to its disciples. King Saul thought that he would get help from the "medium"; but the first thing that he sees makes him swoon away, and no sooner is he resuscitated than he is told he must die. Spiritualism is doom and death to every one that yields to it. It ruins the body. Look upon an audience of spiritualists. Cadaverous, Weak, Nervous, Exhausted. Hands clammy and cold. Nothing prospers but long hair—soft marshes yielding rank grass. Spiritualism destroys the physical health. Its disciples are ever hearing startling news from the other world. Strange beings cross the room is white. Table fidgetty, wanting to get its feet loose as if to dance. Voices sepulchral and ominous. Bewildered with raps. I never knew a confirmed spiritualist who had a healthy nervous system. It is incipient epilepsy and catelepsy. Destroy your nervous system and you might as well be dead. I have noticed that people who are hearing raps from the future world have but little strength left to bear the hard raps of this world. It is an awful thing to trifle with one's nervous system. It is so delicate—it is so far-reaching—its derangements are so terrible. Get the nervous system a jangle, and so far as your body and soul are concerned, the whole universe is a jangle. Better in our ignorance experiment us dead, or with an engineer's steam boiler that may blow us to atoms, than experiment with the nervous system. A man can live with only one lung, or with no eyes, and be happy, as men have ben under such afflictions, but woe be to the man whose nerves are shattered. Spiritualism smites first of all and mightily, against the nervous system, and so makes life miserable.

I indict spiritualism also, because it is a social and marital curse. The worst deeds of licentiousness and the worst orgies of obscenity have been enacted under its patronage. The story is too vile for me to tell. I will not polute my tongue nor your ears with the recital. Sometimes the civil law has been evoked to stop the outrage. Families innumerable have been broken up by it. It has pushed off hundreds of young women into a life of profligacy. It talks about "elective affinities," and "affinital relation," and "spiritual matches," and adopts the whole vocabulary of freelovism. In one of its public journals it declares "marriage is the monster curse of civilization." It is a source of debauchery and intemperance. If spiritualism could have full swing, it would turn this world into a pandemonium of carnality. It is an unclean, adulterous, damnable religion, and the sooner it drops into hell, from which it rose, the better both for earth and heaven. For the sake of man's honor and woman's purity, I say let the last vestige of it perish for ever. I wish I could gather up all the raps it has ever heard from spirits blest or damned and gather them all on its own head in one thundering rap of annihilation!

I further indict spiritualism for the fact that it is the cause of much insanity. There is not an asylum between Bangor and San Francisco which has not the torn and bleeding victims of this delusion. Go into an asylum, I care not where it is, and the presiding doctor, after you have asked him: "What is the matter with that man?" will say: "Spiritualism demented him"; or "What is the matter with that woman?" he will say: "Suiritualism demented her." It has taken down some of the brightest intellects. It has swept off into mental midnight judges, senators, governors, ministers of the Gospel, and one time came near capturing one of the Presidents of the United States. At Flushing, near this city, a man became absorbed with it, forsook his family, took his only fifteen thousand dollars, surrendered them to a spiritual medium in New York, attempted three times to put an end to his own life, and then was incarcerated in the State lunatic asylum, where he is to-day, a raving maniac. Put your hand in the hand of this witch of Endor and she will lead you to bottomless perdition, where she holds her everlasting seance. Many years ago the steamer Atlantic started from Europe for the United States. Getting mid-ocean the machinery broke, and she floundered around day after day and week after week, and for a whole month after she was due people wondered and finally gave her up. There was great anguish in the cities, for there were many who had friends aboard that vessel. Some of the women, in their distress, went to the spiritual mediums and enquired the fate of that vessel. The mediums called the spirits, and the rappings on the table indicated the steamship lost with all on board. Women went raving mad and were carried to the lunatic asylum. After awhile one day a gun was heard off Quarantine. The flags went up on the shipping, and the bells of the churches were rung. The boys ran through the streets crying "Extra! The Atlantic is safe." There was the embracing as from the dead, when friends came again to friends; but some of those passengers went up to find their wives in that lunatic asylum, where the cheat of infernal spiritualism had put them. A man in Bellevue Hospital, dying from wounds made by his own hand was asked why he tried to commit suicide, and he said: "The spirits told me to." Parents have strangled their children, and when asked why they did it replied: "Spiritualism demanded it." It is the patronizer and forager for the madhouse. Judge Edmonds, in Broadway Tabernacle, New York, delivering a lecture in behalf of spiritualism, admitted in so many words: "There is a fascination about consultation with the spirits of the dead that has a tendency to lead people off from their right judgment, and to instil into them a fanaticism that is revolting to the natural mind."

It not only ruins its disciples, but it ruins the mediums also, only give it time. The Gadereau swine, on the banks of the Lake of Galilee no sooner became spiritual mediums than down they went in an avalanche of pork to the constrnation of all herdsmen. The office of a medium is bad for a man, bad for a woman, bad for a beast.

I bring against this delusion a more fearful indictment: It ruins the soul immortal. First, it makes a man a quarter of an infidel; then it makes him half an infidel; then it makes him whole infidel. The whole system, as I conceive it, is founded on the insufficiency of the word of God as a revelation. God says the Bible is enough for you to know about the future world. You say it is not enough, and there is where you and the Lord differ. You clear the table, you shove aside the Bible, you put your hand on the table, and say: "Now let the spirits of the future world come and tell me something the Bible has not told me." And although the scriptures say: "Add thou not unto his words lest He reprove thee, and thou be found a liar," you risk it and say, "Come back, spirit of my departed father; come back, spirit of my departed mother, of my companions, of my little child, and tell me some things I don't know about you and about the unseen world." If God is ever slapped square in the face, it is when a spiritual medium puts down her hand on the table, invoking spirits departed to make revelation. God has told you all you ought to know, and how dare you be prying into that which is none of your business? You cannot keep the Bible in one hand and spiritualism in the other. One or the other will slip out of your grasp, depend upon it. Spiritualism is adverse to the Bible in the fact that it has in these last days called from the future world Christian men to testify against Christianity. Its mediums call back Lorenzo Dow, the celebrated evangelist, and Lorenzo Dow testifies that Christians are idolators. Spiritualism calls back Tom Payne, and he testifies that he is stopping at the same house in heaven with John Bunyan. They call back John Wesley, and he testifies against the Christian religion which he all his life gloriously preached. Andrew Jackson Davis, the greatest of all the spiritualists, comes to the front and declares that the New Testament is but "the dismal echo of a barbaric age," and the Bible only "one of the pen and ink relics of Christian-They attempt to substitute the writings of Swedenborg and Andrew Jackson Davis and other religious balderash in the place of this old Bible.

Now I believe, under God, that this sermon will save many from disease, insanity and perdition. I believe these are the days of which the Apostles spake when he said: "In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits." I think my audience, as well as other audiences in this day need to have reiterated in their hearing the passages I quoted some minutes ago: "There shall not be among you a consulter of familiar spirits, or wizard, or necromancer; for they that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord"; and "The soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, I will set myself against them, and they shall be cut off from their people."

But I invite you this morning to a Christian seance, a noonday seance. This congregation is only one great family. Here is the church table. Come around the church table, take your seats for this great Christian seance, put your Bible on the table, put your hands on the top of the Bible and then listen, and hear if there are any voices coming from the eternal world. I think there are. Listen! "Secret things belong unto the Lord our God, but things that are revealed belong to us and to our children." Surely that is a voice from the spirit-world! But before you rise from this Christian seance, I want you to promise me you will be satisfied with the Divine revelation until the light of the eternal throne breaks upon your vision. Do not go after the witch of Endor. Do not sit down to table rappings, either in sport or in earnest. Have your tables so well made and their legs so even, that they will not tip and rattle. If the table must move, let it be under the offices of industrious housewifery. Teach your children there are no ghosts to be seen or heard in this world, save those which walk on two feet, of four, human or bestial. Remember that spiritualism at the best is a useles thing; for if it tells what the Bible reveals it is a superfluity, and if it tells what the Bible does not reveal it is a lie. Instead of going out to get other people to tell your fortune, tell your own fortune by putting your trust in God and doing the best you can. I will tell your fortune: "All things work together for good to them who love God." Insult not your departed friends by asking them to come down and scrabble under an extension table. Remember that there is only one spirit whose dictation you have a right to invoke, and that is the holy, blessed and omnipotent Spirit of God. Hark! He is rapping now, not on the table or the floor, but rapping on the floor of your heart, and every rap is an invitation to Christ and a warning of judgment to come. O, grieve him not away. Quench him not. He has been all around you all your lives. Hark! There comes a voice dropping through the roof, breaking through the windows, filling all this house from door to door and from floor to ceiling with tender and overmastering intonation, saying: "My spirit shall not always strive."

THE GRITS AND THE PATRONS.

A Grit Newspaper Talks Out and Admits There is a Deal Between Them.

To show how things are drifting in connection with the Dominion elections and the Patrons, the following article from The Norfolk Reformer, a Grit paper published in Simcoe, County of Norfolk, is given. The situation in the Norfolks is that a Patron is running in each riding. It is well understood, however, that the Patron against John Charlton is to retire. Indeed, he has already spoken out at a public meeting saying he endorsed Mr. Charlton. The Reformer says:

"A cruel wail goeth up from the Tory camp. The Liberals and the Patrons are accused of making a common cause against the common enemy. There are certainly many signs of the truth of the charge. In Lennox the Liberal candidate has retired in favor of the Patron. In North Bruce it is said the same thing is about to be done; a similar story comes from the Peterboros. On the other hand, the Patron nominee in South Oxford has declared his intention of supporting Sir Richard Cartwright. Patron Conventions in North York and North Ontario have endorsed Wm. Mulock and J. D. Edgar both Liberal members and both lawyers. Welland Patrons have endorsed Lowell, the Liberal member. We are rejoiced to see so many shining examples of good sense on the part both of Liberals and Patrons. We trust that both a Liberal and a Patron will not go to the polls in a single constituency in Ontario. They have a common object to achieve. They can only succeed by acting in concert. The Patron in North Norfolk who cannot accept John Charlton's record on the essential planks of the Patron platform, is no Patron. He is simply at heart now, what he was before, a dyed in the wool Tory.

And the "Reformer" continues: "Let Mr. VanLoon sacrifice himself. Let the Patron order endorse Charlton and the Liberals do the same by Walker (who is the candidate against Col. Tisdale, a very able Conservative in South Norfolk), then shoulder to shoulder, the two could march to certain victory."

How do Conservatives like this game?

John Milton loved to play on the organ. He made his second wife sing and said she had some voice, but not the slightest idea of tone.

Whenever Whittier had an inspiration he would go to the corner of his room and kneel down while he reduced his thoughts to words.

Adelina Patti has a weakness for Mexican spaniels and wherever she goes carries one with her, usually wrapped up in silk shawls.

Next to money, Rembrandt loved nothing so well as his mokey. He shed tears when the ape died, and painted a portrait of his pet from memory.

THE FARM IN FEBRUARY

SOME HELPFUL HINTS ON AGRICULTURAL SUBJECTS.

Winter Shelter for Stock—When Well Protected From Cold, Cattle Do Not Need to Generate Extra Heat and so Are Less Expensive.

Feed costs more in winter than in summer, not only because there is a smaller supply, but also for the reason that more labor is necessary to give it to stock. It is also more expensive because a large share of it must be devoted to counteracting the effects of the cold. Animals have no stoves to give them warmth, but must derive their warmth entirely from the food, and the colder the weather the more warmth is required, hence the larger the proportion of food necessary to supply the warmth, and consequently there is a greater expense incurred by the farmers. Production, whether of meat, milk, wool or butter, can only occur when the animal has first supplied its own wants. It is true that a cow will produce milk on an apparently small quantity of food on a cold day, but it is at the expense of a corresponding loss of fat or tissue from her body. There is combustion occurring within her, though slowly, and the fuel must be provided in some form, or she will succumb because combustion must sooner or later cease.

SAVE THE FUEL.

The warmer the animal can be kept without resorting to extra fuel (feed) the less expense. This can be done only with good shelter. It is not inferred that barns are the proper shelter, as they are well enough in their place, but cattle are turned out of the barns, or allowed in the barnyard, where they suffer severely. They dislike confinement, preferring the open air and are more profitable when their wishes are gratified, but they should have a large open shed, or windbrake of some kind to keep off the cold winds. Even the barns may contain cracks and crevices which let in cold streams of air on the stock at night and chill them severely. These openings though costing but little for their repair, entail not only discomfort to the animals but loss of product. More fuel must be used and in extreme cases the animals heat is not sufficient to maintain life, especially with young stock. Liberal feeding will not take the place of shelter at all times, for not only are the animals chilled but disease follows.

ECONOMY OF SHELTER.

The recent snowstorm should afford an object lesson in favor of shelter, and a consideration of the cost of sheds or repair of barns, will convince any farmer that $100 expended in that direction will return the outlay in a single winter. Where a large herd or flock is kept the saving of only 10 per cent. of the food during an entire winter will not only pay for all needed shelter but greatly increase production and improve the health of the animals. Next to the shelter is abundant bedding, in order to shut off the draught of cold air along the floor. Every ounce of food saved adds to the profit, and the warmer the animals the more rapid their growth and increase of weight. Warmth is the best cure for diseases, and it is economical to obtain it from shelter more than from food. Shelter is cheap because it serves the required purpose for many years, its real cost being but a small sum if its benefit is apportioned over a long period of time.

A Cooking-School Without a Fire.

Of course it is simple enough. There are half a dozen electric lights in each room in the house, and this ingenious teacher has attached wires to the electric main which furnishes the electric lights. Each set of wires thus attached is fastened to one of the cooking utensils or to the little stand upon which it rests, and the pan or griller or stand is thus heated, just as the tiny platinum wire loop inside the electric burner is. Only, as the griller is much larger than the platinum wire, and iron or copper is harder to heat than platinum, the griller does not get white-hot, or even red-hot, but just hot enough to raise a blister on your finger.

Up out of the floor comes the wires from the electric main, and then each little cooking apparatus has its own particular set of wires, and there are six little knobs for connecting and breaking the circuit for each set, placed just under the top of the table. The cleanliness, the simplicity and the convenience of the whole thing are remarkable, and if you really should happen to belong to some cooking-school here in America, and go to London and see this school, you would be thunder-struck, and made quite unfit to come back to the hot range and the draughts and the coal and wood and the lighting of fires.

The two burglar-proof safes that were the only things seen in the—it would hardly do to call it "kitchen"—cooking-room when you entered, turned out to be nothing more than electric ovens. They are so constructed that the half-dozen shelves inside them which are attached to wirees, just as the utensils on the table are, can be heated to any degree of heat without altering the temperature of the safe or oven itself. Here you can set plates of bread or roasts, or anything that can be cooked or warmed in an oven. Then closing the door, you turn on a certain amount of electric current through the wires that are attached to shelf No. 1, and the plates are warmed. To shelf No. 2 the wires carry more heat, and something is roasted in no time, and so on down through the half-dozen shelves—all done by the turning of little knobs, instead of carrying coal, and putting paper and wood underneath it, and lighting matches, burning your fingers and blowing half your lungs away.—Harper's Young People.

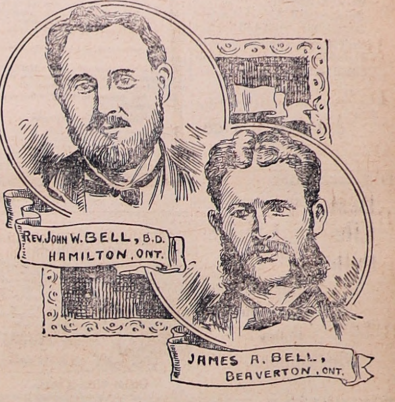
BUILT UP THE SYSTEM IN A WONDERFUL MANNER.

James A. Bell, of Beaverton, Ont., Brother of the Rev. John Wesley Bell, B.D., Prostrated by Nervous Headaches—A Victim of the Trouble for Several Years—South American Nervine Effected a Complete Cure.



REV. JOHN W. BELL, B.D.
HAMILTON, ONT.
JAMES A. BELL,
BEAVERTON, ONT.

In their own particular field few men are better known than the Rev. John Wesley Bell, B.D., and his brother, Mr. James A. Bell. The former will be recognized by his thousands of friends all over the country as the popular and able missionary superintendent of the Royal Templars of Temperance. Among the 20,000 members of this order in Ontario, his counsel is sought on all sorts of occasions. On the public platform he is one of the strong men of the day, battling against the evils of intemperance. Equally well known is Mr. Bell in other provinces of the Dominion, having been for years a member of the Manitoba Methodist Conference, and part of this time was stationed in Winnipeg. His brother, Mr. James A. Bell is a highly respected resident of Beaverton, where his influence, though perhaps more circumscribed than that of his eminent brother, is none the less effective and productive of good. Of recent years, however, the working ability of Mr. James A. Bell has been sadly marred by severe attacks of nervous headaches, accompanied by indigestion. Who can do fit work when this trouble takes hold of them, and especially when it becomes chronic, as was, seeminly, the case with Mr. Bell. The trouble reached such intensity that last June he was completely prostrated. In this condition a friend recommended South American Nervine. Ready to try anything and everything, though he thought he had covered the list of proprietary medicines, he secured a bottle of this great discovery. A second bottle of the medicine was taken and the work was done. Employing his own language: "Two bottles of South American Nervine immediately relived my headaches and have built up my system in a wonderful manner." Let us not deprecate the good our clergymen and social reformers are doing in the world, but how ill-fitted they would be for their work were it not the relief that South American Nervine brings to them when physical ills overtake them, and when the system as a result of hard, earnest and continuous work, breaks down. Nervine treats the system as the wise reformer treats the evils he is battling against. It strikes at the root of the trouble. All disease comes from disorganization of the nerve centers. This is a scientific fact. Nervine at once works on these nerve centers; gives to them health and vigor; and then there courses through the system strong, healthy, life-maintaining blood, and nervous troubles of every variety are things of the past.

PROFIT IN BEEF-MAKING

PROSPECTS ARE FAVORABLE FOR THIS LINE OF PRODUCTION.

When Sheep and Horses no Longer Pay a Good Thing May be Made by Catering to the Increasing Consumption of Prime Beef.

The prospect favors returning profits in the business of raising beef cattle. While sheep and horses no longer pay, the great consumption of beef gives assurances that prime cattle will always be in demand. And an examination of market statistics for a long period of years shows that the well bred and well fed steers, weighing from 1,300 to 1,500 lbs. alive, have always sold at a price that paid a profit to the producers. Such meat is of a better grade or quality, with an evener distribution of fat, than animals grown to two or three yeers on coarse food and then made fat on grain. Hence the important point in making beef at a profit is to produce the best, which we have all the facilities and advantages for doing successfully. Competition with the great plains of the west can only be met by sending to market an article our competitors cannot produce, and that will command attention and prices they cannot attain or obtain. The grade Shorthorn cows kept on many farms are excellent foundations upon which to commence. My experience has been that high grade Shorthorn bullocks, everything considered, are better feeders than full blood cattle. Instead of killing the calves for veal, the males at least should be grown to mature beeves.

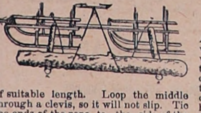
Select as a sire a bull of pure breed, and of any beef breed fancied by the farmer and that is reasonably fine in the bone, but not extremely distinguished in that line; with an abundance of muscle covering his frame, wide back, straight upper and under line, clear bright eye. Or better still is it to choose a sire that is known and has proven himself the progenitor of such stock as we wish to keep and develop. A cross upon this grade cow will insure a progeny suited to keeping and maturing to beef age. Let the calf be dropped at any convenient season. Castrate the male at any time from one day to one week old. If a polled blood has not been introduced, dehorn at any time and by any process that completes the work. The benefits derived by dispensing with the horns are present from the day of its completion until the animal has been driven into the slaughter pen.

Raise the calf by hand. This keeps it tame and it will much sooner learn to take substantial food, than if running with the cow. Give milk fresh or after the cream has been removed, in such quantities as appears to be assimilated and healthtul, but avoid overfeeding at all times. When quite young, a thrifty calf will begin consuming some extra food besides the milk that it receives. Encourage this desire by mixing wheat bran or ground oats with the milk; the calf is fed in small quantities at first, but the grain may be slowly increased as the age and wants of the animal require. In summer or late spring, allow the calf the range of a good pasture lot in connection with milk and such other feed as will prove growthful. A good dark house in summer to keep away flies and warm clean homes in winter, add so much to comfort and consequently to growth, that each demand attention. A very good plan is to give freedom of pasture at night and house during the day time in summer or winter as circumstances indicate. The grain ration must, however, in the calf age, be cautiously managed, having in view our design of future treatment and the age to which we expect to carry our stock before we dispose of it.

For winter feed, clover hay well cured, has perhaps no equal. Any of our tame or cultivated grasses cut early or green will be consumed with a relish, and in connectien with some whole grain would keep up a vigorous and healthy growth if good quarters are provided and plenty of water. If an early market is sought, the grain ration can be safely increased, but in most cases growth is better promoted by plenty of hay, corn fodder, or any other available provender that the animal relishes. Having had no experience with ensilage or roots, I can only commend them upon my judgment and have no doubt that either or both, would be valuable and worthy of more general use. If the animal is to be matured before the age of two years, grain ought to be continually used daily after it was once begun and the nearer we arrive to market day, the more and the richer the feed. Mr. Taylor's views on ground vs. unground grain for cattle, with or without hogs, and the best age for marketing beef will be printed later.—American Agriculturist.

For Loading Logs.

Arrange two stout timbers, aa, with one end of each on the ground and the other on the sled or wagon, as shown in the illustration. Double a 1¼ inch rope of suitable length. Loop the middle through a clevis, so it will not slip. Tie the ends of the rope to the side of the sled farthest from the log bb. Bring the clevis back over the sled and around the log, so it will balance, then take it back over the sled, hitch on the team at d, and go ahead. Have a wood-rack on the sled and remove the stakes from the side on which the log is received.



Sticking to It.

The Rural New Yorker says that it is the fashion in some quarters to ridicule the plodding farmer, but in all departments of life the steady workman is generally the successful one. A span of "high headers" will appear well before a sleigh in a city park, yet for useful service, the steady team which will pull faithfully through the mud end up steep hills, until the harness breaks, is to be preferred. But staying qualities are alike needed in men and horses. Some years ago, Josh Billings called on a restless friend in a New England printing office, and after silently listening to his complaints, with a piece of chalk wrote on the inside of the door to the composing room, "2 win is 2 stay." That man both staid and won. The farmer who decided during the drought of last August that he would have a field of green fodder corn ready for his milch cows next summer, thought wisely. Still the farmer who has chosen his field, has decided how much manure he will need, has begun to haul it into the field as fast as made, and has selected the variety of seed corn best suited for his locality, is the man most likely to be ready for another drought. It was a good resolution, when gathering last October so much wormy fruit, that the orchard must be sprayed next spring. One farmer will forget all about it, but the man who has planned just how the work shall be done, has already ordered his spraying pump and insecticides, and has sent to his State experiment station for the latest bulletins on spraying fruit, is already on the sure road to success. If a thousand of us will chalk on the inside of the barn door "Tenacity of Purpose," and let the idea work into our mental fibre, 995 farmers will be better off at the close of 1895, whether we grow R. N. Y. No. 2 potatoes, Clydesdale oats, Crimson clover, or winter oats.

THE POULTRY YARD.

March is the Month When Breeding Operations Should be in Full Swing.

This months the serious work of the breeding season should be in full swing. The breeders should have been mated last month, so that now all the broody hens which are fit for mothers can be accommodated with a clutch of eggs.

I suppose the breeders are penned separately, each kind and pen by itself, and that no males are running with the layers; they will lay longer and be all the better without, than with a male, and so much feed is saved.

Don't put too many eggs under the first hens; more and better chicks will be got from 9 eggs than from 15 in cold weather.

There will be a few warm, sunny days, or there ought to be, this month, so be prepared to give the fowls and chicks the full benefit of them in a chance for a run on the bare earth; it will be tolerably dry if the snow has been kept shoveled off.

The rye sown last fall will begin to look green and start to grow in warm spots, and the fowls will find the spots if given the chance.

During the cold, blustering days we are sure to have this month, it is a good time to test the utility of the open shed: the hens will enjoy the protection from the winds and the chance to sun themselves and dust themselves, and scratch for the grain thrown in the leaves or straw, if you have done and continue to do your part. It will add dollars' worth of eggs, if they have gone down in price. If the price kept up to the November and December notch, perhaps we would not feel as if we could afford to set as many as we should. We do not know of a better time to do the spring cleaning in the henhouses; renew the straw or leaves on the floor, also, if of earth and soiled, whitewash, renew the nests, burning the old nesting material; lice may not be troublesome just now, but they are only waiting for a little warmer weather. The time to kill the lice, as with weeds, is before they come. If there are any broods of chicks out, keep them warm, give them the chance to run on the ground and get plenty of fresh air, but be sure they can run back to the hen or brooder quickly and often to warm their feet. The feed for the chicks can be almost anything, so long as but little is fed at a time and often, and it is clean and wholesome; the water should be clean and pure, green stuff and gravel should be provided if they are not where they can help themselves to them; access to a dish of charcoal would probably save some cases of bowel trouble, as it is a good disinfectant and corrector of a foul or sour crop. Warmth and cleanliness we place at the head of the list of essentials.

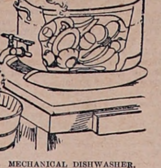
I presume many have attended one or more shows during the past season. Have you learned anything? Did you see any fowls you like better than your own? Did you see anything to convince you that pure-breds would be more profitable for you to keep than scrubs? Did you find a fancier anywhere who had a record of the egg product of his flock, pens vs. single birds? Did you find anybody who knew whether his hens paid him a profit or made him a loss? Were you "stuck" on some particular breed or bird? Don't be in a hurry to get rid of what you have; it pays to wait and go slowly sometimes—often, in fact, study all sides of the question before deciding on a change.

A comfortable job for some of the cold stormy days is to overhaul the coops and see that they are ready for use, and repair those which are not; if you think you will need more, it is a good plan to make them now, when time is not worth so much to you as it will be later on. There is comfort and satisfaction both in the thought that, so far as possible, the wants and needs of the season have been anticipated and that everything is ready and waiting for the wants and needs to materialize.—American Agriculturist.

MECHANICAL KITCHEN MAID.

Dishes Washed Carefully by an Improved Method.

The washing of dishes is one of the most disagreeable duties of a household, and many women who are happy to do anything else draw the line at that.



MECHANICAL DISHWASHER.

Apparatus is now supplied to do this work, and it does it well. An oval tank with a faucet about one-half inch from the bottom and a hermetically closing cover is placed on a rocking base. In the interior there is a sliding second cover which is perforated with many holes, and which can be fastened at any height inside.

To use the apparatus both covers are removed, all objects to be cleansed put inside, then the hot water, with soda or ammonia added, is placed in the pot, the inner cover fastened down upon the crockery and the outer cover closed. The apparatus is then set rocking and douching now and then the water drawn off from the stopcock, and new water added from above. When the water from the stopcock flows off clean, the work is done and the crockery need only be dried.

BETTER THAN COAL GAS

A NEW ILLUMINANT OF REMARKABLE POWER AND BRILLIANCY.

Produced by Electricity—A Compound of Lime and Carbon, and May Be Used in Solid Form, or Converted Into a Liquid by Heavy Pressure—Science News.

Among the many wonderful and interesting achievements of synthetic chemistry, none promises so much from a commercial standpoint as the discovery of the process of producing cheaply, by means of the electric current, a new illuminating gas from lime and carbon. When finely ground chalk or lime, mixed with powdered carbon in any form, is fused in a properly constructed electric furnace, a dark, gray substance is formed, known as calcic carbide. Upon the addition of water to this compound there is formed, among other products, the gas, acetylene, and at a cost that brings it within the range of commercial possibilities.

HIGH CANDLE POWER OF THE GAS.

The gas is at present employed in this country as an illuminant, mixed with an equal volume of air, and has given remarkable results in point of illuminating power. Owing to its intense richness it can only be consumed in small flat-flame burners, but under these conditions emits a light greater than that given by any other known gas, its illuminating value, calculated to a consumption of five cubic feet an hour, being no less than 240 candles. As the quantity of gas to be consumed for a given illumination is exceedingly small as compared with any other gas, the products of combustion are reduced to an excessively low limit.

The scope and possibilities of the discovery of acetylene are dwelt upon at considerable length by Professor Vivian B. Lewis, in a paper read at the last meeting of the British Society of Arts. As the gas can be liquefied by heavy pressures, enormous quantities of the gas may thus be compressed into small metal cylinders, and in this form Professor Lewis believes that it will be of the greatest possible value for floating buoys, lantern projection, railway signals, and, coming down to smaller things, for bicycle lamps.

A BOON TO SUBURBAN RESIDENTS.

Perhaps the most valuable suggestion which has been made with regard to the utilization of this remarkable method of making acetylene is, that advantage should be taken of the method of preparation to utilize the solid carbide in portable lamps for dining and drawing rooms in places where no gas supply exists. To do this a strong steel cylinder, 4 inches in diameter and 16 inches in length, is fitted with an opening in the top of such size that a pound cartridge or stick of the calcic carbide can be passing through it. With the right proportion of water put into the cylinder and by employing proper reducing valves, the gas is generated and compressed by its own pressure in the cylinder. By this means a light of over 20 candle-power can be obtained for a period something like ten hours. When the gas is all burned out, a new cylinder of the carbide can be inserted and the light renewed. Another method suggested is to place a large cylinder of the liquid gas in an outhouse of a country house and connect it in the usual way with the pipes in the various living apartments.

The economic value of the gas becomes apparent, says Professor Lewis, when we compare the cost of the gas for equal illumination with the light obtained from other illuminants. The London gas has an illuminating power of 16 candles, while acetylene has an illuminating value of 240 candles, and this, at $1.60 per 1,000, would in light-giving value be equivalent to London coal gas at less than 12 cents per 1,000.

ASPARAGUS CULTURE.

A Vegetable That Has But Few Compeers and That Should be in Every Garden.

Asparagus has but few compeers, few or no superiors among garden vegetables, and should be in every garden. It is not difficult to produce. Once properly established it abides for many years, and heralds the return of spring and of the restored vegetable life with a grace no other vegetable does. A number of varieties or named sorts have been obtained through selection and "sporting," but recently, from one unvarying type that had been known for twenty centuries or more. It was described as a garden vegetable by Cato several generations before the Christian era. An improved type came with the introduction of Conover's Colossal, some 30 years ago. Since then names of asparagus have been multiplied until the catalogues show a dozen or more named sorts. The kind just named is good enough, but some growers in this section prefer the Palmetto, or the Philadelphia Mammoth. One year or two-year-old roots can be had so cheaply from those who make their culture a specialty that there is little need for starting a plantation from the seeds. By the large quantity one-year-old roots can be purchased from $2 to $4 per thousand. The roots may be set out any time in early spring, whenever the soil is in condition for being worked. The rows should be five or six feet apart and the plants set two or two and one-half feet apart in the row. At the start a good application of ground raw bone should be forked in or harrowed in, and broad furrows sufficiently deep to receive the plants thrown out. The tips of the plants should be three and one-half or four inches under the surface. At planting cut off any bruised or broken roots and use care to spread the roots out in every direction, throw on about an inch of mellow soil, sprinkle on and about the roots a handful more of bone dust, fill in to a level or nearly so, and press the soil firmly upon the roots. As soon as the shoots appear and growth sets in in the spring give enough cultivation to keep down weeds. Do not cut the plants at all until the second year after setting out. Let the tops remain in the fall to die a natural death, if being killed by frost may be called natural death. Later the dead tops may be removed if desirable.

Costly Perfumes.

Mignonette, that at the moment is a perfume greatly in favor for its delicate and refreshing fragrance, is compounded as well from some of this regular stock in the perfumer's laboratory, and even violet extract is two-thirds of it due to the sweetness of cassie, orris and atter of almonds, though violet is the most popular perfume. The true extract of the purple flower is made in France, is costly, and only to be bought at a few places in New York. Its rare sweetness is expressed from the violets that grow at Cannes and Grasse where the mignonette attains what to American eyes is unbelievable perfection of size, color and order, and where the roses owe their sweetness chiefly to the bees, who sprinkle into their hearts the pollen from the near blooming orange trees.—New York Sun.

RAILROAD FROM A WIRE

CALIFORNIA CAPITALIST TO BUILD A LINE OUT OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Cars to be Run on Cables—Electricity or Compressed Air Will be the Power and the Speed Will Be 100 Miles an Hour.

A railroad on wire.

Such is the scheme which D. R. P. Thomas, a San Francisco capitalist, now has on foot. He proposes to build what he calls an aerial road from San Francisco to Los Angeles, up the celebrated San Joaquin Valley. The cars will be suspended on cables and operated by electricity. They will run at the rate of a hundred miles an hour. No grading will be necessary for the construction of this road, no ties, and no rails, no bridges and no fencing in of track; no section gang will be required in its maintenance.

It will, so its projector thinks, be the first road in America to be absolutely free from smash ups. The cars can't collide head on, because the road is a double track, and they can't be telescoped, because, by a simple little mechanism, if one train comes too close to another the electricity is shut off. No obstructions or blockades can interfere with its running. The cars cannot jump the track. The wear and tear on its mechanism and rolling stock is comparatively slight. It costs from one-third to two-thirds less to construct and maintain than any other kind of railroad. It almost solves the question of the right of way. The road may be quickly constructed and will be sightly when finished. Here is Mr. Thomas' idea of the way that the road will look when it is finished.

INVENTED BY A BLIND MAN.

This new railroad is not the invention of the capitalist, but of his blind brother. "He planned it all out in his darkness," says Mr. Thomas, "and you will see, one of these days, that it is such a perfectly feasible and admirable plan that it will one day supersede the surface roads, both in the city and in the country.

"The cheapness of construction and the high rate of speed attained by such a railway are, of course, its main advantages. As far as speed is concerned, it is now only a question of atmospheric resistance. And this natural factor can be largely overcome by constructing the cars either cone shaped or with pointed ends like the prow of a boat. But that, of course, is an after consideration and no such device will be needed to attain a speed, say one hundred miles an hour. And such a rate can be maintained easily and with entire comfort and safety to the passengers in this mid-air railway. There can be no obstructions on the track, for there is no track, and no snows or washouts can retard the trains. There is no dirt and dust or smoke and soot to make traveling a hardship, no jarring and rumbling and ear splitting noises to make one deaf."

Concerning the motive power, Mr. Thomas believes that we shall eventually find a force superior to electricity. That is compressed air, the possibilities of which, Mr. Thomas declares, are as yet but little known.

"My plan," says Mr. Thomas, "would be to build compressed air tanks along the road in the country where trains could stop for a moment or two and recuperate the motive supply. I am satisfied that in the end compressed air would be cheaper and more satisfactory than electricity."

The road will be elevated from ten to twenty feet above the ground, according to the requirements of the grade, and whether the road be passing through the country or the city. The cars will be considerably smaller and lighter than the present railway cars now in use. They will be lighted by electricity and heated in this way, also, and, for that matter, could easily have telegraphic communication all the time with the outside world.

A TACOMA IDEA.

The California idea does not vary in its essential particulars from two rapid transit systems which were exhibited at the World's Fair. One of these, known as the Cook system, proposed to have cars suspended from a single track, placed at the top of a series of poles. The idea was that the cars were to be somewhat in the shape of a present railway car cut lengthwise in twain. One set would move in one direction on one side of the pole, and the other set on the other side in the opposite direction. This was an invention of L. D. Cook, of Tacoma, Wash., who constructed a trial track on the outskirts of Tacoma and claimed to have run his cars successfully at the rate of a hundred miles an hour.

The only difference between the Cook system and the Thomas plan is that the latter would suspend the cars from a series of cables instead of from an iron track. Electricians believe that some such elevated or suspended railway operated by electricity will soon supplant our present surface roads. They believe the day is not far distant when it will be possible to make the trip from Boston to New York, or from New York to Washington, in less than two hours, from New York to Chicago in less than nine hours, and clear across the continent in a single twenty-four hour day. The most wonderful part of all this is that they insist that these electrical railroads can be built so as to run trains at one hundred to one hundred and fifty miles an hour, with far greater safety, comfort, ease, and far less expense than the steam roads, which now make not much over fifty miles an hour. They hold out the prospect that so cheap will railroad traveling become when these suspensory roads are constructed and in operation, that one will be able to travel from New York to Chicago for a matter of $5 or $6, and clear across the continent for, perhaps, not more than $25.

Poultry Viewed as a Business.

The poultry industry is still in it infancy. Thousands of dollars worth of eggs and fowl are imported each year when every bit of it ought to be raised at home. Farmers have been so absorbed in raising wheat and corn, that little attention was given to domestic fowls. The present dull times does not seriously affect the poulterer. The chicken business is moving steadily along paying handsomely. There is little danger of over-production for the supply is so far behind the actual demand that it will be a long time before the want is satisfied. I know of no better way of steadily adding to the family income than to carefully look after farm poultry. Eggs can always be sold at prices which correspond to the cost of feed. On most farms, however, the feed is a small item, thus increasing the profits.

But market poultry is not the only source of gain. Much interest is being taken in pure bred stock. The poultry fancier of to-day has as promising a field as any live stock breeder, in fact, I think it is more inviting. Eggs during the hatching season are high priced. Later they can be sent to the general market. Calls for young stock continue all through the season. There is plenty of room for wide-awake breeders, and the interest at present is probably greater than usual. There is money in fowls.

Antitoxin of Lockjaw.

Tetanus antitoxin is the latest of the new remedies. An English society has a horse immunized against tetanus, or lockjaw, and are supplying the serum in moderate quantities for experimental purposes.

A NOVEL FIRE NOZZLE.

Its Main Feature is a Paradox to Hydraulic Engineers.

A new nozzle for fire hose, which the inventors claim will so spread a stream of water that it will be twice as effective as a solid stream, was exhibited at No. 837 Broadway the other day to a thousand persons, among them being many Fire Department officials from this and neighboring cities. The invention is known as the ball nozzle, and is based on a discovery made by Vice President Pollock, of the Ball Nozzle Company, says The New York Sun. It is a remarkable contrivance, and the officers of the company say that they have submitted it to men of science, but have never obtained any explanation of the way in which the ball in the nozzle acts.

Briefly, the nozzle is almost exactly the same in construction as the ordinary one now in use in our fire department. The only difference is that the end is shaped like a bell and in this bell is placed a ball of solid, polished rubber. The ball is loose and there is nothing to hold it in position except a loop of brass over the front of the bell to prevent it from rolling out when the hose is not in use. When the stream is on full force the guard is unnecessary, although one would imagine that the force of water would drive the ball out of the bell like a shot from a cannon. On the contrary, however, it holds it in and the more pressure turned on the more secure is the ball in the bell. The ball does not stick tightly against the outlet, but is held at a distance from it of about a quarter of an inch. The flow is not in any way retarted by the presence of the ball, but the stream is spread to a remarkable extent and therein lies the efficacy of the nozze, says the inventor. A second nozzle for a solid stream is attached to the hose, so that the man who is manipulating it can have either sort of a stream.

Several weeks ago the company resolved to hold the exhibition which was given recently, and they rented the entire ground floor, covering a full acre, of the new Roosevelt building, at Broadway and Thirteenth street. They fitted the place up in sumptuous fashion, and it was crowded with firemen, insurance men, business men, property owners and others interested in an improved fire extinguisher. One-half of the floor has been transformed into a miniature village, with lawns and other accompaniments, while a huge section has been given over to a fountain, with the ball nozzle attachment, for the idea is to use the invention as a lawn sprinkler and fountain attachment, as well as for a fire extinguisher.

THE NEW NOZZLES.

The exhibition with the fire hose was given in a huge glass case in the center of the room, and despite the fact that the pressure of water was rather weak, it was a success. The flow of water didn't seem to be in the least retarded by the pressure of the ball, which spread it at an angle of about fifty-five degrees. The greatest surprise was manifested by the firemen over the way in which the ball remained in the bell. Even when the stream was turned on full force the ball did not come nearer than a quarter of an inch of the brass guard. It kept revolving rapidly, which mystified the firemen the more, and dumfounded a number of hydraulic engineers who were present and who made a careful examination of the contrivance.

A better opportunity of studying the principle of the thing was given to the visitors by means of a number of little tubes which lined the walls of the room. The tubes projected some inches from the wall and a tremendous force of wind was kept circulating through them. A piece of paper put within an inch of the tube would be blown half across the room by the force of the wind; yet if placed flat against the tube it would remain there as snugly as though there was not a perfect gale of wind blowing against it. The same result was obtained from the use of a small ball. The ball if placed against the hole remained there as though there was suction instead of an outpour of wind, yet if placed within half an inch the wind blew it across the room.

The inventor of the ball nozzle says that he can offer no explanation for the action of the ball. He has made a careful study of it and at his request a number of scientific men have investigated the matter, but all have agreed he says that it is opposed to the laws of nature, and that there is no explanation for such a thing known to science. It is probable that the ball nozzle will be adopted in Philadelphia.

SAP BOILING BY STEAM.

All Possibility of Burning Is Thereby Avoided.

An evaporator similiar in principle and working to the patent evaporators now in use, though quite different in detail, has been constructed. It is made entirely of wood—pine in this instance, though some other kind of wood might answer equally well—is firmly bolted together and made, of course, water-tight. Its inside dimensions are 8 feet in length, 2½ feet in width, and 10 or 12 inches in depth. It is divided into three compartments, one of which is nearly as wide as the other two, which are of equal width. Sixteen one inch galvanized iron pipes, aggregating 128 feet in one continuous pipe, are used—eight of these lying at the bottom of the wide compartment, into which the sap is introduced in a continuous stream, and four in each of the narrow compartments. Fifteen gallons of sap are all that is needed at a time in the evaporator, or half an inch in depth, thus only half covering the pipes.

With thirty or forty pounds pressure of steam admitted to the pipes, evaporation at once commences, and the compartments are filled with foam varying in depth from five to ten inches. This will explain why the partitions must need be so high. Evaporation must, of course, proceed very rapidly under such favorable circumstances. With sap of average quality four gallons of syrup per hour can be turned out, or four barrels of sap boiled away in the same time, and this with about two-thirds of the fuel needed to do the same work with the ordinary evaporator.

The quality of syrup made by this process is unqualifiedly first-class. In fact, it cannot well be otherwise, since there is no possibility of burning it, there being no fire within twenty feet of the sap.—Rutland Herald.

ON TO THE SOUTH POLE

COOK, THE EXPLORER TO LEAD THE EXPEDITION.

A Start to be Made in September Next—How Little is Known of the Lands and Waters Within the Circle.

"I believe that I shall be able to start about Sept. 15. If I cannot secure the necessary funds for a steamer, I shall take a good sailing schooner with a small consort."

That is a part of a recent letter from Dr. Frederick A. Cook, surgeon of the first Peary Arctic expedition, to Mr. Albert White Vorse, of Boston, member of the Peary relief expedition and a good friend to Dr. Cook. Mr. Vorse, who corresponds regularly with Dr. Cook, was the first man selected for the Antarctic expedition. He is thoroughly up in the history of polar explorations. To understand clearly the meaning and importance of Dr. Cook's expedition, it is necessary to know a little Antarctic history. There has been hardly any interest in voyaging to the South Pole, because the quest for the "great Northwest passage" has constantly held navigators' attention; and because nearly all the sea-faring nations are in the North. The first Antarctic voyage was made by Peru, in 1567, with small profit. In 1675, an island, then supposed to be the Antarctic Continent, was discovered and named by Kerguelen—a Frenchman—in about the seventieth meridian. The first man to cross the Antarctic Circle was the great Captain Cook, who also circumnavigated the pole—north of the circle—in 1773. Captain James Weddell, in 1823, sailed as far south as 74 deg. 15 min., in west longtitude 34 deg. 17 min.; he reported that he saw a sea clear of ice, few icebergs, and no field ice. This expedition was very important, and might have gone very far south if provisions hadn't given out. In 1831 Biscoe discovered the west coast of Graham Land. Then came a time when Antarctic knowledge was greatly augmented by Wilkes, D'Urville and Ross. Wilkes, in 1836 or '37, with four sailing vessels—among them the famous Vincennes and Porpoise—skirted along an enormous amount of territory between 100 deg. and 160 deg. west longitude. This was a United States government expedition, and the land was named Wilkes Land. The renowned Ross then went scuth and came back to report that he had sailed all over Wilkes' "land!" He put little faith in Wilkes' story. Ross made the most important explorations; he was there for three successive summers and made the farthest south—78 deg., the record to-day. He named two active volcanic mountains from his ships, "Erebus" and "Terror." In the summer of 1892, a merchants' expedition went south from Dundee, Scotland, to look for whale—Ross had reported that he saw the Greenland right whale down there. The Dundee people did not see any right whales, and went home with a ship full of seals. In the same year, a Norwegian expedition under Captain Lavsen sailed along the west and east coasts of Graham Land and

than anybody had supposed. Now, that is all the history there is about the great Antarctic. And, for us to-day, a remarkable fact is that nobody has ever been down there during Antarctic winter. Observations have been very incomplete, we know scarcely anything about all the lands and waters on and within the circle. That lack of South Pole knowledge has awakened explorers during the past year or two; they seem to believe that the unknown Antarctic, "terra Australis incognita," is destined to be the coming field for arctic glory. Voyaging to the North is getting to be commonplace, Sir John Murray president of the Royal Scottish Geographical Society urged a Southern expedition in an address delivered in 1893. Interest is growing in London. Men over there seem to be far more public-spirited and unselfish than men in this country, that is as to exploration ideas. Leigh Smith, for instance who possesses a private fortune, fits out and pays for polar expeditions. In America Antarctic exploration got its most recent and serious attention so; Dr. Cook and Astrup, Peary's sole companions in the ice-cap, discussed, the South Pole question when they were returning from the north with Lieutenant Peary in the "Kite."

A SEARCH FOR THE SOUTH POLE.

Dr. Frederick A. Cook, Leader of the Expedition.

"To keep off seasickness," Mr. Vorse said, "we talked over the feasibility and importance of an Antarctic expedition; and not long after we had arrived home, Dr, Cook determined to organize one. That was before Sir John Murray gave his address. Dr. Cook then began to lecture to raise funds; and again to get funds in the summer of '94 he went north in the Miranda—a voyage disastrous through no fault of his. This year he has pluckily made up his mind to go south.

"Now, as to Dr. Cook's plans," Mr. Vorse went on, "he will take a steamer, if he can raise enough funds. With a steamer he can move about more safely and quickly, and accomplish more than with a sailing vessel. But a sailing vessel is not a hopeless thing for a level-headed man to go in, popular ideas to the contrary. Dr. Cook's original purpose was to touch at South American ports for certain kinds of provisions; for instance, he will get pemmican, indispensable, at Buenos Ayres. He will coal up at the Falkland Islands, then sail direct to Graham Land in the course laid by Weddell. He will go south, where Weddell found open water, then land and build camp on some protected beach. Life in Arctic regions in winter is safe on shore only; your ship is liable to be blown away. In the Antarctic there are tempests in which icebergs as large as the Boston State House are thrown up on shore fifty feet."

It might be well to state here that the objects of Dr. Cook's expedition are: (a) to obtain data for the stagnant science of magnetism; (b) to determine gravity measurements; (c) to explore geological formations—there used to be a temperate climate in the Antarctic; (d) to study air currents, and so on. There will be dredging of the sea, collecting of fossils, and thermometer taking.

Albert White Vorse, Assistant to Dr. Cook.

"As for Dr. Cook, as I know him," Mr. Vorse continued, "he is a worthy leader—sagacious and cool-headed. He understands thoroughly the preparation of an expedition. He is careful—remember his record with Peary—capable of standing long strains without becoming discouraged and he is fearless. When he reaches the Antarctic he will find a lower temperature than that of the south, bringing snow and fog, warm winds from the north, bringing clear weather; no such pressure of field ice as in the Arctic; larger icebergs, not cut up into chunks and pinnacles, but rectilinear. Murdock of the Dundee whaling expedition says that he saw an iceberg down there thirty miles long. The largest berg I ever saw was in Melville bay, West Greenland—about one and one-quarter mile long. The land Dr. Cook will find will be probably mostly snow-covered. The peaks will be higher than those in the North; otherwise the land will slope more gradually. He will find no vegetation beyond the seventieth parallel. The animals will be amphibious—four kinds of seals, the sea leopard, fourteen feet long-whales; walrus have been seen there. Birds will be plentiful—the albatross, not found in the North, the king penguin, three feet high, and enormously strong, and gulls. And now for the outfit of the expedition. It will be somewhat different from a Northern outfit; he cannot depend upon living in the country; in the North, you know, there are reindeer. He will take many scientific instruments and duplicates of them. He will have sledges, probably of the McClintock pattern—or he may have them made down there by the members of his party to keep their minds and hands busy during the winter months. If he can, he will get Eskimo dogs in Labrador or Greenland to draw the sledges; these dogs can pull more on less food than any other animal. For drink, they eat snow, and they sleep in it. He will have also many knives and Winchester rifles, and shot guns. The necessities of the expedition will be food, clothing, shelter and heat. The food in camp will consist chiefly of canned foods, and the members of the party should fare well, other things being equal. But the food on sledge journeys must be pemmican. Pemmican is and economy of weight is a big factor on a sledge journey. Pemmican is dry and of small bulk; the rations of it, for man and dog, are one pound a day. It is composed of raw dried beef, cut very fine and pressed into moulds containing melted tallow; it is cut into squares weighing half a pound. There is chocolate pemmican and pemmican with raisins in it. Another necessity is cranberry sauce—for the acid. Canned goods are useless on a sledge journey; they will freeze, and fuel is too expensive to thaw them out. Dr. Cook tells an amusing story of spending an hour and a half, up north, thawing out a can of salmon. Alcohol is the only fuel on a sledge journey. Each man will have his own lamp on which to melt snow.

"As to clothing, the best is of reindeer skin with underwear of eider duck—made in Eskimo fashion, that is a coat, hooded, reaching just to the tops of the trousers and with loose sleeves; knee breeches, tight at the waist and loose at the knee. reindeer stockings, with the long, thick hair turned in; shirts of eider duck, with the downy feathers turned in. This matter of clothing is very important; there must be good ventilation; the Nares Artic expedition of '75 had scurvy—by the way, a mental, as well as physical disease—partly because Nares didn't know how to use clothing properly.

"On every birthday there will be a celebration and a feast; there will be a special Xmas dinner and all holidays will be observed in style. Scientic observations will, of course, be taken as frequently as possible during the winter. Preparations will be in order, too, for the sledge journey in the spring. On the day on which the sun comes back, the men will all run up the nearest mountain or hill and drink the sun's health. And they will be looking into one another's faces after the long, long night; and they will see them pale and thin and yellow. Then in September, Antarctic spring, Dr. Cook will go off in his sledge and make

A DASH FOR THE FARTHEST SOUTH.

Nothing is more monotonous, nothing requires more perseverance and endurance and genuine sand than the sledge journey. The men will sleep on the snow in bags of reindeer skin; and, to avoid the terrible snow blindness, they will wear smoked glasses with bows encased in chamois skin; if the steel bows were bare against the temple they would nip the skin right off. The men will plod on and on in quest of glory, guided only by compass and sextant. On the return to camp, the ship, which left in the autumn for the Falkland Islands, will have returned to pick up the whole party and bring them home to New York."

In a few months, if all goes well, Dr. Cook and his noble hands will be far and away South in the other "land of the midnight sun"—2,000 miles from the nearest human soul. There a man may leave his coat and watch anywhere with no fear of having them stolen; in that country there will be no burglars, no snakes, no cat-calls to disturb their slumbers, and no bacteria or politics to worry and pollute them. For four months they will live indoors and eat and sleep and eat, and not care for what the morrow may bring forth. And after a year, they should return home in glory.

SUSPICIOUS BUSINESS.

HOW PATRON NOMINATIONS ARE MANIPULATED.

A Deal Between the Patron and Grit Leaders—Ample Evidence of the Fact—Patrons Nominated Against Conservative Candidates, but Not Against Liberals—Several Notable Instances.

To the Editor of The Mail and Empire:

SIR,—I have been watching the course pursued by the Patrons of Industry in their nomination of candidates. I have been informed that the Patron institution is independent of both political parties, and I must say that what I see upon the surface is to me very far from convincing me of the truth of that statement.

I wish to point out some facts that I have been gathering as the nomination of candidates proceeds. These facts are evidence, it seems to me, very clearly of a sort of deal being made between the Grit leaders and Patron leaders. Now as I am resident in Eastern Ontario I wish to call your attention to this end of the province particularly.

RUSSELL.

Begin, please, with Russell county. This is a riding represented by a Grit in the House of Commons, Mr. W. C. Edwards. In this county, evidently because a Patron candidate might disturb the safety of the Grit candidate, there is no Patron candidate put in the field.

CARLETON.

Alongside of Russell county is the County of Carleton. In this county the representative is Mr. Hodgins, a Conservative, and a Patron of Industry is being run. Now why is this, since no candidate is being run in the neighboring county represented by a Reformer?

GLENGARRY.

In this county the present representative is a Conservative, Mr. R. R. McLennan, and so a Patron candidate is being run, a party named J. L. Wilson, a Grand Patron trustee, being the Patron of Industry candidate.

ADDINGTON.

Not far off is the County of Addington. It is a county at present held by the Grits, its member being Dr. Dawson, who, I hear, is even an Ontario Government official. There is no Patron candidate here. Why the Grand Board of the Patrons have not pushed a candidate in here seems very queer. Perhaps, however, it was thought it might hurt the chances of Mr. Dawson, Grit M.P.

SOUTH LANARK.

South Lanark is represented by a Minister, the Hon. John Haggart, a very able man, and an honor to his constituency and the country. Against him a Patron has been brought out.

WEST ONTARIO.

In this riding the Grit candidate is that run-and-get-beaten-everywhere Grit political back, J. D. Edgar, M P. But the independent Patron organization has put no one in the field against him. Evidently they feared that he might be too easily beaten. Why this different treatment of South Lanark and West Ontario? Do the Conservative Patrons of Industry think their leaders are serving the true interests and aims of the order in trying to defeat a man of the ability of Hon. John Haggart, whose excellent management of the Government railway has saved a great deal of money to the country, and at the same time to refuse to disturb such a political self-seeker as J. D. Edgar?

PONTIAC.

In this riding, which is in the Province of Quebec, the Patrons of Industry offered their nomination, I hear, to the Grit candidate, Mr. Gillies. The riding is, of course, at present represented by a Conservative. Mr. Gillies never pretended to be an Independent. How comes this? In this county it was the general idea that the platform of the organization would be first presented to Mr. Bryson, the Conservative member for the county. But before the Conservative Patrons got to the meeting, and before the hour advertised for the meeting, the resolution was passed to offer it to Mr. Gillies, the Grit candidate. Strange conduct this for "independent" men—not having any party feeling!

A LOT OF COUNTIES.

Prince Edward, North Lanark, North Leeds, Dundas, Stormont, Frontenac, East Hastings, and North Hastings are all ridings represented by Conservatives. Of course, in all these Patron candidates are being run. There seems to be no doubt, it appears to me, of what this points to, especially when candidates are not being run in such Grit counties as Russell, West Ontario, etc.

In all these ridings I have just mentioned, if the Patrons have any effect it can only be to injure Conservatives and help the Grit party.

LENNOX.

In the County of Lennox the Grits and Patrons have combined. The Grit candidate retired because he said the object of the Grits and Patrons was one, viz., to defeat the Government. And, pray, if this should be accomplished, what then? Why a Grit Government, of course. Of course, Lennox is now represented by a Conservative.

GRENVILLE.

In this riding there was a Patron of Industry candidate in the field against Dr. Reid, M.P. (Conservative). But he has got out of the way. And so pleasantly that he attended the meeting which nominated the Grit candidate. He was surely a model independent, no-party candidate.

NORTH YORK.

This riding is represented by a Toronto lawyer named Wm. Mulock, a Grit. There is no Patron of Industry candidate against him.

WEST YORK.

This riding is represented by a resident of the riding, a successful home business man, and a member of the Government, the Hon. N. C. Wallace. Therefore, it was thought better to bring out a Patron candidate against him. Why this difference in treatment? Why not put up a Patron candidate against both Mr. Wallace and Mr. Mulock, if against either?

EAST YORK.

This riding is represented by a Conservative, Mr. McLean, and an attempt is being made, I notice, to get out a Patron candidate.

PEEL.

An adjoining county to the Yorks is Peel. It is represented by a Grit, and therefore there seems to be no anxiety to get a Patron candidate in the field.

PRESCOTT.

In Prescott county the Patron nomination has been offered to, and, I understand, accepted by, a Montreal lawyer, who for years was a political roustabout for the Grit party. He will make a capital Independent.

Now, I wish to say to Conservative Patrons that it looks to me as though a game was being put up on them. I shall show this still further in other letters.

In the meantime, I would like to see communications upon the subject from all parts of the province.

The Grits are openly boasting that they have joined hands with the Patron leaders. No Conservative Patron will join hands with Cartwright and Charlton and Mulock, unless he is being lied to and misled. Let the light in on the matter from every part. I feel certain that Conservative Patrons cannot be misled by tricksters.

Yours, etc.,

SONGS WE ALL KNOW.

"Tenting on the Old Camp Ground" was written by Walter Kittredge, a New Hampshire man, who was drafted in 1862, and while preparing to go to the front wrote the words and music. It attained immense popularity almost instantly.

"Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep" was an inspiration which came to Mrs. Emma Willard, a New York teacher, during her return voyage from Europe. The music was composed by Joseph Philip Knight, the teacher of music in her academy.

"The Last Rose of Summer," one of Patti's favorite songs, was the work of Thomas Moore. The melody is a very ancient Irish tune, formerly known as "The Groves of Blarney." This tune has been found in collections of Irish music at least 200 years old.

"The Blue Bells of Scotland" was the work of Annie McVicar, afterwards Mrs. Grant, the daughter of a Scottish officer in the British army. The melody was long believed to be Scottish, but is now known to be of English origin, being an old English folk song.

"Kathleen Mavourneen" was written by Mrs. Crawford, an Irish lady, whose songs 90 years ago were in high repute. The music was by Crouch, an eccentric genius, who in his old age and poverty begged his way into a concert given by Titiens, that he might hear his own composition fitly sung.

"Old Dog Tray" was in its time one of Foster's most popular songs, 120,000 copies being sold in 18 months. It was written in the back room of a combined grocery and grog shop in New York, to a firm of publishers that made a fortune from its sale.

"Old Folks at Home," equally well-known as "The Suwanee River," was the most popular song ever known in America. Over 400,000 copies were sold during the first five years after its appearance. E. P. Christy, of the original Christy's minstrels, paid $400 for the privilege of having his name printed on the title page of one edition as the author and composer.

"Auld Lang Syne" is of uncertain origin, there being several versions of this deservedly popular song. One of the best is by Barnes, but only the second and third stanzas are by this poet, the remainder being from the pen of Ramsey. The song is of uncertain antiquity; one version is dated 1716, another is said to date from the sixteenth century.

"Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground" was considered by Stephen Foster to be the best of all his compositions. He got the idea from a slave of Covington, Ky., whom he heard bewailing the fact that his good old master was dead and that he and several other slaves who had become old and worn out would now pass into the hands of less kindly masters.

"Home, Sweet Home," Payne's song, was originally a number in the opera "Clari, the Maid of Milan," a production brought out in 1823. The opera was a failure, and nothing is now known of it save the one song, which became instantly popular. Over 100,000 copies were sold in the first year of its publication, and the sale in one form or another has been constant ever since the first appearance of this beautiful theme. The melody is a Sicilian folk-song and was adapted to the words by Payne himself.

"The Old Oaken Bucket" was written by Woodworth, a printer of New York, and of almost every other American city. Not far from the printing office where he was employed there was a dram shop which he frequented, and one hot summer afternoon he strolled in there and called for brandy. It was poured out, and as he held up the glass he remarked to a brother printer, "There's nothing like that." "Yes, there is," responded the other. "A drink of cool well water fom the old oaken bucket that hangs in my father's well." Woodworth went back to the printing office, sat down at a desk and began to write, and in the course of the afternoon finished the song. The music is by Kiallmark, and the melody is that written for "Araby's Daughter."

TYPEWRITER RIBBONS.

Their Manufacture Is an Industry of No Mean Proportions.

The manufacture of ribbons for typewriting machines is an industry which gives employment to a large number of people. In nearly all the first-class type-writers these inked ribbons are used. There are at least forty different styles of American typewriters, and more than 400,000 machines in actual use. As the average life of a ribbon is from four to six weeks, the number of concerns which seek to supply the market with this article is surprising.
